Armed Service Vets may receive credit

Veterans who attend UMass as regular undergraduate students may, in most cases, receive academic credit for their service experience.

Veterans who are applying for credit must submit a legible copy of their DD214 separation paper with their student number written on the top.

Students who have other than a dishonorable active military service of six months to one full year, including the basic or recruit training, may be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman level (two "military science" credits). Military service over one year will be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman and sophomore levels (four "military science" credits).

A veteran who has been commissioned as an officer by completion of a program such as OCS is eligible for eight "advanced military science" credits. In addition, credit may be given to veterans who have attended certain military schools while in the service.

Credit may also be given for on the job training received in the service. However, the veteran must request the related academic department to examine-evaluate his knowledge or skills in that area.

Any veteran who wants to have his forms checked for possible academic credit should bring them to Margo McMahon, Rm. 211 Whitmore. Her hours for this semester are:

— Monday — 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.
— Tuesday — 1 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.
— Wednesday — 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Carter campaigns in Alabama while Ford stays at home

[AP] — While President Ford presided over two Rose Garden bill-signing ceremonies Monday, Democrat Jimmy Carter told a campaign audience that Ford has done nothing in the White House to show he has the ability to lead the nation.

Sticking to his style of showcasing himself as a chief executive rather than hitting the campaign trail, Ford signed bills requiring government agencies to conduct their business in public and to protect livestock producers against bankrupt packers.

Carter, meanwhile, campaigned in Alabama with Gov. George C. Wallace, at his side, trying to persuade Southern voters that he shares many of their conservative views.

"Democrats have always believed in what we in the South believe..." Carter told a group of small businessmen in Birmingham. "We believe in work and not welfare... I believe the Southern people and the American people believe in balanced budgets... a strong, able, tough, muscular, well-organized, fighting force."

Carter is placing increased emphasis on conservative themes out of acknowledged concern that voters might see him as more liberal than he says he really is, and to rebut Republican assertions to that effect.

A poll published Sunday by the Darden Research Corp. in Atlanta said that while the Georgian leads Ford by a wide margin in the deep South, there are signs that his support is eroding in that area of strong and traditional conservative attitudes.

The Democratic presidential nominee told listeners at a Birmingham shopping center that the Republicans are the party of special interests, the Democrats the party of the people.

"I can't recall a single thing that our incumbent President has done in a two-year period to indicate a capacity for leadership," Carter said.

But Ford was capitalizing on one of Carter's pet campaign planks when he signed a "sunshine" bill requiring about 50 federal boards to conduct most business in the public.

"I strongly endorse the concept which underlies this legislation," Ford said, "that most of the decision-making business of regulatory agencies can and should be open to the public.

"The public has a right to know about the decision-making business of the agencies," Ford said. "I am delighted to sign this legislation and let the sun shine in."

The President generated other important news Monday by instructing U.S. Ambassador William Scranton to veto Vietnam's application for membership in the United Nations.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, September 14 — Born today, you are highly sensitive emotionally. There is nothing about you of the self-important egotist, but at the same time, you are filled with the kind of self-confidence and self-assurance that is never at odds with success. You are one of those rare individuals who can create order out of chaos simply by bearing in mind that the whole is more than the sum of its parts and working accordingly. Design and organization: these are the key-words to describe your success, regardless of what you undertake or what the degree of that success may be. The direct and firm application of determination to any given method of operation makes the difference, to your own way of thinking, between what is good, what is better, and what is best.

You have deep sympathy for your fellow man and make every effort to understand whatever problems he may have. On the other hand, you are not one who allows himself to be taken advantage of. Even those in the most dire of circumstances must make an effort to extricate themselves from their unpleasant situations, for only when they have failed to achieve their own salvation will you step in to help them attain that goal.

You are one of those attractive personalities who radiates good health. Because of this, there may be times when you come close to ignoring the signs of ill health.

Wednesday September 15

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Self-willed success proves deceptive today. Be sure you know precisely what it is you're after before giving anything up for it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Investigate completely your own chances for gain before agreeing to becoming part of a new endeavor. New direction may be needed.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Pay particular attention to the source of your information today. You may wish to double-check and item or two before acting on them.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — An awkward situation early in the day may well bring to the fore your ability for finessing the "enemy's" trumps. Guard your hand.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your ability to draw toward you those who can offer you considerable aid, whether or not they understand your problems, is exercised now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A tendency to suffer from feelings of rejection may cause you to blame another for desertions that exist only in your mind.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If your will is sufficiently trained, you should be able to force circumstances to your liking today. Make an effort to please.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A good deal of interest is generated this morning by the very young. Don't be so certain of your position that you place it in jeopardy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Carefully laid plans are the way to the day's success. If you rely on chance, your expectations for gain must be considerably lowered.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Excitement on the home front may cause you to pay less attention than you should to affairs on the employment scene. Guard against accident.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take yourself and your work seriously today; otherwise, you may quit before you have accomplished all that you might.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A determined effort does not guarantee success. It does, however, gain you a reputation for being a hard worker. Court a friend's friend.

Hill lost to Lions

PONTIAC, Mich. [UPI] — Wide receiver J. D. Hill, for whom the Detroit Lions gave the Buffalo Bills a first-round choice this summer, is scheduled to undergo knee surgery Tuesday to correct ligament damage suffered in Sunday's 10-3 loss to the Chicago Bears.

The operation was scheduled to be performed in Buffalo by Bills' team physician Dr. Joseph Godfrey, who will determine after the surgery how long Hill will be out.

The injury means all Detroit has to show to date for its trade with Buffalo is the two-yard pass Hill caught Sunday. He suffered the knee injury on the next pattern he ran.

Hill was used sparingly during the exhibition season and caught no passes but was named to start against Chicago.

Jaworski breaks shoulder; Ram QB out for six weeks

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Ron Jaworski, the starting quarterback for the Los Angeles Rams in their season opener against Atlanta Sunday, will be lost to the team for about six weeks because of a broken shoulder suffered in the game, the team physician announced Monday.

Dr. Robert Kerlan said x-rays conducted Monday morning revealed the broken shoulder. Jaworski will be placed in a "shoulder immobilizer" and will be out of action for about six weeks, he said.

He suffered the injury while scoring a touchdown on a one-yard sneak against the Falcons in the second half of Sunday's game. Third stringer Pat Haden finished out the game and on his first pass threw a 47-yard touchdown.

James Harris, the first string quarterback through most the exhibition season, is still mending from a broken right thumb he suffered against Buffalo in the preseason. He started to throw on the sidelines a little during the Atlanta game, but Coach Chuck Knox said it was not yet known whether he would be able to play in next Sunday's nationally-televised game at Minnesota.

Archibald brings franchise east as Nets gain guard

KANSAS CITY, Mo. [UPI] — Kansas City still has its National Basketball Association team but "the franchise" has gone to New York City.

Bowing to the requests of guard Nate "Tiny" Archibald, the man fans have named "the franchise," the Kansas City Kings last week traded Archibald to the New York Nets. The move was overdue.

During the first couple of years the Kings were in Kansas City — they moved from Cincinnati in 1972 — Archibald was the main reason people came to see them play.

Two years ago, Kansas City fans got their first taste of a winning season. Then the Kings went into a miserable nosedive last year — finishing with basketball's third worst record — and the only fans who showed up were those stuck with season tickets.

The drawing power of the 6-1 guard from Texas El Paso had vanished. People still enjoyed watching him drive the length of the court, make a dipsy doodle move with the ball and either score or pick up an assist but they weren't willing to pay $8.00 to watch the Kings lose.

Archibald, highest paid player in basketball with a $400,000 a year contract that has four years left on it, is awesome on offense. Having led the NBA in both scoring and assists in 1972-73, Archibald has a six-year career scoring average of 25.1 points.

But Archibald didn't really fit into the plans of Kings coach Phil Johnson and box office attraction or not, Johnson has to have everything going his way at the start of the upcoming season. He has been given only a one-year contract by the Kings and it is understood he has to have early success to even last through that year.

Johnson comes from the Dick Motta coaching school. He was an assistant to Motta at Weber (Utah) State and again with the Chicago Bulls before taking the Kansas City job. He likes to play aggressive defensive basketball and neither Archibald nor Jimmy Walker, who teamed with Archibald in the Kings' backcourt but was released Aug. 31, could fit into Johnson's plans.

Brian Taylor, whom the Kings obtained along with backup center Jim Eakins and two first-round draft choices for Archibald, will be like a present from heaven to Johnson. Not only can he score when he has to — he averaged 14 points a game in four seasons with the ABA Nets — but he is one of the finest defensive guards in the game.

Everyone knows of Net forward Julius Erving but just as important as Erving in the Nets' winning last year's American Basketball Association title was Taylor. He combined with John Williamson to physically dominate Denver guards in the playoffs, keeping Denver from consistenly getting the ball across midcourt.

And if there is any question about offensive punch, the Kings also have added guard Ron Boone through the ABA dispersal draft, a rugged backcourt player who has averaged more than 20 points each of the past two years.

The Archibald trade was a necessity from both sides.

Archibald consistently said he wanted to play in his home town — New York. The trade should benefit both teams. The Kings need some defensive help and the Nets, who have been having troubles drawing people despite winning the ABA crown, need an attendance draw along with Erving.

Kansas City fans can attest to Archibald's ability to fill the stands, at least for a year or two. But they also can attest to the ability of a winner to put people in an arena — at least the one in Kansas City.

Noll yells Swann plucked by Raiders

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — An infuriated Chuck Noll, head coach of the Pittsburgh Steelers, accused the Oakland Raiders' defensive secondary of trying to maim Lynn Swann and other Steeler wide receivers, adding there was apparently a "criminal element" within the National Football League.

Noll alleged there was a pattern of illegal hitting by members of the Oakland defensive secondary against Swann, in particular, that continued Sunday in the Raiders 31-28 victory over the defending Super Bowl champs.

Swann suffered a concussion when he was struck in the head from behind illegally, according to Noll. Swann is now a questionable starter for the Cleveland game next weekend.

He suffered a similar injury in the American Conference Title game against Oakland in January when his head was slammed into the frozen artificial turf at Three Rivers Stadium.

"I think people like that should be kicked out of football," Noll said, visibly angry over the incident. "You have a criminal element in every society and apparently we have in the National Football League. Maybe we have a law and order problem."

Noll said he would assemble a reel of film clips dating back "a couple years" that proved the unnecessary roughness he believes is consistently displayed against no other team and no other receiver.

"There is nothing wrong with good hard-hitting football," said Noll, adding that what the Raiders' secondary was doing was hitting Swann "with the intent to maim."

"You usually hit people straight on, nose-to-nose. But not when the play's over," Noll complained.

Noll said there was a league meeting which covered the issue of illegal hitting, adding, "I thought that it was taken care of."

To get results, he said he was going to assemble the Oakland game films and "go to the league office to see what we can accomplish."

Butkus settlement

CHICAGO, [UPI] — Dick Butkus, former star middle linebacker for the Chicago Bears, Monday accepted a $600,000 out of court settlement of his $1.6 million damage suit against the team.

The settlement was agreed upon hours before his suit against the Bears and team physician Theodore Fox was to go to trial in Circuit Court. The suit charged that Butkus was forced to play football from 1966 to 1973 with a knee injury which caused irreparable damage and ended his playing career.

He also sought damages for breach of contract, charging the Bears refused to honor the final four years of a five year contract after his last knee injury in November, 1973.

Pittsburgh's Dorsett gains UPI honors as week's top back

NEW YORK [UPI] — Tony Dorsett, the talented running back who led the University of Pittsburgh to a 31-10 romp past Notre Dame Saturday, heads United Press International's backfield of the week.

Dorsett, who set a record last year with a 303-yard effort against Notre Dame, churned out 181 yards Saturday, including a 61-yard burst that set up Pitt's first score.

Joining Dorsett in the backfield of the week are California quarterback Joe Roth, Ohio State tailback Jeff Logan and Missouri running back Curtis Brown.

Roth was outstanding in defeat as he completed 21-of-36 passes for a school record 379 yards. Roth had touchdown passes of 69 and 38 yards in a 36-24 loss to Georgia.

Logan, the junior who has replaced two-time Heisman trophy winner Archie Griffin in the Buckeye backfield, scored three touchdowns as Ohio State crushed Michigan State 49-21. Logan scored on runs of three and 75 yards and returned a punt 68 yards for another score as he gained 112 yards on only seven carries. He also had a 72-yard scoring run nullified by a penalty.

Brown had a 95-yard kickoff return for one TD, ran four yards for a second score and caught a 49-yard TD pass from Steve Pisarkiewicz to lead Missouri to a 46-25 triumph over Southern California.

"At times I wanted to quit and go home," said the 5-10, 182-pound Logan about his spending two years behind Griffin. "I've got to thank my parents and my faith in God. It was tough at times. It's the mental toughness. I think every freshman says to himself at one time or another 'what am I doing here?'

"I knew I was going to play behind Archie for two years. It was either play behind Arch or go to a second rate school. I made the decision. I decided to play for the best."

There were several outstanding performances by quarterbacks Saturday that earned honorable mention.

Derrick Ramsey threw for three TDs and ran for two others in leading Kentucky to a 38-13 victory over Oregon State and Ball State's Art Yaroch ran for three scores and passed for another in a 41-28 victory over Louisiana Tech. Nolan Cromwell scored twice, set up two other scores and rushed for 98 yards to lead Kansas past Washington State 35-16 and Minnesota's Tony Dungy ran for two scores and passed for two others in a 32-13 victory over Indiana.

Wayne Stanley threw for three TDs in little more than a half of play as Iowa State crushed Drake 58-14.

Two performances narrowly missed a No. 1 running back slot.

Delaware gambling starts slowly

DOVER, Del. [UPI] — Preliminary reports from Delaware's first pro football lottery show the state sold fewer tickets than it had hoped for, but the payoffs in Monday night's Miami-Buffalo game may be as high as $34 for a $1 wagered, it was announced Monday.

State lottery chief Peter Simmons said ticket sales for the controversial lottery, which is being challenged in court by the National Football League, totaled $62,280 for the first weekend of games. Simmons said he hopes that once more people get used to the game, ticket sales will average $200,000 every weekend.

In pool A of the "football bonus" game, which involves picking the winners of weekend games except the Monday night contest, Simmons said winners probably would get $6 for $1 wagered.

But of the 22,000 wagered on pool B, which includes the Monday night football game, Simmons said winners would get as high as $34 for a $1 bet depending on the outcome of the Monday night contest.

Simmons said 140 players bet on Buffalo while 2,060 players picked Miami to win the first Monday night game. Since the payoff is determined on a parimutual basis, a Buffalo win would return $34 while a Miami victory would return only $2.

Simmons said the winners of "football bonus" will be announced Tuesday morning while the results of "touchdown", the second phase of the football lottery in which players try to pick the point spreads, will be released later Tuesday or Wednesday.

Simmons said that despite the lower than expected sales for the first weekend, the state will still make money on the game.

"Of course we made money on this," he said. "This is the kind of game where operating costs are not too bad. It doesn't take much overhead to process $62,000 bets."

"The sales were considerably lower than anticipated," Simmons admitted. "However the indications I get from around the marketplace over the weekend is one of the things people are waiting for is to see what kind of payoffs this will be."

Simmons said most of the players the first week apparently played favorites, which will result in "lots of winners but small payouts."

The lottery director said that out of the $62,280 wagered, $42,160 was bet on the football bonus, attempting to pick only the winners.

Freshman Raftery enters UMass with high hopes

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

Dave Raftery is a 17 year old Freshman Liberal Arts student. He graduated with honors from Quincy High and is interested in a law career.

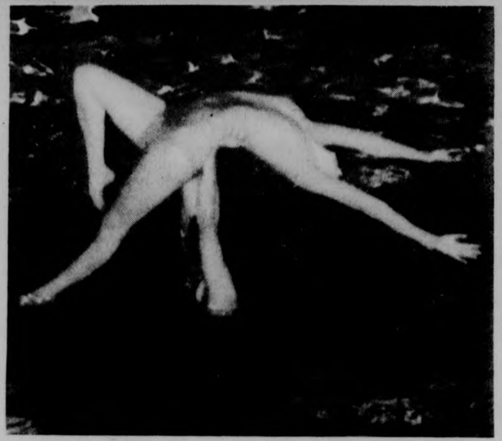
Raftery is also a talented athlete, fighting to come back from a serious injury. Two years ago, as the ace pitcher of the Quincy baseball team, Raftery's athletic future was highly promising. As a junior he had just completed a season in which his combined high school — legion record was 12 wins and 2 losses. Included in those 12 victories was a no-hit, 14 strikeout performance. Raftery was personally being coached by Bobby Brill, a former Triple A pitcher in the St. Louis Cardinals organization, a young man whose own career was tragically ended by Hodgkins disease.

As he entered his senior year Raftery had a tryout offer from the Cardinals and was negotiating a full baseball scholarship with Brandeis University. He was injured in a pre-season intersquad scrimmage, when a teammate senselessly barreled into him, tearing the ligaments and damaging the cartilage of Raftery's right knee.

The outstanding senior year which everyone had predicted for Dave turned into a nightmare. Dave spent six weeks in a leg brace and underwent months of grueling physical therapy to strengthen the damaged knee. Brandeis heard about his injury and as Dave says, "I just didn't hear from them anymore."

He says his knee is more flexible and stronger than it was a few months ago. He feels his fastball is about 95 per cent of what it was before the injury. Raftery's two best pitches are his fastball, which will rise or dip, and a knuckle ball he has worked on since Little League.

When asked about his future he said "Maybe its a good thing this happened to me. When I was in high school I thought I was pretty special and now I know what it's like to be taken down a couple of notches. I don't know if I'll ever play pro ball. All I want to do is make the UMass team."



Naiads open season

By LAURIE GREEN

The aquatic art club "Naiads" has been a part of the university for many years. Esther Wallace took over the club in 1954. It was originally formed as a syncronized swim group who perform in a syncronized fashion using stunts and floating patterns.

In 1965 aquatic art joined in with the syncronized program. Later in the '70's Pat Griffin took over and the club became solely aquatic art. The primary purpose of aquatic art is the communication of ideas, feelings, emotions or experiences. They attempt to do this primarily through aquatic movement.

This year Naiads continue to be a student run organization. They decided to bring back some straight syncronized swimming in order to strike the interest of a larger percentage of both swimmers and spectators. Both men and women are welcome to join our club. You simply have to know how to swim and show the ambition to learn.

Naiads wants to grow. Tryouts for this year's club will be taking place this week. They will be observing how well you swim and teaching a few stunts. Try to attend all three nights September 14, 15, 16 from 6-7 p.m. at the NOPE pool.

All eyes are on the elusive soccer ball as the Minutemen battle during a recent scrimmage. UMass defeated a team from Europe 2-1 in its latest scrimmage.

Judy Van Handle

The week that was?

Back in the mid 1960's, there was a weekly television show called "That was the Week That Was." The program dealt with news items and occurrences that took place during the week preceding the show.

Well, although college football just opened its season this past weekend, it wouldn't be surprising if the games that took place last Saturday go down as some of the greatest in recent memory for eastern colleges.

Yes, the reputations of midwest, southwest, and far west football collegiate teams have far outweighed those of eastern schools. You know, all of the great football conferences exist outside the eastern seaboard. Conferences such as the Big Ten, the Big Eight, the Southwest Conference, and the Pacific Eight all lie in that sector of the country. What does the east have, anyway? The Ivy League? The Yankee Conference? and, the topper of them all, The Little Three??? Come on, be serious, will you?

But on September 11, 1976, four eastern football teams came up with wins that have taken some of the smugness out of those western schools, and have forced them to take a good, hard look at the brand of football that's played here in the east.

Two of the wins could be considered legitimate upsets. The other two were somewhat expected, although one came on enemy soil. But wins they were, and that's all that really counts. Now, a quick look at the results that boosted the appeal of eastern collegiate football 100 per cent:

PENN STATE 15, STANFORD 12 — Probably the result everybody expected. But the Nittany Lions aren't of the Franco Harris-John Cappeletti-Jack Ham vintage anymore, and are coming out of (for them) an off season, so a win over a Pac-Eight school boosted their stock a little. Along with that, Stanford was rated a contender in its conference. Not an upset, but still a win for the east.

PITTSBURGH 31, NOTRE DAME 10 — Ah, now we're getting someplace. Although the Panthers beat the Fighting Irish last year, the game was played in Pennsylvania. Going into South Bend is a horse of a different color, and, in addition, the Irish were geared for revenge and to stop Tony Dorsett. But Bob Haygood, Elliot Walker, and Mr. Dorsett had a few things to say about that. That victory will undoubtedly establish Pittsburgh as a definite threat in the fight for the national championship.

BOSTON COLLEGE 14, TEXAS 13 — The sweetest of them all. Texas was ranked seventh nationally by Sports Illustrated prior to the season. And why not? With players like Earl Campbell and Johnny Jones returning, the Longhorns definitely have a top shot as taking over as Southwest Conference. Champs once again. But no one bothered to tell the Eagles that. And although BC was hanging on for dear life at the end, the eyes of Texas lost their glimmer nationwide.

MASSACHUSETTS 28, TOLEDO 14 — For the second year in a row, UMass beat a midwestern school. Last year Western Illinois took it on the chin, and this season, the Rockets from Toledo were done in. The respected Mid-American Conference saw one of its members lose to a Division II school who was predicted by some to finish its season at 6-3-1. It was a Division II squad that lost several key members of its 1975 squad, and had two defensive starters out of the game due to injuries. But the Minutemen, after a slow start, took the momentum right out of Toledo's hands, tightened up the defense, and sent the Rockets packing back to the midwest.

Ah yes, the East may once again receive the recognition it once did, before its prestige slipped. If nothing else, this past weekend took the wind out of the sails of those schools who have tormented the east for so long.

Penn State, Pittsburgh, Boston College, and UMass all did something for eastern collegiate football last weekend that all the public relations directors, sports information directors and sportswriters couldn't do. They won.

Although September 11, 1976 may never be remembered for anything else, it will go down as the day eastern football climbed a couple of big steps up the ladder in national recognition. And, at the end of the season, perhaps this week will come to be known as the week that was.

Booters bump English in scrimmage comeback

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

One of the most difficult things to do in soccer is to come from behind. But don't tell that to the UMass booters, who for the second time in as many scrimmages did just that as they defeated a team from the Southern England Amateur League 2-1 Sunday.

The English team is an All-Star team made up of representatives from each of the 24 teams in its league.

Despite the fact that UMass outshot the visitors 16-5 in the first half, the Minutemen were down by a score of 1-0. Ray Green scored with an assist from Eddie Rowartm.

"It was a beautiful one-on-one effort," UMass mentor Russ Kidd said.

Mark Hanks, who was in the nets for the Minutemen, didn't have a chance on the goal. Hanks only had one save and his English counterpart only three in the first half.

"We were spraying our shots and were not sharp on our shooting," said Kidd.

Bob McChesney, who was the second leading scorer for the Minutemen last season, scored a goal to knot the score at one all. Joe Mascolo assisted on the play.

Both teams played excellent defense in the second half. Just when it looked like the game was going to end in a stalemate, Dave Tagliavini scored with an assit from Mark Abbott to put UMass on top by the score of 2-1.

UMass had taken the ball on a goal save and used some beautiful passing on the scoring play.

"Mike Shannon had a lot to do with getting the play started," Kidd said.

Mark Hodgdon, a transfer goalie from New Jersey was in the nets for the second half and held the English team scoreless. Hodgdon has looked impressive in the scrimmages so far as he has yet to be scored upon.

"We played very well", commented Kidd. "Had we struck a few more balls in the net we would have played excellently."

"They didn't expect us to be of the caliber we are," Kidd said.

"They respect us now," he added.

Booter Banter: Amherst College lost to the English team last night 4-2. Amherst coach Peter Gooding was at the UMass game and thought the Minutemen played very well. "It looks like UMass is going to have an excellent year," Gooding said... The English team now travels to Boston before returning to Western Mass to play Williams.... The Minutemen scrimmage Brown in Providence today and face Amherst Thursday at the field in front of Boyden.

The pennant races

Philadelphia 7
Montreal 2

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Mike Schmidt drove in four runs with a pair of home runs Monday night as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Montreal Expos 7-2 and kept the pressure on the Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League's Eastern Division pennant race.

Schmidt's home runs, his 34th and 35th of the year, moved him into the National League lead and enabled Steve Carlton to pick up his 17th victory against six defeats.

New York 5
Pittsburgh 0

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Tom Seaver pitched a five-hitter and Felix Millan's two-run single keyed a five-run seventh inning rally Monday night to lead the New York Mets to a 5-0 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Seaver struck out 12 as he picked up his 13th win against 10 losses and dropped the Pirates five games behind the Philadelphia Phillies in the National League East.

Chicago (AL) 4
Kansas City 3

Orr paces Canada, 6-0

TORONTO [UPI] — Bobby Orr scored his first two goals in nearly a year Monday night to lead team Canada to a 6-0 victory over Czechoslovakia in the first game of the best-of-three Canada Cup Finals.

Orr last scored as a member of the Boston Bruins on Nov. 26, 1975, against the New York Rangers, his last NHL game before undergoing knee surgery for the fifth time. The 28-year-old defenseman, now a member of the Chicago Black Hawks, netted a 25-foot power-play goal at 13:34 of the first period to boost Canada's lead to 3-0.

Orr's second goal was also on a Canada power play and came from the blue line at 11:31 of the final period.

Gil Perreault opened the scoring only 1:05 into the game before a capacity crowd in steamy Maple Leaf Gardens. Perreault fired a 25-footer from the right faceoff circle past Czech goalie Vladimir Dzurilla. The Czech goalie, who shut out the Canadians 1-0 Thursday in the round-robin portion of the tournament, also surrendered goals to Denis Potvin, Guy LaFleur and Darryl Sittler.

The goal by Potvin came from 50 feet out after a behind-the-net feed by Sittler and gave Canada a 2-0 lead. LeFleur's score, between Dzurilla's legs, followed his miss on a breakaway attempt only a half-minute earlier.

Jiri Holecek, the regular Czech netminder entering the Canada Cup but inactive since his team's third game, replaced Dzurilla at the start of the second period and surrendered Orr's second goal.

Canada Cup netminder Rogie Vachon fashioned his second tournament shutout, but was barely tested.

Guy Lafleur and Steve Shutt (22) of Team Canada raise their sticks in jubilation after Lafleur scored Canada's fourth goal against the Czech team in the first of the best of three series.

Woodbury cites 'turn around'

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

The Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury yesterday told heads of departments under his jurisdiction that he is "cautiously optimistic" about the University's immediate future.

"Woodbury's remarks were made at the first annual Student Affairs Convocation in the Campus Center. The meeting has been established to provide an opportunity for Student Affairs department heads to come together and discuss goals and ideas for the year.

Woodbury told the convocation that the problems of the recent past have taken a "turn-around," citing several reasons for his new optimism. He said the University is now working with a "better budget," that there are "more resources" this year, and that in the area of student affairs there are "fewer vacancies" in personnel.

Unlike many institutions that have in the past few years striven for the top of American higher education and have fallen short, Woodbury said, "this University, and particularly this campus, are clearly going to grow and become among the strongest in the U.S."

Woodbury said he has been inspired in the last week by the number of staff he has seen "giving a little extra ... putting-out more than is required, above and beyond the call of duty." He senses "a lot of optimism," he said.

This year there has been far less "brick-throwing" between members of the faculty, staff, and physical plant, Woodbury said.

"We're all on the same road, even though it may be a wide one, and that's cause for optimism."

He said it's good to see that "people who believe in education and individual growht, are beginning to learn and accept that management concerns and fiscal accountability are an important, necessary part of any organization the size of the University."

As to his position as vice-chancellor, Woodbury said he is "hesitant to say, 'Here are the goals.' ". He alone does not want to dictate what they will be, he said.

Woodbury feels it is "very important" that he "walk around, get out of Whitmore often, to see and get a feeling for what is going on here." He said he fears it is all too easy inside Whitmore, to lose contact with the students.

In the last several days, he said, he has been "trying to be open to lots of advice, trying to listen to everyone ... from time to time prodding, trying to be catalytic."

"It's time to have a little more fun around here," he said. "Last year was too serious."

Woodbury ended his remarks to the convocation by saying he hoped there would be "room for imagination in this operation."

After Woodbury's opening remarks presentations were heard from the department heads, as they explained the role of their departments, the current status and future goals of their operations, and the budgetary and staff situations in their areas.

Presentations were made by Director of Health Services Barry W. Averill, Director of the Campus Center Complex William F. Fields, Director of Student Services W. Daniel Fitzpatrick, Community Development Center Director Sally Freeman, and spokespersons for the Department of Public Safety and the Umass Admissions Office.

Judy Davis, member of the task force which planned the meeting, said the convocation is an "opportunity to acquaint ourselves with problems we have lost touch with over the summer, to meet new staff, and to just talk to each other about our perceptions and ideas."

The organizational structure of the Student Affairs division has been changed somewhat, lately, with the most significant reorganization coming in the Student Development Center. The center has been changed to become the Community Development Center, which now assumes responsibility for Residential Life and certain programming.

Under the center's direction now is career and psychological counseling, the University's child-care facility, all University testing, new student's programming, residential hall counseling and programming, and the Resource Network.

There has also been the re-establishment of a third vice chancellor's office. Several years ago, when Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services Thomas B. Campion resigned, his position was not filled. Now there will be a Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance.

Fraternities display alternative lifestyle

By ELIZABETH KENT
Collegian Staff

Students who are already tired of dormitory life and who are searching for a more home-like living situation, are investigating the Greek system this week as the Greeks hold their bi-annual "Rush".

Rush is an attempt to bring new blood into the Greek system by recruiting new members. At the end of rush period, the houses invite selected rushees to join the house, initially as a "pledge" and later as a brother or sister.

The students interested in the Greek system include freshpersons, transfers and upper class students who are looking for communal meals, planned social activities and community involvement.

The Greek houses are specially zoned fraternity residences owned by the individual houses, which pay taxes to the town of Amherst. House maintenance is taken care of for 21 of the 25 fraternity and sorority houses on campus by the Fraternity Managers Association.

Joe Sexton, the UMass coordinator for the association, handles nearly all of the revenues of the 21 houses represented and purchases almost everything in the houses including: television sets; food; beer and liquor.

Sexton estimates that a minimum of $50,000 a year are paid to the town of Amherst in tax revenues by the Greek houses.

Sexton said that "the trend is back towards brotherhood and community concern". He said about $850,000 are expended each year by the Greek community in the town of Amherst.

Life in the Greek system is basically unisex living within the houses, although there is a coed fraternity on campus, Sigma Alpha Mu which houses 16 of its 30 active members.

Christin Kalucki, a junior in Environmental Science said the coed frat house is a "more balanced experience" and that the sororities are too artificial because only girls live in the sorority houses. She described her house as "homelike".

Living expenses for the Greek houses are comparable to dormitory costs. The major difference in houue living and dorm life is that the Greek house provide 21 meals a week whereas the meal plan only gives 15 meals a week. Room fees for this year differed by $5 to $50 on an average dorm room fees while meal costs differed by an average of $30.

When a student accepts a bid from a house, or an invitation to join, he or she becomes a pledge for six to twelve weeks, during which time the pledge learns about the members of the house, their lifestyles, rules of the house and of the national organization if the group is affiliated with a national frat or sorority, house activities, greek activities and house traditions.

Rush for the frats and the sororities are different and this year the sororities are trying to be more structured than they have been in the past.

The greeks interviewed, who presently live in houses, were unanimous in their acclaim of the way of life. Phil Alexander, fraternity rush coordinator, lives at Beta Kappa Phi. He lived in the dorms his first year at UMass and is in his second year as a resident of a house. He said he "couldn't ever go back and live in the dorms." He said he likes the close communal style of living and the way that the frat does things in a group, in being a brother, said that "there is a close association with each member of the house".

A sorority sister, who wished to remain anonymous, said she joined a sorority as a sophomore and did not like the Greek way of life. She said the need to attend parties and

CC Women's programming subject of task force

By CHARLOTTE ALLEN
Collegian Staff

The members of the Title IX Task Force in a meeting last night decided to begin balancing the level of women's programming in the Campus Center-Student Union (CC-SU) complex by sponsoring a woman oriented film in the next few weeks. Task Force members say the film will be a kickoff point for the committee to expand out to the community and recruit new members.

The philosophy of the committee is based on the Title IX Amendment to the Education Act of 1972, which states that no educational institution receiving federal funds can discriminate, on the basis of sex, in the areas of employment, services and educational programs.

The administration, including Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury, and Dr. Fred Preston, AFfirmative Action officer for Student Affairs, have actively supported the founders of the committee and will formally appoint the members in the near future.

The group is comprised of students, faculty, staff, administrators and employees of the University. Anyone with an interest in eliminating sexist policies in the CC-SU complex is welcome to join, organizers say.

The four basic areas of concern at this time are: programming (which includes women's music in the Hatch, Bluewall and Top of the Campus, and women speakers in the Distinguished Visitors Program) education via women-oriented educational programs and building sensitivity within the media to the causes and effects of sexism, resources, and employment.

Employment is especially crucial, as through research by several different campus organizations it has been documented that women workers in the CC-SU are paid disproportionately less than men, and they are also prodded towards jobs that are sex-role stereotyped. This includes cashiers, chambermaids, waitresses and secretaries.

The committee will be working in the next few weeks, to educate the community to the meanings, needs for and possibilities of Title IX.

They will be working out of a new student group, called University Women, located in Room 923 of the Campus Center. Participation is open to all and organizers hope that the community will take advantage of this opportunity to "smash" sexism in the complex students pay so much for.

Apartment leases may be catchy

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

You may have just moved into your new house or apartment, or maybe you're just thinking about it for next semester. In any case, apartment life can be less expensive than dorm life if you don't let yourself get ripped off. If this is not your first time in an apartment, you know the unforeseen hassles that go with apartment life, but if this is your first time, there are a few things you should know.

There are a number of non-profit organizations which can help with just about all types of problems in off-campus housing. Since most problems have their common source in money, these organizations are legally oriented, and most users of these organizations say they are very helpful.

They include The Amherst Housing Authority, Amherst Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee, Health Inspection Agencies and UMass Legal Services Office (or Western Mass. Legal Services).

These organizations will help sort out the sometimes confusing language of a lease. They will also help to get you out of a legal mess, and, in a dispute between you and your landlord, give the necessary information and support.

Before going to these organizations for help, however, it is helpful to know some typical tricks in the landlord trade.

The Lease

"How to Read a Lease", a guide for renters, is a pamphlet available at the Off-Campus Housing Office in Munson Hall, adjacent to Whitmore Administration building. The pamphlet recommends a careful reading of the lease and a "methodological inspection of the apartment" before you sign the lease.

If you're not satisfied with the lease, it is possible to change it. With apartments scarce in the Amherst area, the landlord is in the driver's seat and he or she may tell you to take it or leave it, but changing the lease is worth a try.

If there is a potentially troublesome clause in the lease, it's best to strike it altogether. Lower courts often treat leases literally, even if the law does not occur.

To strike a clause, the relevant words should be crossed out and both you and the landlord, or his or her agent, should put your initials next to the change. Do it on every copy of the lease you sign.

The pamphlet also points to 10 danger signs on leases, clauses that appear in some form of cloudy English, meaning much the same thing.

Because of this you may agree to obey rules that may not even have been written yet, you may agree to pay possible extra rent, or give the landlord free rein to enter your apartment at any time, without even knowing you are allowing him or her to do it.

If you cannot understand your lease, take it to a landlord-tenants relations board or a legal services office for help.

Don't sign anything you can't understand fully.

Deposits

The first thing required of you is a security deposit. A security deposit, in addition to the first month's rent, is payed in advance of moving into your house or apartment. It is against the law to require a security deposit of more than two month's rent.

Give the landlord a list of all present damages when you move in, and be sure copies are signed by you and the landlord.

A security deposit held for one year or more must pay the tenant 5 per cent interest each year, payable at the end of each year the landlord holds the money.

The landlord cannot deduct money from the deposit for normal wear and tear to the apartment. Only damages done by the occupant and the occupant's guests are deductable.

When subleasing or reassigning your lease, make a new security deposit arrangement, and work it out to the satisfaction of all involved parties.

Security deposits are not the only deposit you are liable to encounter in those first few months. Telephone deposits are under no regulation in Massachusetts. New England Telephone claims to have an elaborate system for determining how much your deposit will cost.

If your credit is poor, they say, your deposit may be equal to a two-month average of your previous phone bills. Furthermore, the statewide installation fee is $32.50, according to the company, and payment can be made in installments.

Gas and electric companies are prohibited from requiring advance deposits and the company should refund new deposits made.

Bills

Budget your money. You have to pay the rent each month, and in the winter utilities (heat, electricity and water) run an average of $55 a month in the Amherst area. The Landlord must provide facilities to heat every room, including the bathroom, to at least 70 degrees farenheit between 7 a.m. and 11 p.m. and 65 degrees between 11

Agriculture group meets

By KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

Students interested in problems as diverse as educating students about world food and farming issues, to the understaffed Plant and Soil Science department, met Tuesday to organize a group called "Issues in Agriculture".

About 50 students attended the meeting in the Campus Center and audience participation and interest was high.

"There seems to be a need in the University for a group called 'Issues in Agriculture'," said Brenda Davis, a Plant and Soil Science graduate trying to organize the group.

She also described the "sudden exodus" of six professors from the Plant and Soil Science department.

"I hope I'm not overstating it when I call it a crisis," she said.

Davis also stressed the economic and environmental aspects of farming that are not taught in the curriculum.

"There is a deficiency in the College of Food and Natural Resources. It's not just how much calcium to put in a plant. It's a whole lot more than that," she said.

Tom Gardiner, another organizer and graduate student in Plant and Soil Science mentioned the loss of land in Massachusetts to non-farming interests and said he would see the organization as a "Ralph Nader type of thing, where there's something for everyone."

"I think we've taken this chemical trip too far," Gardiner said, "we ought to push for organics and not what the chemical companies are selling us."

Ed Pachico from the Coalition for Alternative Agriculture at UMass told the group that 85 per cent of Massachusetts' food is provided from out of state and that it cost over $300 million each year to transport the food here.

Pachico also talked about the chemical overkill of corporate farming and said, "The ultimate victim of corporate farming is the land itself"

McClogan, O'Brien fight tightly contested race

By JOHN MORAN
and MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The race for the first district Democratic Congressional nomination was too close to call and undecided as of early this morning and 235 uncounted absentee ballots hold the balance in the election.

Final tabulations indicated that Edward O'Brien has defeated his opponent, Edward McColgan, by a narrow 30 vote margin. But it was revealed this morning that 235 absentee ballots from Pittsfield had not been counted by the city clerk.

Because absentee ballots must be counted in the presence of two police officers and a majority of the Board of Registrars, the votes will not be counted until 9 a.m. today.

McColgan defeated O'Brien in Pittsfield without the absentee ballots by a margin of 4370 to 3298 votes.

Amherst returns showed McColgan defeating O'Brien by a vote of 1104 to 382. In O'Brien's hometown of Easthampton, however, McColgan garnered only 425 votes, with O'Brien capturing 1758.

In Northampton, McColgan's hometown, the votes were closer but McColgan won 2240 to 1685.

The tabulation was closest in Belchertown with McColgan narrowly defeating O'Brien, 186 votes to 177. Sunderland also went with McColgan, 65 to 48. In Hadley however, the vote went to O'Brien 226 to 192.

O'Brien also defeated McColgan in Holyoke, capturing 2548 votes to McColgan's 1372.

Results from North Adams and Pittsfield were not available at press time last night.

Republican candidate Silvio O. Conte, the incumbent was unopposed.

In the primary for the U.S. Senate, incumbent Edward M. Kennedy soundly defeated opponents Robert E. Dinsmore, Frederick C. Langone and Drendon V. Shannon in western Massachusetts.

In Amherst, Kennedy received 1460 votes to Dinsmore's 122, and Langone's 54. Shannon received 20 votes. Kennedy also took Sunderland with 111 votes to 12 for Dinsmore, 3 for Langone and 1 for Shannon.

The Belchertown vote echoed the others with Kennedy receiving 294 votes, to 74 for Dinsmore. Shannon garnered 12 votes, while Langone tallied only 9.

A total of 5306 voters turned out for Kennedy in the town of Hadley, Easthampton, and Northampton, while Dinsmore had 909 supporters. Langone received 233 votes in the three towns, and Shannon garnered 105.

Michael Robertson, a Taunton curtain manufacturer, ran unopposed in the Republican party.

The county commissioner's race was undertermined at press time. Locally, Robert Garvey captured Amherst, with Ted Boruchowski receiving 182 votes and Paul Dineen capturing 532.

People's market offers food at lower prices

At the People's Market you can buy Mung beans by the handful, and at a good price.

However, The People's Market, a non-profit student-run food cooperative located in the Student Union, sells more than Mung beans. They also have much of the more familiar foods in stock at prices beneath those often found at traditional supermarkets. People's Market Coordinator Nancy Kerr explains how.

"We're part of the Western Massachusetts Coops," she says, which "is about 30 coops in Western Massachusetts that have incorporated and buy food in bulk orders." For this reason the prices stay way down.

"They sell us cheese, grains, and are starting to deal in canned goods," Kerr says.

In addition, the market gets its fruits and vegetables fresh from Boston through Squash Trucking, she says. Here they avoid the middleman to help reduce mark-up of these items.

"We also deal with local farmers," she added. "We like to buy from local people as much as we can."

The market carries staples like canned goods, dairy products, produce, and many other traditional store items. And if you're into rolled oats or rye flakes, they have them too.

Another advantage to shopping at the market Kerr says is ""A lot of things you can buy by the piece." Small individual pieces of cheese are sold, for example.

As a matter of fact, cheese and yogurt are sold in the highest volumes of any items in the store, Kerr says. She attributed this to the many students who drop in just for lunch or a snack. Eleven to 1 p.m. in the afternoon are the markets busiest hours.

The People's Market opened Monday for the fall semester following a brief vacation that began with the last day of summer school. Many new as well as familiar people dropped in to explore, see friends, or surprisingly enough, to shop, Kerr says.

"It makes you feel people missed you," she said. "It's nice to be open again."

The People's Market is a Recognized Student Organization, and receives money from student fees, and making every student at UMass a member. There is no work requirement for students who shop there.

Kerr says the market is a workers collective where everyone has equal say in running it.

There are 18 UMass students working at The People's Market. They work at least 13 hours a week, 10 of which are paid a wage of $2.40 an hour.

"It's really a good experience," Kerr says. "Everyone has a chance to deal with vendors and set-up inventory."

She added that there is "definitely a community spirit. It's a really tight group."

Those in the market Monday say they like shopping there for various reasons.

One student, when asked if he planned to shop at the market, said, "I expect to. I'm sick of waiting in lines and a lot of times this has shorter lines. The prices are cheaper too."

While another person said she found coffee to be a little expensive, "some things are cheaper like dairy and produce." She added, "It's (the market) is good, it's convenient, I like it."

Concerning the cost of items sold in the market, Kerr said that although many if not most of the items sold are cheaper there than if bought elsewhere, they were

Recycling project continues at UMass

By MARY ANN MAYNARD
Collegian Staff

The majority of students try their hardest to get a good grade on a project, and when the grades are in, the project is usually soon forgotten, but there is an exception to every rule. A recycling program for the UMass campus will get underway next week thanks to a group of students who are continuing a project they began in an environmental science class in the fall of 1975.

According to Louise Sapp, one of the initiators of the program, special barrels for glass will be set up in dormitories willing to participate. There will be separate barrels for clear and colored glass on each floor which will be supervised by a dorm recycling coordinator.

Last semester the program was run on a limited basis putting barrels in selected dorms for the collection of paper and glass. After one of the barrels of paper was set on fire and thrown into an elevator in Southwest, the Office of Residential Life decided to ban any more collection of paper for recycling in the dormitories, said Sapp.

Instead of the paper collection in the dorms, Sapp said, there will be barrels set up around campus specifically for paper to be recycled. As long as the students become involved enough to take a walk outside their dorms to deposit the paper there should be no problems in collecting it, she said.

It will take 15 to 17 tons of the recyclable material before the trucking company working with the program will come and pick the paper and glass up. From here it will go to Dayville, Conn., where it will be converted into usable material once again.

"Our biggest problem will probably be contamination," said Sapp. An entire 17 ton load can be rejected if the inspectors find one bottle top mixed in.

According to Sapp they're optimistic that the students at UMass will respond to their program, and they are especially hopeful that many students will come to the weekly meetings at the Coalition for Environmental Quality and become genuinely involved.

Mass PIRG holds workshops tonight

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG), a non-profit, student advocacy organization which has been working for political and social change since 1972, will hold several introductory workshops tonight at 8 p.m. in Campus Center 906.

Interested persons will be updated on the latest environmental and consumer issues which Mass PIRG has been involved with, such as placing the Bottle Bill referendum on the November Ballot.

Currently researching how to stop the proposed nuclear power plant in Seabrook, N.H., Mass PIRG is "a concrete example proving people do care about their environment," according to Staff Attorney Peter Bogle.

He said since a construction permit has already been acquired for the site, there are "no further legal avenues" left to fight the nuclear plant.

"But we want people to realize the full importance of this issue," he said. "The situation at Seabrook is a test case. The chances of building other plants across the country will be enhanced if this goes through."

Pointing out that this would possibly influence the licensing of a proposed nuclear education program has been scheduled by Mass PIRG for the first week in October.

In addition, the organization is examining possible alternative energy resources including solar energy and wind power.

The attorney stressed that it is difficult to oppose the policies of many special interest groups, namely the private utility companies.

"It's not always easy to bring about change which will make the government respond to citizens rather than large corporations," Bogle said.

He noted the recent agreement between the Western Massachusetts Electric Company and Mass PIRG to construct fish ladders on the Connecticut River. Bogle said that because of several electric generating plants, the fish have not been able to move upstream for years.

Now Atlantic salmon and shad can be restored to their full range on the river, he said.

Though the first of three fish ladders is to be completed by 1979, Bogle warned in a recent press release, "Those who would destroy the rivers of this state for their own profits must be carefully watched, or our victory will itself be sold down the river."

Mass PIRG has been one of the major organizations pushing to include the Bottle Bill as a referendum on the November ballot, according to Bogle. Members have helped collect more than 90,000 signatures to add it under initiative petition, after the state legislature refused to consider it an issue.

"Massachusetts will be considered a national testing spot if the idea of returnable bottles is voted in," Bogle said.

Comparing this issue to "pre-Watergate politics," he claims that up to $50,000 in "deceptive advertising" is being used by bottle manufacturers to sway the public. Mass PIRG has allotted $8,000 to promote the bill.

"We're trying to win with people rather than money," Bogle said.

meetings interfered with her school work.

"Sororities are ok for some people, but before you join, find out exactly what you're getting into," she said.

Eric Hall, a junior transfer theoretical psychology student who is now living in Sylvan, said that he was comfortable in his present living situation and that he did not want the responsibility of frat living.

"The old fraternity school of thought would not coincide with my personal outlook on school and life," he said. "I am too much of an individualist to join a frat."

Each Greek house has its own government and also has representatives in the Greek Council. The houses also have individual pledge and initiation ceremonies. There is a constant interchange between the Greek houses; brothers adopt "Little Sisters", and there are exchanges between houses at social functions.

Greeks are involved in community affairs. An annual Greek Week takes place in the spring during which the Greek community raises money to contribute to charities. In 1976 $9,460 was raised and contributed to various assorted charities.

Other Greek activities include Area tours of the University campus, and numerous other community services.

Opening the doors of the SUB led hundreds of university students to the tropical plant sale sponsored by the Greek Council. Running until Thursday, this is the time to get a bit of the tropics in your room as Kathy Shaw demonstrates. (Staff photo by Steve Polansky)

Senate to elect new treasurer

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

Beset by charges of political infighting and two resignations last week, the Undergraduate Student Senate is expected to get down to business when it meets at 7:30 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

A new treasurer will be elected to replace Henry Doyle, who resigned at last week's meeting.

The election to replace Annette Guttenberg, who resigned from her position as speaker, will be held at next week's meeting.

It was not known at press time who candidates for the positions might be.

The senate will be voting on whether to fund Nummo News, the Black community newspaper replacing Grassroots. If the budget submitted by Nummo News is completed, the senate will also decide how much money they will receive.

Sen. Bryan Harvey's proposed amendment to lower the size of the senate from 120 to 80 members may reach the floor.

Harvey said in a telephone interview last night that it is too difficult to keep 120 seats filled, and he said he believes reducing the size would also improve communication within the senate.

The senate will also discuss new guidelines for determining who is an undergraduate, and thus entitled to senate funded services. Under the current system an undergraduate is anyone who pays the Student Activities Fee. According to Acting Treasurer Tommy Kerrins students are taking advantage of this system.

Kerrins said last night that a number of Continuing Education students have paid the activities fee after being arrested so they could go to Legal Services for help.

Another bill facing the senate is Adam Auster's proposed revision of Chapter Nine of the bylaws, which he hopes will simplify the process of forming a student club or organization.

Kennedy crushes three opponents

BOSTON [Compiled from wires] — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy easily defeated three challengers in Massachusetts' Democratic primary yesterday, but early returns from Boston appeared to reflect considerably anti-Kennedy sentiment there.

"I realize there was a strong number in Boston who voted for my challengers," Kennedy said at his primary headquarters.

"I will work to gain their interest."

With 318 of the state's 2,174 precincts reporting, or 14 per cent, Kennedy had 56,842 votes or 76 per cent, compared to 10,217 votes or 14 per cent for Milton attorney Robert E. Dinsmore, 6,112 votes or 8 per cent for Boston City Councillor Frederick C. Langone and 1,225 votes or 2 per cent for Stoughton contractor Bernard V. Shannon.

Amherst voted overwhelmingly for Kennedy, giving him 1,460 votes to 122 for Dinsmore, 54 for Langone and 20 for Shannon.

Kennedy acknowledged that the forced school busing issue hurt him in Boston but said, "The support I received throughout the state shows that the people care about the matters which are important.

"They are jobs, the restoration of the economy, health care, care for the elderly, the quality of education and concern for the environment."

Kennedy's opponents hoped opposition to forced school busing and abortion would lead to a Kennedy embarrassment in the capital city, and early returns from Boston showed the senator's vote hovering around the 50 per cent mark there.

Kennedy swept Springfield, and he claimed most of Brookline, a large town bordering Boston.

He also swept a number of large communities throughout the state claiming up to 80 per cent of the vote in many of them.

Shannon dropped out of the race more than a week ago, throwing his support to Dinsmore, but his name remained on the ballot.

Kennedy was seeking his third full term in the Senate — his first bid for re-election since court-ordered school busing began in Boston two years ago and his first primary challenge since his 1962 election.

While the state's senior senator was expected to win the Democratic nomination handily, political observers have felt the 44-year-old Kennedy was threatened with a possible embarrassment in the capital city.

Langone and Dinsmore were opposed to busing, abortion and gun control, all key issues in Massachusetts and Boston in particular. Kennedy, who has voted for all three, has avoided these issues and his opponents on the campaign trail.

Unopposed on the Republican ballot for the GOP senatorial nomination was Michael S. Robertson, 40, a Berkley selectman.

Dinsmore, 44, was out front on the busing issue from the outset, representing groups opposed to the U.S. District Court's school desegregation program which entered its third year earlier this month.

BOSTON: As his nephew and campaign manager Joseph P. Kennedy III, looks on smiling (R) a happy U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy thanks campaign workers after he swept to an easy victory in the Vassachusetts Democratic senatorial primary, crushing a pair of anti-busing candidates from Boston. (UPI)

Dinsmore ran twice unsuccessfully for the Boston City Council. He has never held political office.

At the time Shannon dropped out of the contest, the Dinsmore-Langone race heated up with charges that Langone was running to split up the anti-Kennedy vote.

This was denied by Langone, 54, who has been off and on the council for more than a decade.

While Dinsmore concentrated on the busing-abortion-guns issue, Langone made a more general campaign pitch. He recently said, "there's a tremendous amount of discontent in this state, and this is the year they are going to blame Washington."

Kennedy talked about such issues as unemployment and of the other issue he said, "I realize when I take strong positions that this is going to mean there will be those who are strongly opposed to it."

Kennedy still faces Republican businessman Robertson and a Socialist Workers candidate in November.

Seven incumbents beaten in Mass.

BOSTON [UPI] — At least seven incumbent state representatives and one senator, John D. Bullock, D-Arlington, were defeated in the Massachusetts primary yesterday.

Bullock, was defeated by Samuel Rotundi, D-Winchester, who will automatically go to Beacon Hill next year since he is unopposed in November.

In one of the most hotly contested House races, former boxer and legislative aide Joseph Dejnucci, D-Newton, defeated one-term representative Richard J. McGrath, D-Newton. DeNucci had lost to McGrath by a handful of votes in 1974.
lost to McGrath by a handful of votes in 1974.

The other incumbents defeated were: Richard M. McGrath, D-Watertown; Peter H. Lappin, D-Springfield; Daniel L. Joyce, D-Woburn; William I. Kiterman, D-Pittsfield; Joseph Garcynski, D-Chicopee, and Francis X. Coppinger, D-Boston.

Incomplete returns from other communities indicated that as many as six more lawmakers, including two senators — William X. Wall, D-Lawrence, and James P. Rurak, D-Haverhill — were in close races and faced possible defeat.

More than 60 per cent of the incumbents seeking reelection, including the Democratic and Republican leadership of both branches, were unopposed in the primary even though the lawmakers and Gov. Michael S. Dukakis last year raised $350 million in taxes, the largest tax hike in state history.

Some 251 incumbents sought re-election. Twenty-three of the 37 state senators seeking reelection were unopposed in the primary, but contests to fill vacancies in the 40-member Senate sparked vigorous campaigns in three senatorial districts.

The decision by 27-year-old Sen. Stephen McGrail, D-Malden, to run for Congress in the 12-way Democratic primary in the 7th District left that seat open.

Moynihan defeats Abzug in close N.Y. primary

BOSTON [Compiled from wires] — Former U.N. Ambassador Daniel Patrick Moynihan yesterday beat Rep. Bella Abzug and three other Democrats for the nomination to challenge Sen. James Buckley for a coveted New York Senate seat in November.

Moynihan, seeking the center in a Democratic primary crowded with liberals, overcame criticism of his White House and diplomatic service for the Nixon and Ford administrations to lead Mrs. Abzug on her own turf, New York City, and run far ahead of the other contenders.

With 75 per cent of the election districts reporting, Moynihan had 37 per cent of the vote and Mrs. Abzug 35 per cent. Moynihan had 197,659 votes to Mrs. Abzug's 189,993.

Moynihan led Mrs. Abzug in New York City, its suburbs and also upstate.

Buckley, elected in 1970 as the Conservative Party candidate, had that label again this year and easily defeated GOP Rep. Peter Peyser for the Republican nomination. The seat at stake was last held by a Democrat between 1964 and 1968, by Robert Kennedy.

Down to the polls by a record number of primary candidates, Rhode Islanders voted Tuesday in higher than expected numbers to cast ballots in races ranging from the U.S. Senate to town councils.

Gov. Philip W. Noel led in an eight-man battle for the Democratic Senate nomination to succeed retiring Sen. John O. Pastore while Lt. Gov. J. Joseph Garrahy easily won the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

State Elections Board officials said the turnout was moderate through most of the daylight hours but picked up at dark. At 9 p.m. when the polls were to close, some voters were still standing in line and the cutoff time was extended.

John Gendron of the Election Board had forecast a turnout of about 25 per cent of the state's 527,000 voters. He said the normal turnout was about 15 per cent.

With 142 of 422 precincts reporting, Noel had 17,950 votes to 14,707 for Cadillac dealer Lorber. State Senate Majority Leader John P. Hawkins was running third with 5,568.

In New Hampshire two term Gov. Meldrim Thomson easily defeated moderate challenger Gerard Zeiller for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in New Hampshire.

In the Democratic governors race, former Senate Vice President Harry Spanos crept up on early frontrunner James Connor as returns trickled in from small towns.

Vermont Gov. Thomas P. Salmon clung to a narrow four-point lead in his fight to gain the Democratic senatorial nomination, with 91 per cent of the towns reporting in the primary there.

On the Republican side, Sen. Robert T. Stafford easily was nominated in his bid for his first full term in the Senate.

Montpelier attorney John A. Burgess swept more than three-quarters of the votes cast in a three-way race for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. House.

He faces incumbent Rep. James M. Jeffords, who was unopposed in the primary.

State Treasurer Stella Hackel appeared the victor in a three-way race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, 10 points ahead of her nearest competitor.

O'Neill, Moakley, Studds victors

BOSTON [UPI] — Rep. Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, House Democratic leader, and three other Democratic congressmen — Gerry Studds, John J. Moakley and James A. Burker — were renominated Tuesday in the Massachusetts primary.

Incomplete returns gave O'Neill about 70 per cent of the vote in the 8th District. Studds was carrying 84 per cent in the 12th District and Moakley had received 74 per cent in the 9th District.

Early returns indicated Burke had substantial lead, with 64 per cent, and would be renominated in the 11th District.

Two other incumbents — 10th District Republican Margaret M. Heckler and 3rd District Democrat Joseph D. Early — won re-election automatically since they are unopposed in both the primary and the final elections.

In the 7th District, where 12 Democrats were battling for the seat created by the death of Rep. Torhert H. MacDonald, (D-Malden), Everett Mayor George McCarthy took an early lead, but several candidates remained in striking distance.

Of the incumbents facing opposition, only Burke, was believed in danger of defeat. The 66-year-old incumbent is being challenged by Patrick Henry McCarthy of Randolph, a 30-year-old Harvard-educated lawyer.

The issues in the campaign for O'Neill's 8th District seat were the incumbent's position on court-ordered school desegregation, abortion and his efforts to improve the region's economy.

Three candidates await the November elections: Leo Kakhian, head of the American Party of Massachusetts; William Barnstead, a former chairman of the Republican State Committee and an independent candidate, Florenzo DiDonato.

The race to replace MacDonald in the 7th District was as crowded as the Kentucky Derby and the talent and politics of the candidates are as diverse.

Twelve Democrats, only two of them political rookies, entered the contest. The winner will face two independents in November.

In the 12th district, two-term incumbent Studds was opposed by Bristol County Treasurer Edmund L. Dinis. Dinis is the former county prosecutor who handled the celebrated 1969 Chappaquiddick bridge case involving Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

Since there are no candidates from other parties, the winner of the primary will go to Washington.

In the 9th District Moakley was opposed by Robert Owen Flynn, D-Boston.

Running unopposed in the primary are: Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield; Mrs. Heckler; Edward P. Boland of Springfield; Robert F. Drinan of Newton; Paul E. Tsongas of Lowell; Michael J. Harrington of Beverly.

UMass undergrad loses House bid

HYANNIS — Richard M. Gureghian, a Hyannis resident and an undergraduate student at UMass, narrowly lost in his bid for the first Barnstable district Democratic momonation for the state House of Representatives.

Gureghian, who campaigned all summer in the Cape Cod district, garnered 885 votes while winner Thomas Lynch received 1326, with two other candidates trailing far behind.

Sterilization used to combat overpopulation

NEW DELHI, India [AP] — Under intense government pressure, more and more of India's 610 million people are being sterilized. Some, however, still openly resist and the battle for population control is far from won.

The latest government statistics indicate that since April more than two million Indians, 90 per cent of them men, have undergone vasectomies or tubectomies.

In the United States, with about one-third as many people as India, the Association for Voluntary Sterilization estimates that 1.3 million people underwent sterilization in all of 1975, more than half women.

The surge in sterilization in India after 25 years of mediocre family planning results stems from a year of heavy propaganda by Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government and tough new penalties for couples not voluntarily limiting their families to three children.

The penalties vary from state to state, but in several of them pay raises, government housing and free medical care will be denied those couples not conforming to the nationally prescribed three-child limit.

"Sure I was sterilized," said a New Delhi taxi driver with two children. "When I went to get my driver's license renewed, I was told I first had to produce a sterilization certificate. If I can't drive I can't make a living."

An unemployed carpenter with six hildren said he needed a stomach operation but when he went to the hospital he was told he would have to pay for it unless he got a vasectomy first. He got it.

A bill in Maharashtra State, passed by the state assembly and awaiting federal approval, mandates jail terms of up to two years for one spouse of most couples not stopping at three children.

At least three other states — Haryana, Uttar Pradesh and the Punjab — are considering similar legislation, and the federal government has just ordered its three million civil servants to not have more than three penalties, though penalties have not yet been spelled out.

Money rewards equal to about $17 for undergoing sterilization also help the campaign in the resettlement villages outside New Delhi.

There has been virtually no mention in the censored Indian press of open resistance to the government campaign.

Soviets' sympathy rejected

HONG KONG [UPI] — China, at the midpoint of official mourning for Chairman Mao Tse-tung, yesterday rejected condolence messages from the Communist party of the Soviet Union and five other Soviet-bloc countries, diplomatic sources said.

The Peking diplomats quoted a Chinese foreign ministry spokesman as saying the messages were "rejected as unacceptable" because China has "no party-to-party relations" with the nations involved.

According to the sources, the notes represented the first attempt by Moscow and its staunchest Eastern European allies to express sympathy at the Chinese Communist party chairman's death last Thursday at the age of 82.

By rejecting the messages from the Soviet Union, Poland, East Germany, Bulgaria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, the Chinese indicated Mao's death would bring no immediate easing of the Sino-Soviet ideological feud Mao launched almost two decades ago.

China recognizes splinter groups in the six countries but rarely has party-to-party contact with the mainstream Communist organizations.

As the nation passed the midpoint of the official eight-day period of mourning for Mao, messages pledging support for the Peking power center continued to pur in from military, government and party organizations.

China's army, navy and air force vowed "to carry on the cause" left by Mao, the official New China News Agency reported yesterday.

Foreign diplomats were allowed to pay respects to Mao Monday.

U.N. postpones decision until election results are in

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The Security Council yesterday decided to postpone a decision on Vietnam's application for membership in the United Nations until after the Nov. 2 U.S. elections.

The decision to postpone action on Vietnam's membership application followed by one day U.S. Ambassador William Scranton's announcement that the United States would veto the application.

A spokesman for Council President Mansur Rashid Kikhia of Libya announced the postponement, saying Council had decided to defer considerations of the application until November so that the General Assembly could discuss the matter simultaneously during its 31st session.

He said that Vietnam agreed to the delay.

In his brief statement, Kikhia did not mention the U.S. elections, but diplomatic talk in the U.N. has centered on the assumption that the United States could not agree to Vietnam's admission before the elections. Scranton's announcement Monday left no doubt about the U.S. position.

Emergency ends!

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday signed a bill eliminating emergency powers held by the White House for 40 years, although he said part of the measure was unconstitutional.

"I support the purposes of the enrolled bill," Ford said in a statement. "One of its provisions, however, would purport to permit the Congress to terminate a national emergency by a concurrent resolution. This feature of the bill is unconstitutional."

The bill wiped out what Ford called "the existing maze of statutes which has resulted from the states of emergency under which the country has been operating for over 40 years."

The new law continues to allow a president to take emergency military action, but makes it subject to congressional approval.

The bill also provides that existing national emergencies will end two years from today and that future declarations of emergency would be subject to congressional review every six months.

"The two-year delay would provide time to enact permanent law, where needed, to replace the authorities that are to terminate," Ford's statement said. "The bill would also authorize the president to proclaim the existence of future national emergencies, with provision for congressional review."

On the section of the bill he believes is unconstitutional, Ford said he thinks Congress does not have the authority simply through resolutions to overturn administration regulations.

"Such provisions are contrary to the general constitutional principle of separation of powers whereby Congress enacts laws but the president and the agencies of government execute them," Ford said.

Women suggest abortion dropped as campaign topic

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The National Women's Political Caucus asked President Ford yesterday to reconsider his "cynical and ill advised" use of abortion as an issue in his campaign against Jimmy Carter.

The caucus severely criticized Ford in a letter continuing the barrage of complaints feminist organizations have directed at both candidates over the issue. The National Organization for Women Monday demanded a meeting with the two contenders.

The caucus charged during the past few weeks Ford has "taken several different positions on abortion — none of them acceptable" to feminists.

"We urge you to reconsider your position," the letter said.

"There is little political gain to be won from exploitation of this highly emotional issue," it said. "...We find your use of abortion as a campaign issue cynical and ill advised."

Ford has said he would support a constitutional amendment returning the jurisdiction of abortion to the states. Carter also opposed abortion, but has indicated virtually no support for a constitutional amendment on the subject.

DEARBORN, Mich: Ford Motor Co. Labor Vice President Sidney McKenna appears to be wiping a tear from his eye yesterday after the United Auto Workers Union called nationwide strike against the No. 2 automaker. McKenna said "we had attempted to take constructive and reasonable approach," and hoped that the strike duration would be kept to a minimum. (UPI)

Group supports drive for women priests

MINNEAPOLIS [UPI] — The women's organizations of the Episcopal Church yesterday called for the ordination of women to the priesthood, an endorsement with psychological rather than legislative significance.

Meeting concurrently with the denomination's General Convention, the women's group debated the issue for a half hour before voting overwhelmingly to express its support of the "drive for canonical affirmation of women" in the priesthood.

The issue, which has polarized the 3 million member denomination since 1974, faces its first real test today when the House of Bishops will vote on a proposal to change church canons rules to allow women priests but include a "conscience clause" which would permit bishops who oppose women to refuse to ordain them.

The growing popularity of the so-called "local option" plan was being interpreted by delegates as an indication that supporters of ordination have the votes to pass the measure and that the conscience clause is being inserted as a sop to conservative bishops.

The Joint Commission on Ecumenical Relations passed a resolution Monday calling on the church to act on the issue despite the possibility of negative reactions from the Roman Catholic and Orthodox churches, both of whom oppose women's ordination.

It said while "there will be ecumenical repercussions... we believe our church is called at this moment to make its witness."

Delegates to the convention also took up the controversial issue of the role of homosexuals in church and society.

The House of Deputies, made up of lay and clerical delegates, adopted a resolution which said the church recognizes homosexuals "are children of God who have a full and equal claim with all other persons upon the love, acceptance and pastoral concerns of the church."

The resolution was fiercely debated before it was adopted.

Stock report

NEW YORK [UPI] — The threat of an auto strike and reports of layoffs in the steel industry raised questions about the economy and sent prices lower yesterday in sluggish trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Selling followed a statement by Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Auto Workers, that there was no chance of averting a strike against Ford Motor Co., despite the No. 2 automaker's last-minute bid Monday night.

Investors also were disturbed by reports U.S. Steel and Bethlehem were laying off workers because of a slackening demand that has led analysts to trim earnings estimates for the group and other industries.

Witness discloses targets for proposed bombings

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — Two of New England's biggest military installations were among proposed targets for terrorist bombings, a U.S. District Court jury was told yesterday.

Joseph Aceto, 23, of Portland testified that he and three other men had considered dynamiting "four or five jet bombers" at Pease Air Force Base in Newington, N.H., and a nuclear submarine at the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard in Kittery.

Aceto, the key prosecution witness at the trial of Everett C. Carlson, said the four men chose instead to go to Massachusetts where they bombed a National Guard truck in Boston, an airliner at Boston's Logan Airport, and a courthouse in Newburyport.

Aceto testified that the final decision on which targets to select was made as he, Carlson, Richard J. Picariello, 27, of Portland and Edward P. Gullion, 27, of Boston were in a car headed south from Portland.

Carlson, 39, of Portland was charged with interstate transportation of explosives used in the three Massachusetts bombings on July 1. Picariello and Gullion, also indicted in the case, are still at large.

Aceto said other targets proposed by the four men included a National Guard armory at Ft. Devens, Mass.; a courthouse in the Dorchester section of Boston; the federal building in Portsmouth, N.H.; an oil tank farm in South Boston; a General Electric Co. plant in Lynn, Mass., and the Polaroid Co. building in Cambridge, Mass.

In their opening statements, both prosecution and defense attorneys advised the jury that Aceto would provide the major portion of the government's case.

The defense described Aceto as a six-time convicted felon who was testifying in exchange for government leniency. He pleaded guilty last Friday to charges of transporting explosives used in the Massachusetts bombings, as well as the bombings of the Seabrook, N.H., Post Office on July 2.

Aceto said the four men called themselves the Fred Hampton Unit of the People's Forces. Hampton was a Black Panther leader slain in a police raid on an apartment on Chicago's West Side.

Sodomy charge may be linked to lost youths

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — A Providence man was detained yesterday on a sodomy charge while police from South Kingstown and Brockton, Mass., questioned him about the disappearnace to two young boys and other incidents in seven states.

Wayne W. Chapman, 28, waived arraignment in District Court on the charge stemming from an incident with a young boy two weeks ago, police said. He was being held at police headquarters.

Capt. Ronald Hawksley of South Kingstown police stressed Tuesday police still had "nothing substantial" linking Chapman to the boy's disappearance.

South Kingstown police were questioning Chapman on the May 1975 disappearance of Jason Foreman, 5. The boy's disappearance received nationwide attention and hundreds of volunteers helped police and rescue workers comb the woods for days near his home.

Traffic clogs while taxis stay parked

BOSTON [UPI] — Taxi service in Boston yesterday came to virtual halt following a vote by cab drivers to strike.

The strike, by most of the city's 1,500 drivers, followed a strike authorization vote Monday night by 200 drivers to protest expansion of limousine service between Logan International Airport and nearby Cambridge.

The vote followed refusal of a Suffolk Superior Court judge to make the Massachusetts Port Authority, which runs the airport, a party in the dispute between the taxi owners and limousine company.

Taxi stands across the city were vacant and dispatchers at three major cab companies — ITOA, Checker and Town Taxi — said yesterday morning no cabs were available because of the strike.

Police reported extra heavy commuter traffic on many major arteries because of the strike. Traffic also was reported heavy on public transit lines.

There was no immediate indication how long the strike might last. A spokesman for the drivers, Peter Trikolidis, said "we'll stay out as long as it takes to settle this thing.

At least one Boston hotel said it was arranging for special shuttle service to the airport.

Fights damper start of school

BOSTON [UPI] — Two black students were injured yesterday in separate racial fights at South Boston High School. One of the black students was arrested for allegedly punching a white nurse who treated a cut on his face.

The incident was the most serious of the new school year. It marred an otherwise peaceful day at the city's other schools during the first full week of the third year of court-ordered busing to integrate public schools.

Police increased patrols inside and outside the school as a result of the incidents.

School Department spokesman Thomas Loftus said attendance "looked good everywhere."

Loftus said the nurse was treating a 17-year-old black Hispanic student for a facial wound sustained in a stairwell scuffle at the rear of the school auditorium between white and minority students about an hour and a half after school began. When the nurse tried to stop the student from leaving her office, Loftus said she was punched in the eye.

The student was taken to City Hospital for treatment of the cut on his face and then taken to South Boston District Court where he was charged with assault and battery. Loftus said the nurse was treated for her injury at City Hospital.

A 16-year-old black Hispanic student was treated for minor facial injuries he received later in the day after allegedly being attacked by a group of white seniors at the school.

School officials said 755 students were in classes at South Boston High, 54 per cent of the projected enrollment figure of 1,389 students. The projected enrollment is not a firm figure since it does not include the number of students who have quit school, moved or transferred to private schools.

Attendance figures were up Monday as the first full week of school got under way, with 51,987 students — 76.8 per cent of the projected enrollment — attending classes.

Monday's citywide attendance was up 2.6 per cent over Friday and up 7.7 per cent over the figure on the comparable fourth day of classes last year.

Officials said 660 of 1,389 students assigned to "Southie" showed up for classes Monday as well as 140 youths whom officials said were not included in the original enrollment projections for the school.

Some 415 of the 660 registered students are white. The rest are minority students, most of them black.

Researchers discover solar greenhouse

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Hawaiian researchers said yesterday they have invented a new solar-powered still that works like a greenhouse to grow tomatoes, cucumbers and other fresh vegetables along barren ocean coasts or aboard ships at sea.

T.W. Speitel told an international oceans conference that greenhouse stills covering many acres may one day turn salt water into fresh and provide lush vegetable gardens in coastal areas where fresh water for growing food is scarce or nonexistent.

Similar gardens, he said, might be constructed aboard the fantails of ships at sea or on floating platforms anchored off the coast.

Speitel said vegetables in the greenhouse still would be planted in vertical columns of lava rock rather than in traditional rows on the ground. The still's design causes salt water evaporated at its base to produce a flow of fresh water down the columns.

recently forced to increase the mark-up a little.

According to Kerr, the market is currently $3,500 in the red.

She said the debt has accumulated over the months, and although she could not blame it on any one thing, she said factors such as a low mark-up in the past, spoilage, and over-stocking contributed to the present debt.

"Hopefully we can lower it (the mark-up) when we pay back our debt," she said while reminding "we're definitely non-profit."

Kerr said the market is encouraging feedback from students. There will be two meetings monthly, one on a Sunday night and one on a Monday night, beginning with a meeting next Monday night.

Everyone may come to the meetings if they want a voice in such things as the kind of products sold at the market, if they like or dislike any items now sold or if they want any new items sold.

Kerr said students will be the ones to decide what items will be sold and what will not. For example, she said, students might want more nutritional foods or possibly more convenience foods that would be more convenient to use on dormitory hot plates.

In any case, stop by and take a look. The market is located on the main floor of the Student Union next to the Commonwealth Room. Their hours are: Monday through Friday, 8:45 a.m. til 5:30 p.m., and Saturday, 11 a.m. til 5 p.m.

Support for Schorr

WASHINGTON [UPI] — More than 5,000 journalists from across the nation, including some of the most prominent in the print and broadcast media, urged the House Ethics Committee yesterday to drop its investigation of newsman Daniel Schorr and other reporters in connection with the leak of a secret report.

Newscasters Walter Cronkite and Dan Rather of CBS, John Chancellor of NBC and Washington Post reporter Carl Bernstein of Watergate fame joined with some 5,500 other journalists, movie actors and the AFL-CIO in signing petitions to the committee.

"The right to freedom of the press is being jeopardized by this congressional hearing. We urge that the committee's investigation into these reporters' and editors' confidential news source be stopped," the petition said. It was delivered on the eve of the committee's scheduled questioning of Schorr today.

The panel, under order of the House, has been investigating since June to determine who leaked the secret CIA report to Schorr, who in turn gave it to the Village Voice newspaper in New York for publication.

Also about heat, if you cannot pay the heating bill and there is someone very ill in the household and if the illness is verified by a registered physician within seven days from the date of the termination notice date, the electric company cannot shut the heat off. Certificates may be rejected if the term "serious" illness is not used, however.

You can help to keep down your utility bill if you conserve heat by using weather-stripping around windows and doors, turning the heat down when going to bed, turning off the lights when you go out (for security, leave at least one light on in the apartment when you go out at night). Other means of conservation suggested by the utilities companies are also helpful. This not only keeps your bills down, but persuades landlords to include utilities in rents.

Breaks

With all the bills you'll experience, it's nice to know that there are breaks on food prices in the Amherst area.

The Amherst coop offers food prices slightly above wholesale cost in return for a few hours work each month to keep the coop going. The coop is located in the basement of the Congregational Church in Amherst center, 24 Churchill St.

The Amherst coop is a pre-order coop, as compared to store-front coops which sell at higher prices to non-members, but are open business hours. A pre-order coop is one that is not open for business hours, only for picking up orders.

Other cooperative food outlets include: the People's Market located in the back of the Student Union Building; the Belchertown Coop on Rt. 9 at Rt. 202; Northampton Food Coop, First Congregational Church on Main St. in Northampton; and the Mixed Nuts Cooperative at Hampshire College.

There are also "grow your own" and "pick your own" alternatives in the area. One example is the Amherst Community Garden, with 20 by 20 foot plots available in the spring, summer and fall after plowing. The fee is $3 per season. Similar community gardens are on Mill Lane in Amherst and on No. Pleasant St. at North Village Apartments.

The Off-Campus Housing office in Munson Hall is primarily funded by student fees and sponsored by the Commuter Collective. It dispenses general information such as maps and housing date, and counsels prospective renters.

Another low-priced alternative, the Amherst Common Market, operates on the common in Amherst Center on Wednesdays from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. and Saturdays from 7 a.m. to noon.

The office has information on second hand furniture, housing complaints, short term housing, day care, subsidized housing, food coops and food stamps. It distributes pamphlets on subjects from discrimination in housing to a housing code checklist, which specifies what should be included in your apartment, and what must be in working order.

Those who want information or advice concerning leases, or any facet of off-campus life, should contact either the Off-Campus Housing Office at 545-0865, the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 or the Amherst Landlord-Tenant Relation Committee at 545-2097 or 549-1545.

at Mass PIRG, the attorney added that the organization is concerned with increasing the amount of student voter registrations.

"Students must recognize their power to vote as a group on social issues, by becoming a potent political force," he said.

Mass PIRG will also publish the results of several investigative reports this semester, including information on bank loan practices, consumer complaint handling, nutritional labeling and an analysis of the pricing practices of New England Telephone Company.

On an annual budget of about $160,000, Bogle said the organization relies heavily on student volunteers for their research projects. In fact, the regional agency is financed solely by students attending UMass, Hampshire College, Mt. Holyoke College, Westfield State College and Western New England School, by "choosing" to pay a small fee on their semester bill.

There are 18 Mass PIRG agencies, divided into three regions, which are under the auspicies of a student board of directors. This group decides which issues the organization will pursue, sets the goals to be reached, and assigns a staff member to develop expertise in that particular area, Bogle said.

Founded in 1972, and modeled after the social philosophies of consumer-advocate Ralph Nader, Mass PIRG has since sponsored numerous legislative bills and initiated local and state-wide improvements in environmental issues.

For example, Bogle said the organization has influenced the implementation of a sewer ban in Amherst.

"This town grew so quickly it outstripped the capacity of the tiny sewage treatment plant," he said.

The debate is 'Bardly' worth it

We are a nation of verbal illiterates. This sad certainty is keenly reflected in the oratorical ungainliness of the two major presidential candidates, Messrs. Ford and Carter. They are moderates, and moderacy hardly an eloquent firebrand makes. Adlai Stevenson's defeat in 1956 signaled the end of oratorical craftsmanship. The election road since then has been paved with 20 years of presidential prattle, sidestepping, banality, vagary, and deceit.

In two weeks the first Great Presidential Debate will take place. Indeed what would it sound like if the world's greatest speechwriter, Will Shakespeare, were alive to counsel the candidates before their ascension to the television stage?

Flourish (Enter)

Carter — "I think your country sinks beneath the yoke."

Ford — "Whither should I lose. I have done no harm."

Carter — "Done no harm? Alas poor country almost afraid to know itself. Plagued with unemployment and budget deficit. We are in debt, steeped in so far that we should wade no more."

Ford — "Aye, but returning were as tedious as go'oer."

Carter — "An open government and live press conferences I would restore. Where is Nixon's body? Stol'n away and fled, which puts upon you suspicion of the deal."

Ford — "We will proceed no farther in this business. As for you, there's no art to find the mind's construction in the face. That one may smile and smile and be a villain. At least I'm sure it may be so in Georgia."

Carter — (Aside) "Fie on it! Foul whisperings are abroad. Out, damned Kissinger! Out I say!"

Ford — "The saying is true — the empty vessel makes the greatest sound."

Carter — "There are no tricks in plain and simple faith."

Ford (Aside) "He wears his faith as is the fashion of his hat. And prithee Mr. Peanut from where your support, save the South?"

Carter — "The rest is labour, which is not used for you. Equity I prithee in tax reform is much needed."

Ford — "My ideas on tax legislation have by Congress gone unheeded."

Carter — "To borrow and to borrow and to borrow is ill-advised. Yet our national debt in '76 will reach new highs."

Ford — "Dangerous be the process wherefore both leader and Congress are of the same faction. For who will call your power to account?"

Carter — "My conscience is the thing ... "

Ford — "Wherein your powers will be extended to that of king. Alack, alack the day."

Carter — "Out vile jellyfish!"

Ford — "Bray on, bray on, if music be the food of love, bray on, you donkey."

Carter — "Ah, but music doth soothe the savage beast, 'cept in the case of your precious spouse."

Ford — "Damnable villain!"

Mediator — "Enough forsooth. Your time is done. You've given the nation your stands and views. And have afforded us some clues to the inevitable fact that no matter who wins, the nation shall lose." (Exeunt)

Commentary: Two views of Mao

The 'real politik'

By CLIFF SKIBINSKY

It is rather remarkable that since the death of Mao Tse Tung, hardly one derogatory thing has been said about the man. Remarkable in light of the fact that in the not-too-ancient past we were assured that the Chinese dragon was coiled ready to reduce the Western world to cinders, the remaining few hundred million Chinese taking over the white man's rule by default. This phenomenon is known as Real politik.

Although it is not popular to temper eulogies with truth, in this case, where the deceased was a super human figure, it is necessary that he be put in perspective. (The millions of Chinese pictures of Mao never depicted the wart on his chin. Yet the warts, internal and external should be exposed, not painted over as seems to have been done since his death.) Here was a man who murdered uncounted millions of people in order to preserve his regime. He possessed that particular sort of mentality which knows that anyone who offers the slightest threat to the ruler's power is better off dead.

By ruthlessly eliminating those who became too familiar with the throne, Mao became a solitary figure. With his amazing ability to mesmerize the masses, he created a personality cult which surpassed even that of Stalin. His influence was so enormous that he managed to subjugate fully one-fifth of the world's population, and, while the effort has not been totally successful, the rest of the world sees China as a grey mass 800 million strong, all thinking (if one can call it that) and acting under the sole direction of the Omnipotent Chairman.

While it certainly cannot be denied that China became much more self-sufficient in food and industry under Mao, it must still be asked whether it was worth the continual blood-shed, first in the creation of the system, and second in the process of "continual revolution" which Mao espoused, primarily as a method of eliminating competitors, as well as in the conversion of hundreds of millions into mindless automatons — without doubt, the most remarkable brainwashing success in history.

Western radicals are quick to praise the system, but they live in societies which tolerate their detractors. Communist officials in China sing the praises of Mao's creation because they must. And so do the Chinese people because they have never learned to say anything else. But those of us who believe in liberal Western democracy should not be blind to the realities of Mao's dictatorship.

It can be said with certainty that the cult of personality will collapse, as always happens. Any system which is based on one individual cannot endure after the individual's death. This has been proven in history by the cases of Bismark and Stalin, among others. No man could fill the void left by Mao, and the fighting among many little men to replace him will change China irreversably and perhaps even destroy China and the monolithic other half of the Communist super-power bloc.

This inevitable occurrence should serve to remind us of the superiority of the Occidental — particularly American-concept of a governmental system, in which laws and principles, not men, reign supreme. Laws and principles are immutable as long as they are obeyed and enforced. Leaders always die.

Mao Maoing the radical chic

By THOMAS MAJOR

Mathematicians tell us that if you put 100 monkeys to work with typewriters, sooner or later they will produce the Encyclopedia Britannica. But the chances are far greater that they will produce material for use by the Revolutionary Student Brigade, one of the louder nut organizations on campus.

The commentary on these pages yesterday by two of their ilk, Peter Kracht and Elliot Kass, was probably the most whitewashed version of the Chinese leader I have ever read. Their farewell to Mao was filled with so much nonsense, lies, and sheer dreams that to itemize each and every ridiculous statement would require more time than I have to waste.

But I left the comment speak for itself.

"Mao Tse-Tung was a man of great vision." So was another man who had a dream of a thousand-year empire, whose name was Adolf Hitler.

"Mao Tse-Tung has never ruled China." No, but I think he might have had a bit more, shall we say, influence than a peasant.

"Mao Tse-Tung was no rich politician." When you have dictatorial powers over a country of 800 million, you don't need that much money or political patronage to give out.

There are more. Pick the others out at your own leisure.

The fact that the Revolutionary Student Brigade lives in a fantasy world should surprise no one. They are representative of the small (fortunately) piece of this country's political spectrum who treats Mao's writings as if they were tablets recently arrived from the mountain. (But that would be inappropriate; no Maoist would be caught dead accepting something as bourgeois and capitalist and just plain tacky as Christianity.)

The fact that they live in this world of dreams should be greatly reassuring to the political structure they so despise, because as long as they dance around praising Mao and damning Ford, they cannot possibly in any way, shape, manner or form affect the mainstream of American political thought. Their dream world acts to keep the sane men out and the lunatics (or dreamers or both) encapsulated in tiny ineffectual groups like the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

And it is a pity. Because this country's present difficulties at home and abroad would give credibility to the radical cause, but the radicals are wrecking any possible change they might make someday in the system by destroying their credibility through their fervent embracement of countries like China and people like Mao Tse Tung. Their unquestioning thinking is infinitely more conformist in nature than the thinking of the Republican Party.

I suppose one day they will wake up to the fact that they will go nowhere in this country until they make sense, but from their reaction to the death of Mao, this day will be in the dim and distant future. And the bourgeois capitalists of the world (a cliche, but then the Revolutionary Student Brigade uses cliches in place of original thought) will breathe easier.

polemic poles

Pornography: Allow it or ban it?

Freedom of choice

By ALBERT SPARKS

Pornography has to exist if everything else is to exist. We are here to educate ourselves, not to inherit other people's hangups. We cannot allow groups of people to force their ideas on other groups of people; if we are to exist at all we must come to the realization that there is no such thing as limited freedom of speech, or limited freedom of choice. We have enough room on campus for all of us to co-exist.

Censorship is a bad word, and that meaning becomes even greater when used on the campus, a place where we are supposed to learn about life and the real world. We should leave here with some idea of what to expect in real America, not what someone feels it should be.

How can you and I understand if porno is good or bad if we are not allowed to experience it? But even if we are told what we can and cannot watch on campus, who will do the telling? I for one have never met such a person or groups of persons qualified to make that decision for me.

I am told by some students that only very HORNY men go see x-rated movies, and since these men have no girlfriends (which is why they came in the first place) they will get so horny during the movie, they will rush out and rape a woman — which is why we have a rape problem at UMass. Well in the light of this information, I will spread the work about masturbation, a technique which some of my friends tell me works rather well.

Now on the subject of pornography, feminism, and sexism. I would be the first to admit that women are oppressed here and everywhere else, but I disagree that pornography heads the list of the major causes of sexism. I do not attend a movie because I have some subconscious desire to see women degraded — in fact I can see nothing degrading about pornography. In fact, I have never seen anything on the screen that I haven't seen in person.

Are you aware that the Supreme Court of North Carolina recently ruled that two people could go to jail for performing an illegal sexual act in the privacy of his-her bedroom? Now, my question is; just what is an illegal act? Well don't worry because there are people who have decided what the norm is, and to prevent deviations from these norms — we have been blessed with censorship — Savior of mankind, protector of our moral fibers and all that other nonsense.

Some people see censorship as a way to protect our values, our way of life. But our way of life was founded on the principles that we all have freedom of speech and freedom of expression. And let's face it, those freedoms don't come cheaply. We have to co-exist with ideas and philosophies that we don't care for and as individuals we have the right to try to change those things that we find "offensive or degrading". But we do so by making the masses aware of our point of view, not by forcing our ideas on others. Better yet, "LET THE STUDENTS DECIDE".

Most of the x-rated movies shown on campus cost well over $300 to get. Figuring in other costs, at least 500 students have to see any given x-rated movie in order to pay for the movie. Now to me, 500 students is a good percentage of our student body. Does anyone on campus have the right to tell those students that their values are so deviant that they should be denied the right to see the movie of their choice?

Last semester I founded an organization, "Baroque Enterprises." Our main goal was to change some of the things at UMass that we didn't agree with. So, we decided to show some popular movies to raise funds. Our first problem was that there was a kind of unofficial censorship against certain movies. "Deep Throat" being one of them, so, we decided to show "Deep Throat." In a five hour period 2247 students came to see the movie, of which Baroque got about $600. So far we have spent most of the profits on programs that will help the student body. We have most of our money invested in a radio station in Washington Tower. We have financed two new student organizations, and we plan to try to set up a closed circuit T.V. station in Southwest next year. The cost to the student body won't be one cent. Most R.S.O. groups have fund raising activities, then take the money and run. We believe that it should go back to the student body.

Some people on campus seem to feel that oppression is the solution. They complain of being oppressed, but their solution is to become the oppressor. Which means that we will still have oppression, but with different characters. The whole question centers around the fact that most x-rated movies portray women as enjoying sex more than men, which is a distorted view of women in our society. There is no way to prove this. It is an idea, an opinion. Now, how do we deal with women who go to see pornographic movies? Are they too, out to see themselves degraded? Or do they have the freedom of choice?

Last year Baroque Enterprises attempted to show "Deep Throat" in Southwest, and was even willing to give the profits to Southwest area residents. We were told "NO", and a ban on x-rated movies was quickly passed. We tried to get a referendum to see how the residents of Southwest felt about this subject. I was personally told by the chairperson of the SWA, that he would not support such a move because "ONLY THE WRONG KIND OF PEOPLE WOULD VOTE". Now what is the "wrong kind of person"?????

I am constantly told that the goals of this university is to stop sexism, gay oppression and racial discrimination. Yet, some people will not talk to me because I support x-rated movies. Am I to assume that it's alright if I am black, that it would be alright if I slept with men, as long as I don't go to see certain movies, then I would be acceptable.

Exploitation for profit

By CHARLOTTE ALLEN

Show me a movie that portrays sex between people on an egalitarian, nonpopressive level, and we will have risen above the sludge called pornography.

To me, a porno flick is one which exploits the sexuality of people, particularly women, to the point that our existence is reduced to a purely sexual level.

It is not the sex on the screen that I object to but the way it is handled. Pornography exploits men's and women's bodies for the sole purpose of making money.

Men are exploited when a movie encourages them to be macho, the powerful man obsessed by his masculinity and the desire for sexual prowess. The image of the overly aggressive stud serves to objectify men, perpetuating the image that their brains are between their legs.

I would like to think that most men do not enjoy being thought of solely in terms of their genitals.

More importantly to me, porno perpetuates the male dominated and oriented society, continuing the image of women as sex objects. Every Amerikan institution perpetuates this phallacy — we don't need another oppressive organization on this campus.

UMass is an institution of 'higher learning' as they say. Most of us come here after high school, to learn the rationales behind social history and create better ideas for the future. Given our new freedom from our families, and an inexhaustable supply of educational materials, we have an opportunity to unlearn old ways and put our creative ideas into life.

Even though not everyone has developed a political analysis of the causes and effects of sexism, we have all heard the word and have a negative connotation of it.

Sexist society benefits only those who have a stake in assuring its continuation. Pornography is produced primarily by men, and it is being promoted by a group of men on this campus.

It is also a male power structure here at the university that could do something about banning porno from the campus.

Porno affects women more drastically than it does men. It is the rape, torture, murder and submission of women that is used as erotic stimuli. It is the women who are always on the bottom in a heterosexual setting. It is the women who are seen as perverse sickies in a lesbian affair.

The same way that the proliferation of violence on TV affects the attitudes and behavior of television watchers, porno influences the ways in which people think about each other and consequently, act.

I'm not saying that a man who has watched a porno flick in the Ballroom will drop his drawers at the end of the movie and grab the next woman he sees, but it does nothing but encourage him to look at women as mindless matter with a pair of legs, tits,and a pussy.

Statistics prove that the recent proliferation of porno is directly related to the increasing number of rapes and assaults upon women.

Given that people recognize the paradigm of sexism, why aren't they willing to deal with it effectively, to curb its sustainance and eventually, smash it? If people recognize the influence porno has on us, why won't anyone do anything about it?

If this university exists to teach people new ways, for the benefit of all, individually and collectively, why does there exist an RSO group that promotes porno for the sole purpose of making money?

There is no room or need for them on this campus. We should do everything in our power to ban it from campus. Some will say, 'who am I to dictate what people can see?' Censorship is a touchy subject that most liberals will not touch with a ten foot pole.

Well, I'm tired of all these marbled-mouths liberals who recognize the causes and effects of sexism, but do nothing about it. That's like saying 'I'm against the imperialist slaughter of the Vietnamese, but we have to defend our country.'

Who are you to advocate the banning of sexist films on this campus? You are a man or woman who is being blatantly oppressed by the sowing of this trash.

If there was an RSO group that wanted to show a flick advocating the lynching of blacks, they would be kicked out of the Student Activities office on their asses. The resistance to keep pornography out of the University is another indication of the reluctance to deal with women's struggles on a serious level. It is much easier to pay the women's movement lip service.

Either the campus' consciousness will be raised, or the roof will.

A lucky find

To the Editor:

The first person to read this column today may be treated to one of life's little pleasures: a free gift. I may have benefited from a stroke of good luck myself, but then I wouldn't have anything to give to my readers. Well anyway, I found a pot garden growing on campus in one of the most unlikely places. Let me give you a little background on how I discovered this highly sought herb.

I slept out in the Orchard Sunday night in my trusty hammock, watching shooting stars and swinging myself softly to sleep. When I awoke it seemed about time I took a shower, and if you know me, this proves to be a great event. So I hopped on my true blue 3-speed and booked down to the local watering hole, alias N.O.P.E.

Where I parked my bike is where I made my discovery. Imagine my conscience, debating whether or not to confiscate the delicately sought substance for myself or to wait a few days and let it grow into a bigger self.

Well, it is still there growing in the latest wave of good weather, and if you decide to break your own grass drought, then do as you may.

What I figure though, if that stash is growing so well there, who knows what other finds are forthcoming this harvest season. But one request, remember a friend in need of weed is a friend indeed. Agreed?

Shalom.

Mind manipulation

By STEVEN WHITMAN

Most of them are bright, personable college students. Overnight they vanish without a trace, only to surface months later with their personalities changed beyond recognition. They have become disciples of the scores of pseudo-religious groups proliferating today across the nation — Hare Krishna, Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church, the Children of God. And when they do come home, they revile their parents and families as devils.

Such is the scene sweeping across this and other countries, brainwashing unsuspecting youth with their lies and mind manipulation techniques.

Does it sound a bit far-fetched, a little unbelievable? The truth is that young people, usually depressed or just confused, are met by smiling, seemingly happy cult members who boast absolute answers to all the unanswerable questions which might be going through a young person's mind. Just as a good con man won't tell you that a car has a bad radiator, the cult doesn't tell you that they will make a deliberate attempt to erode your old loyalties.

Once assimilated into the group, the new members are kept in a confused state constantly sleeping short hours, eating poorly, allowed restricted sex, and never left alone for a moment. The new members are taken away from rational thought which creates a stripping of the ego defense mechanisms and are unable to question cult philosophy. At this point, the most tragic, a person has actually stopped thinking for himself, and accepts willingly the cult's ideology. Any feelings of personal pride or of loved ones are only the Devil creeping up and are to be suppressed.

An example of the deceptiveness of the cults is the Hare Krisna movement. Located in our Student Union, they talked cheerfully with students. They failed to mention the writings of their own literature, "One who is too much attached to society, friendship, and love is actually mad," and "No one is our father, no one is our mother, no one is our brother."

What is the future for these young people? A process called deprogramming has been developed by Ted Patrick. Parents kidnap their children from the cults and through the use of the technique, the young people are able to regain their reason and exercise free will. It requires about one year of therapy to recover, but the emotional scar is irreversable.

Many are not so lucky. Some have mental breakdowns while others still peddle the streets for their masters.

The main thing is to remember that these groups don't promise the freedom of religion. If you're in a state of mind where to doubt is sinful and you are afraid to let yourself speculate or wonder, I'd say you're brainwashed, wouldn't you?

Low tar less risk

COLD SPRING HARBOR, N.Y. [UPI] — Smokers of low tar and nicotine cigarettes run less of a risk of cancer and heart disease than those who smoke brands with high tar and nicotine content, cancer scientists said yesterday.

The Scientists stressed, however, that death rates among smokers of low tar and low nicotine cagarettes were "far higher" than the death rates of non-smokers.

Statistics supporting these findings were presented at closing sessions of a week-long cancer meeting at Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory and came from an analysis of deaths among one million persons over a 12-year period, Dr. E. Cuyler Hammond said.

Hammond and associates at the American Cancer Society, said deaths for "low" T-N-tar-nicotine-smokers from lung cancer were 26 per cent less than for "high" T-N smokers; for "medium" T-N smokers it was 10 per cent less.

Corresponding figures for heart disease were 8 per cent less for "medium" T-N and 14 per cent less for "low" T-N.

Hammond, in the report at an international conference on "The Origins of Human Cancer," stressed that death rates among smokers of the low tar and low nicotine cagarettes were "far higher" than the death rates of non-smokers.

Scientists defined "high" T-N as 2.0 to 2.7 mg. of nicotine and 25.8 to 35.7 mg. of tar. Low T-N was defined as less than 1.2 mg. of nicotine with most of them, the scientists said, delivering less than 17.6 mg. of tar.

Americans smoked 607.2 billion cigarettes in 1975, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, up from 541.3 billion in 1966.

Students needed to work with AES

On the UMass campus there is a tremendous opportunity for students interested in the arts (crafts, theatre visual art, music, writing, dance, etc.) on the community level.

The opportunity is through the Arts Extension Service (AES), one of the only organizations of its kind in the country. AES has put on one of the largest arts festivals in New England; published an Arts Directory of artists, craftspeople, performers, and writers; handled bookings for University artists (students and faculty) as well as artists throughout the community, and generally helped artists and over 100 arts organizations in as many ways as possible.

Students work with AES as interns, work-study assistants, and as volunteers. There are many existing ways in which students can participate such as researching art and artist sources, helping with arts bookings, coordinating a poetry broadside series, or begin working on the plans for the spring arts festival.

The possibilities are endless and the people at AES would welcome more student participation. Everyone is invited to drop by and see what's happening at AES, Draper Annex, or call Donna Stephenson at 545-2013.

Cuckoo's Nest opening tonight

The Fine Arts Center of UMass will inaugurate its 1976-77 season with the presentation of the award winning "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest", a play by Dale Wasserman from a novel by Ken Kesey.

The fully-staged Broadway show will appear for one night, tonight, at 8:00 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

The film of "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest" won five academy awards in 1975.

The action centers around a jailed con man whose game plan is to have himself committed to a mental institution. With success he comes into conflict with Nurse Ratched, the hospital ward supervisor-and more than he bargained for.

Tickets are now on sale for this play at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. Ticket prices are: general public, $7, 6, 5; UMass students $5, 4, 3, and other students and senior citizens $6, 5, 4. For information, call (413) 545-2511.

House may investigate sixties assassinations

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House probably will set up a special committee to determine whether investigations should be reopened into the assassinations of President John F. Kennedy, civil rights leader Martin Luther King and perhaps Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Sources close to the Democratic leadership said yesterday it will support a move before the House Rules Committee Wednesday for a 12-member study committee to make preliminary inquiries and make a recommendation in January. The Democratic-controlled Rules Committee ordinarily goes along with leadership requests.

If the study committee reports that sufficient information is available to justify, a full-fledged probe, sources said, it probably would be given a mandate to conduct the investigation during the life of the new Congress taking office in January.

A resolution introduced by Reps. Thomas N. Downing, D-Va., and Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Tex., for an inquiry into President Kennedy's assassination has been pending before the Rules Committee since March without action and without leadership support.

Members of the Congressional Black Caucus met with House leaders and reportedly obtained agreement on support for a committee with a mandate broadened to include the King assassination. The revised resolution, it was understood, also would authorize the committee to look into other crimes against public figures, which could include the Robert Kennedy case if significant information concerning it were developed.

Revival of official interest in the King assassination reportedly was due in part to efforts of the civil rights leader's widow, Coretta King.

The proposed 12-member committee, it was learned, would include four members of the Black Caucus.

A Senate inquiry into President Kennedy's assassination is also possible. Sen. Richard S. Schweiker, R-Pa., has asked the Senate Intelligence Committee to undertake a study and some preliminary investigations have been made.

Helpful booklet for Sunderland comers

About 1,000 copies of an 18-page illustrated booklet titled "Welcome to Sunderland" is being offered free of charge to all comers to this "Princess Town of the Pioneer Valley."

Produced as a community service by the First Congregational Church, here, the publication was designed primarily to aid the hundreds of new students who move into town every semester, as well as other new residents and visitors. The town plays host every summer to hostelers and every fall to foliage viewers.

The booklet is available for the asking at several locations in town, including the Town Hall, John & Rudy's Red and White Market, the Gallery of Homes realty office, library and the Post Office.

Features of the publication include listings of, "Where to go to get things done" and "Who's Who In Sunderland."

In addition, there is a brief history of the town, a map, and listings of available services and organizations, both civic and commercial.

The publication is a cooperative effort of church members meeting in a spring 1976 workshop for lay people seeking ways to increase the church's service to the community at large.

Placement available for student interns

Student Volunteer Services (SVS) is a student-initiated and administered program which serves as a referral agency to the various social service agencies in Western Massachusetts.

Although SVS is no longer a component of the now defunct OUTREACH Program, they are under the Office of Internships and still attempt to place students in part-time placements.

SVS attempts to offer part-time field practicums which enhance classroom reflection.

The office is located in 409 Goodell and is open from 9:300 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. daily. Counselors are available for assistance. Minorities and Third World students are particularly urged by the staff to take advantage of the part-time placements.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, September 15 — Born today, you possess an inquiring mind that keeps you forever poking and prying into questions both serious and otherwise. There is nothing too academic or too frivolous for you to deal with both intellectually and emotionally, for there is no end to your need to discover the "whys" behind any given thing. You can be very clever, shrewd, calculating and self-serving, but you can also be generous, sympathetic, understanding and helpful to others. The side of yourself you display at any particular time depends almost exclusively upon the degree to which you are interested in the project and the people at hand.

Although you are fond of change and often feel in need of involvement in several diverse activities at once, you are not a person troubled by confusion. You know what your goals in life must be; you know what your particular gifts are, how you must employ them and to what ends. The fact remains, though, that you find yourself sidetracked from time to time as you seek pleasures and fulfillments outside or beyond the given limits of your particular road to success.

Your need for a rational understanding of your own behavior may cause you at times to be more introspective than is good for you, especially from the point of view of your social life. Fond of people, inclined to be more than a little depressed when kept from their company, it is important to you that you should move in exciting social circles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Patience and considerable fortitude are needed if you are to get through a difficult day with both gain and stability.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Irritability signifies ill health. You may wish to consult a professional if you're not feeling up to snuff. Don't refuse help in the afternoon.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Allow your quick mind to work without interference from your emotions. Sentimentality can spoil things for you today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Take care that you don't follow another into failure. Employ your own methods in your own way for best results today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your sensitivity to slights may cause you embarrassment and another resentment. Take your time assessing your present feelings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Try not to be as open to outside influence as usual. This is a day for employing your own ways and means as much as possible.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Unless you properly interpret another's signs of distress, you may well mistake an inability for mere frustration. Take a closer look.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your remarkable memory stands you in good stead today as questions are thrown out and answers demanded.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Be quick to forgive -- but don't forget by which mistakes you were brought with another to the brink of failure. Reconsider in the evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Strong impulses are to be followed -- but only after proper preparation. To move too quickly is to invite disaster in the near future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — An unselfish approach to the establishment of a new friendship serves all concerned best. Be gentle in your dealings with the very young.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take care that you don't move too hastily early in the day to destroy all evidence of recent failure. Something must be salvageable.

'Reagan' calls Carter sharp

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [UPI] — Reagan thinks Jimmy Carter is sharp and Udall thinks President Ford is sharp. But that's Ronald Reagan Jr. and Kate Udall, the younger children of also-ran presidential candidates Ronald and Morris.

The pair are Yale freshmen this year and were interviewed jointly. "You know, Ford is sharp, but sharp in his own way," said Miss Udall.

"Yeah, sharp in a butter knife way," Reagan said.

"What do you think of Carter?" she asked.

"He's a real sharp politician, kind of scary," he replied.

They didn't hold to their father's views completely. Reagan said he disagreed with his father on the Panama Canal and marijuana. Miss Udall said she was "more extreme" than her father, but said her main disagreement with him was on women's rights.

"He could be a little more feminist activist."

Who would make a good president, other than the present candidates or the pair's fathers? "Jerry Brown, maybe," said Miss Udall. "William F. Buckley," said Reagan.

Patriots' fans sing blues; as BC's following grows

BOSTON [UPI] -- It hurts too much to be a Patriots fan. Every year, no, every game the followers of New England's pro football troop into Schaefer Stadium or settle in front of the television set expecting this to be the week when the Patriots snap out of a decade of doldrums.

The feeling was the same last Sunday for the 34,512 persons, smallest home crowd since Schaefer opened in 1971, who prepared for the expected miracle victory over the Baltimore Colts.

The pain was unbearable for those poor football freaks who had paid a good chunk of their salary to see the Patriots find another heartbreaking way to lose, 27-13.

Fans left the stadium slowly, grumbling now, "Things never change," or confiding to each other, Geez, they were awful in the second half."

Actually, the Patriots have disappointed their fans without letup for more than nine seasons.

Since finishing the 1966 American Football League season with an 8-4-2 record, the Patriots have not had a winning year. They have had nine straight losing seasons and have limped to a 37-89-1 mark, including last Sunday's 27-13 loss to Baltimore. Under Chuck Fairbanks, the Patriots are 15-28.

Yet every preseason, the fans are told the Patriots are on their way back. The advertising campaign to sell tickets just over half the stadium was filled Sunday calls the Patriots "The Youngbloods" and intimates the club will be exciting and competitive in 1976.

After one game, though, the Patriots again have proven to be discouraging and disappointing. They are not a team for a depressed person to watch.

"It's tough when you keep playing so hard and things don't go your way," said a despondent quarterback Steve Grogan after his four-interception performance against the Colts. "It's really frustrating. I played on teams like that in college Kansas State. We weren't bad, we had some good players and we'd play well but we'd go up against a big name team and we couldn't win.

"It's one of those things. We've got to keep believing in ourselves and keep trying to win. There's so much talent on this team and yet we don't win. You've got to believe we're going to get the breaks some time."

Already off to an 0-1 start, the Patriots must face three recent Super Bowl contenders in the next three weeks. They host Miami Sunday, meet the defending champion Steelers in Pittsburgh the following week, then entertain the awesome Oakland Raiders Oct. 3.

Just 14 hours earlier, 25 miles closer to Boston, another group of young football players laid every ounce of talent out for public inspection on the Astroturf of Boston College's Alumni Stadium. Unlike the Patriots, they finally grabbed the national respect that had eluded them for 25 years.

If the Patriots represented the depths of depression, the Eagles stood for the heights of happiness. They had played as hard as possible and believed right up to the moment, when a long field goal attempt nearly snatched victory for Texas, that they deserved to win.

Well schooled by coach Joe Yukica, the Eagles refuse to get cocky as well they might after winning what loomed as the toughest match on their 11-game schedule.

"But the win did show that we can play quality football with anybody," said Eagles' tackle Bill Ohrenberger.

The truth is that Boston College faces the remainder of its schedule with the attitude of a winner. The players know they have beaten one of the nation's best teams.

A Patriots win Sunday over Miami would be a similar ego boost for the patchwork Patriots. Another loss would leave the Patriots in a near-suicidal frame of mind as they have to prepare for the Steelers and Raiders.

Those distraught Patriots fans would be well advised to dye their Patriots jerseys a deeper shade of red, and become Boston College rooters. But to be a Patriots fan one must be part masochist. So chances are the hard core of followers will be back in Foxboro Sunday hoping for a miracle against the Dolphins.

"Crazier things have happened," said one fan as he finished drying his eyes last Sunday and began the 11-mile walk to his car. "Remember 1974 — when the Patriots beat the Dolphins here and went on to win six of their first seven games?"

The man epitomized the meaning of the word, "optimist." He obviously forgot that the Patriots, wracked by injuries, dropped six of the last seven games that fall and have not yet recovered.

But then after all those years of losing the big ones, Boston College came through. Maybe it could happen to the Patriots. Maybe, but not this year.

How bad will the Patriots miss Jim Plunkett this season? Many Patriots' fans are already singing the blues, as the team has shown little improvement lately. (UPI)

Finley hopes to sign holdouts

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Oakland owner Charlie Finley will meet Wednesday with Jerry Kapstein, advisor to five of the A's' top players, in an effort to get them to sign contracts and keep them from becoming free agents at the end of the season.

The five players Finley and Kapstein will talk about are pitcher Rollie Fingers, first baseman Gene Tenace, outfielders Joe Rudi and Don Baylor and Shortstop Campy Campaneris.

Rudi and Fingers had been sold to the Boston Red Sox for $2 million in June but the sale was voided by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and presently is being contested in the courts by Finley.

This marks the first face-to-face meeting in 18 months between Finley and Kapstein. Finley was to address University of Rhode Island students at nearby Kingston, R.I., Tuesday night and expressed a desire to meet with Kapstein Wednesday.

"I am hopeful we can make some progress on all five contracts but I know enough about negotiations with Charlie Finley not to predict the outcome," Kapstein said.

Delaware pioneers bets

DOVER, Del. [UPI] — The nation's first state-run football gambling operation returned up to $360.50 for a $1 bet on opening games of the National Football League season, state lottery officials reported Tuesday.

Lottery director Peter M. Simmons said the highest payoff was in "Touchdown," in which bettors picked point spreads on five games. The low $2 return was in the "football bonus" where players chose all the winning teams in a seven-game pool.

An "all-bonus" game paid $14 for each $2 bet picking winners in all 14 NFL contests.

Michener advocates collegiate subsidy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Author James Michener told a congressional committee Tuesday that pro football and basketball should pay colleges that develop their players an amount equivalent to that spent by hockey and baseball in subsidizing the minor leagues.

Michener, whose most recent book, "Sports in America," compared football and basketball to Michener also suggested that all professional sports be given the blanket antitrust exemption now enjoyed by baseball, expressing fear that recent adverse court decisions such as the striking down of the pro football college draft will create chaos.

"Something should be done to require football and basketball teams to turn bac': something to the colleges for using them as training grounds," he said in testimony before the special house committee on professional sports.

"I can't conceive of running an orderly league operation in which there is no contractual obligation... I think it would be disastrous... if the recent decision brings about chaos, then I think Congress would have to step in," the author of "Tales of the South Pacific" and "Hawaii" commented.

Rep. B.F. Sisk, D-Calif., Chairman of the House panel, also expressed belief that Congress might have to take action to allow professional sports to set up some basic ground rules in dealing with the players.

Buckeyes grab top spot

NEW YORK [UPI] — Ohio State, without the slam-bam glamor of Archie Griffin, held a slim six-point lead over second ranked Michigan Tuesday in the college football's first weekly ratings by the UPI board of coaches.

The Buckeyes' 49-21 pummelling of Michigan State Saturday earned Ohio State 16 first place votes and 349 points in the weekly balloting by United Press International's board of coaches. Michigan was named the top team by 17 coaches as it gained 343 points.

Some observers say Coach Woody Hayes eased up on Michigan State as perhaps his way of atoning for flowing the whistle last month on the Spartans for recruiting violations. Conversely, others claim that the court's failure to reinstate six Michigan State players involved in the recruiting flareup prevented the Spartans from making it a close game.

UCLA made it to third after its upset of highly rated Arizona State as the Bruins received 254 points, while Tony Dorsett's manhandling of Notre Dame in a 31-10 rout propelled Pittsburgh into fourth with 246 points. Pitt received four first place votes while UCLA had one top ballot.

Oklahoma was the only other team to receive a first place vote as the Sooners rode a 24-3 victory over Vanderbilt to fifth place. Missouri gained the No. 6 ranking after Curtis Brown led the Tigers to a 46-25 romp over Southern California.

Penn State was rated seventh, Nebraska, held to a 6-6 tie by Louisiana State, was eighth, Georgia ninth and Texas A&M 10th.

Maryland headed the second 10 followed by Arkansas, Alabama, LSU and Boston College in the 11th through 15th ratings. Texas Tech, Kansas, North Carolina tied for 16th, Southern California was 19th and Oklahoma State 20th.

Of the teams voted among the top 10 in preseason ratings, Alabama, Texas, Arizona State and Southern California were missing from the elite grading in the first regular season balloting, being replaced by UCLA, Missouri, Georgia and Texas A&M.

The Program of the Year isn't on TV. It's in the Air Force ROTC.

Look into the Air Force ROTC. And there are 4-year, 3-year, or 2-year programs to choose from. Whichever you select, you'll leave college with a commission as an Air Force officer. With opportunities for a position with responsibility... challenge... and, of course, financial rewards and security.

The courses themselves prepare you for leadership positions ahead. Positions as a member of an aircrew... or as a missile launch officer... positions using mathematics... sciences... engineering.

Look out for yourself. Look into the Air Force ROTC programs on campus.

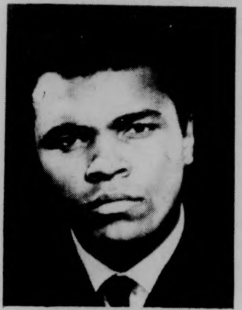
Ali, Louis team for Norton spar

KIAMESHA LAKE, N.Y. [UPI] — Joe Louis moved into the heavily guarded complex housing Muhammad Ali, as the World Heavyweight Champion continued his rigorous training Tuesday in preparation for the defense of his crown against Ken Norton at Yankee Stadium on Sept. 28.

"Joe Louis is my idol," Ali proclaimed to more than 400 fans who jammed into the gymnasium at the upstate resort where he is quartered. "From the belt up, he was everything I was. But that's where I had him, the feet. With speed. I'm the fastest man ever in the history of the boxing game."



Muhammad Ali

Louis was up at 4 a.m. helping to supervise Ali's five-mile roadwork stint along with former olympic track star Ray Norton. At noon Louis went into the gym ahead of Ali, the crowd recognized the former titleholder and gave him a standing ovation.

Once more Ali, who appears to be calling all the shots when it comes to conditioning, elected to forego a boxing lesson. Instead he put in 10 rounds of intense work on the heavy bag, light bag and rope skipping. Ali once again explained that sparring is secondary and that he wished to concentrate on timing and building his endurance."

"Mentally and physically, I'm ready right now," Ken Norton said Tuesday after an exhausting workout in preparation for his Sept. 28 fight against heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali at Yankee Stadium.

"I'd like to be a little sharper with my boxing but I've never felt this good.

"I'm gonna put something on his cabbage head," added the 31-year-old ex-marine. "He's going to be punished. I'll get stronger as the fight goes on. I've trained for a hard 15-round fight.

Jersey into sports gambling?

TRENTON, N.J. [UPI] — If New Jersey decides to launch a sports betting pool, it won't be until next football season, the chairman of the state lottery commission said Tuesday.

"Sports betting is heaviest around the football season. We're too late for this year," Commissioner Henry Luther explained after a commission meeting. "If we decide to go with it, we would have to make a decision by early next year so that we could have it set up by August."

The commission is deciding whether to follow Delaware in setting up a sports lottery on pro games. The commission heard testimony from Mathematica, Inc., the company which devised and operates the Delaware venture.

Luther said he asked Attorney General William Hyland for an opinion on the legality of a sports lottery.

If it is within the scope of New Jersey law, Luther said, the commission will have to determine whether it would generate enough revenue to make a sporting pool worthwhile and whether it would be successful enough to cut into the profits of the illegal betting racket.

Goolagong to be sued

NEW YORK [UPI] — A $34,800 suit charging breach of contract was filed Tuesday against tennis superstar Evonne Goolagong Cawley by her former manager.

Papers filed in Manhattan Supreme Court showed Mrs. Cawley was served with the suit Sept. 10 at the west side tennis club in Forest Hills, where she was beaten in the title match of the U.S. Open by Chris Evert.

The suit was based on a claim by Vic Edwards, her former manager and coach, who said Mrs. Cawley discharged him by letter July 7, 1975 "without cause."

According to the suit, Mrs. Cawley had contracted with Edwards for his services until June 30, 1976, for which he claims he is owed $34,800 for the period from July 1975 to the end of the contract.

Fairly, 38, had been with the Cardinals since being acquired from Montreal prior to the 1975 season.

Phils pulling away... Buccos lose again... A's lose more ground

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Pinch-hitter Tony Taylor singled home the middle run in a three-run fifth inning last night which brought the Philadelphia Phillies a 3-2 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Earl Williams hit his 14th homer after a Tim Foli single to put the Expos on top 2-0 in the fourth after both teams went hitless through the first three innings. Greg Luzinski and Dick Allen walked to open the fifth and Ollie Brown singled to load the bases for the first hit off starter loser Woody Fryman.

After Larry Bowa forced Luzinski at the plate, Allen scored as Bob Boone grounded into a force at second. Taylor batted for winner Jim Lonborg and singled to left, scoring Brown and Boone crossed with the third run when Garry Maddox extended his hitting streak to 10 games with a double.

Ron Schueler and Ron Reed blanked Montreal the rest of the way, with Reed hurling the last two innings to pick up his 14th save.

Bud Harrelson's force out grounder scored John Stearns with the winning run last night to highlight a two-run ninth inning rally which gave the New York Mets a 4-3 victory over Pittsburgh and dropped the Pirates back to six games behind Philadelphia in the National East Pennant Race.

Trailing 32- Dave Kingman opened the ninth for New York off Jim Rooker with a single, moved to third on Stearns' single and came home on pinch-hitter Ed Kranepool's single off reliever Kent Tekulve. Harreslon then grounded to second and beat out a double play attempt when shortstop Frank Taveras' throw to first was wide, allowing Stearns to score with the winning run.

A throwing error by Chicago catcher Jim Essian allowed Kansas City's Hal McRae to score from third base in the fourth inning yesterday and the Royals held on to defeat the White Sox 2-1.

McRae led off the fourth with a double and moved to third on Al Cowen's infield hit. Cowens stole second and when Essian's throw sailed into center field, McRae scored.

Kansas City opened the scoring in the first when George Brett tripled home Amos Otis. Chicago tied the score in the third when Alan Bannister's double tt right scored Essian. Essian singled and went to third on Ralph Garr's hit. Garr was thrown out at the plate as he attempted to score on Bannister's double.

Andy Hassler went the distance for his fifth win against 10 losses. Terry Forster, in relief in of rookie Larry Monroe, who made his first majro league start, suffered his 12th loss in 14 decisions.

Dan Ford singled home Craig Kusick in the ninth inning yesterday to give the Minnesota Twins a 4-3 win over the Oakland and a split of a doubleheader after the A's won the first game, 4-2.

Gene Tenace hit his 20th homer and drove in three runs and Vida Blue scattered eight hits for the A's opening game victory.

With the score tied 3-3 in the second game, Kusick led off the ninth with a double off loser Paul Lindblad. Mlke Cubbage beat out an infield single and Ford lined the first pitch off reliever Jim Todd into center field for the winning run.

Judge Bryant's mistake

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Last week, a monumental court decision affecting professional sports was handed down by US District Court Judge William Bryant. Bryant ruled that pro football's annual college draft is a blatant and "most pernicious" violation of Federal antitrust laws and struck it down as illegal.

The decision all came about from a suit filed by Jim "Yazoo" Smith, the Washington Redskins' No. 1 jraft choice in 1967. Smith, a graduate from Oregon State, filed suit against the NFL because he contended that the draft illegally kept him from bargaining effectively with other football teams.

By setting up such a system of being able to bargain with several different teams, a player has the opportunity to sign for more money. If the player is truely outstanding, a bidding war will exist among the teams in the NFL, and the player can really cash in.

Under the old NFL draft system, a player who was drafted by a team could only deal with that one team and no others. So once you are drafted by a team, you are stuck with that team whether you like it or not. The team would more or less dictate your pay.

However, the monetary aspect of the decision is really a minor detail in this court ruling. The real potential damage that can come about from this ruling may affect the college football scene.

For example, let's say that there is an outstanding football player at the University of Texas. If he is a football legend at Texas — nearly everybody is — he would probably want to play for the Dallas Cowboys after his college career.

The pro teams realize this potential situation and they are circling like hawks ready to swoon in for the kill. If it is the case that a lot of football players from Texas go on to paly for the Cowboys, what is to prevent the Dallas Cowboys from making the University of Texas its minor league affiliate?

These professional football teams could seep down into the college ranks and poison collegiate athletics by turning them into farm teams. Such a situation would be ideal for the pros because they would have to incur so few expenses since the colleges are the ones picking up the tab anyway.

College football teams would have no identity of their own. They would lose control to the professional teams, and who really needs them sticking their nose into college athletics?

With all the big time football powers in the South, Midwest and Far West, how could teams like the Patriots, Buffalo Bills or Seattle Seahawks intice the best players to play for their team?

If Judge Bryant's decision is upheld, pro football will have gone way beyond its powers. NFL teams will turn colleges into farm teams, and will begin to recruit high school players to play for their college farm team.

It is that old story again where the rich teams will be getting richer, and the poorer one, well they'll be non-existant some day.

Too far 'behind'?

There's been a controversy in the newsroom. It could be that it's been discussed outside the Collegian staff as well.

Monday's sports pages exhibited a picture of Toledo cheerleaders with skirts pulled up, exposing pantalooned rearends proclaiming "go Rockets". You really should see it to get the full effect — that is, of blatant sexism.

Sexism, as in the perpetuation of women as pieces of meat to be watched and ogled. These women willingly put themselves "on display". But who's to say that the press should not try to censor these perpetuations, despite these willing "victims" ignorance?

Some say that it's trivial to make any issue of the photo. They say that it's a gimmick and that the cheerleaders did it willingly. Some people don't know that a male photographer asked these women to "expose" themselves, and that another of their squad refused, not wanting to participate.

Some people say that it's silly to discuss the photo because it probably went unnoticed by women readers. ("For every woman you find that was offended, I'll find one who doesn't even care.") I feel that many women — especially on this campus — did label the photo as sexist and felt it shouldn't have been run.

But regardless of the pros and cons, shouldn't we as a consciously aware staff try to avoid sexist copy and photos, also ads? Shouldn't we as decision-makers draw the line?

Someone said that we, as a newspaper representing all the members of the University population, should cater to that population, both sexist and non-sexist (!!!). Which I guess means that it was O.K. to perpetuate things like this?

So now, according to that theory I guess we should also run lots of racist stories and photos because, after all, there is plenty of racism on campus. And let's see, we also have perverts and rapists and....

Anyway, I just want to voice what I think we should try to achieve as decision-makers and also as concerned people in the sports department.

Actually, I hate to think what might have happened had I been here to be heard about the picture. The pros of the picture being entered outweighed the cons. It makes you think....

Alfange hosts debate

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

Provost Dean Alfange, Jr. and adjunct lecturer Richard Webb had a "lengthy constitutional debate" in Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's Whitmore office yesterday, said Webb.

As a result of the one and one-half hour debate-discussion Alfange agreed to send 10 copies of a chapter of Webb's recently published book on nuclear power to 10 constitutional scholars and historians across the country. The chapter from "The Accident Hazards of Nuclear Power Plants" deals with the constitutionality of federal influence on nuclear power research.

Webb contends that the indirect control of research on nuclear power by the federal government violates the constitution. He has stated, through control of research funds the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) and the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) have fostered pro-nuclear power research and all but stamped out honest evaluative efforts in the field.

Webb's lecturer position does not pay him and he claims to find it very hard to get a job in the nuclear power research field because of his anti-nuclear power stance. His wife is working in the Amherst Nursing Home and they have no place to live. The last two nights he and his wife and two sons have spent in motels. Webb had his two sons Ricky, aged nine, and Gene, aged 6 with him while he was seeing Alfange because they are not allowed to attend school because the family has no permanent residence.

Last semester he survived through a research grant, but that has since expired.

The Physics Department chairperson has endorsed a research proposal of Webb's presently before the ERDA and Webb claims to have Congressman Silvio O. Conte lobbying on his behalf.

Webb claims however, that he already believes his proposal will be turned down because of the critical questions he has been raising at federal nuclear power hearings for the past six years.

"I'm asking the university to review the merits of my arguments, not just give a simple line endorsement," he explained.

Webb was looking to speak with Bromery because "he is ultimately responsible for the University."

Webb said, "I got nowhere with deans. I think research priorities must be reordered and reviewed. I've come here by way of appeal."

The two major contentions Webb has continually raised in his research are: 1) Predictions concerning accident prevention measures for nuclear power plants have continually been inadequate, and, 2) universities have let the federal government make decisions about nuclear power research by submitting to federal criteria in order to obtain research money.

He covers the first point at length in his book yet he claims it is only an outline and in depth work still needs to be done.

As a case in point he says nuclear reactor designers must deal with design basis accidents.

Recently the NRC ordered that a core melting event does not have to be considered as a design basis accident. If the core of a nuclear reactor melted, the compaction of fuel would cause a fantastic explosion, Webb contends. He argues that it is absurd to simply avoid dealing with a core melting event.

He further argues that setting a standard that a nuclear power plant should be able to contain an explosion equivalent to 500 pounds of TNT is meaningless if core melting is not taken into account, because there is no way to tell if the event would yield an explosion equivalent to less than 500 pounds of TNT.

He said the brunt of his work is that calculations of many scientists cannot be justified because of straightforward omissions.

"My first hurdle is to get the university to agree that I have a valid question," Webb said.

"Assuming they can see that, I have to get the university to reflect that they're responsible for the advancement of knowledge," Webb continued.

He explained that universities are not living up to that responsibility by submitting to federal constraints on research.

Alfange said Webb's argument was not without validity.

"There is some truth to what he says, but that is not to say that his argument can be carried to an infinite extreme. A university will do the kinds of research that can be supported," Alfange explained.

He said he would like to think that UMass has a healthy balance of research.

Webb contends that his book is allowing him to be heard throughout the world but he still cannot get a post anywhere and support himself so he can continue his work.

He said he wouldn't like to see his book become a rallying point for nuclear power critics and nuclear power concerns should be discussed rationally. Civil disobedience, he explained, "doesn't help people assess the problem". Instead, he advocates teach-ins and education concerning the constitutional angle of nuclear power research.

Alfange said he plans to send copies of Webb's constitutional argument to "leading constitutional law scholars and historians across the country" but he had no one specific in mind.

Senate loses input into UMass budget

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

The UMass Undergraduate Student Senate last night was told the present restructing of the University's budget schedule would remove the Senate's ability to effectively challenge the Administration's rent and fees budget figures this year.

The University is shifting to a multi-year budget schedule, requiring this year's budget to be completed by October 22.

In previous years the budget was not due until the spring semester, giving student committees ample time to refute the administration's figures and come up with proposals of their own.

However, this year's proposed budget will be issued to students on Oct. 15, leaving students only seven days to prepare alternatives.

Rents and Fees committee member Sue Ellen Smith said "with only a week available to come up with alternatives the time limit ties our hands to develop any changes" in the University's schedules.

Smith termed the limit "really constraining", but assessed the limit as an immovable one, facing University department chairpersons as well as students.

The Senate was to hear arguments on several motions which were tabled until next week's meeting because of a lack of senators available to establish a quorum.

The motions included: the election of a new treasurer to replace Henry Doyle, who resigned at last week's meeting, the funding of Nummo News, and a proposal to amend the Senate constitution, reducing the size of the Senate from 110 to 80 members.

Last night's meeting with only 29 Senators present was unable to meet the 39 needed to establish a quorum.

One Senator remarked during the tabulations to determine a quorum size, "We don't represent our constituency anyway so what difference does it make how many of us are here".

The Senate announced elections for seats will be held on Sept. 27 and 28. Nomination papers for prospective Senators are due in the Senate offices at noon on Sept. 22.

In addition to the report from the Rents and Fees Committee, the Senate heard reports from the Governmental Affairs Committee, the Finance Committee, and the acting Treasurer, Thomas Kerrins.

Karl Allen, chairperson of the Governmental Affairs Committee, announced the granting of Recognized Student Organization (RSO) status to the following groups: the UMass Democrats, Third World Women's Center, Afro-American Society, and the Crew Club.

The Republican Club was granted temporary RSO status, which will be re-evaluated upon the revisal of their constitution.

Allen also noted the polls will be open for students to vote in the upcoming Senate election. The polls will be open in all dormitories from 4 to 10 p.m. while Commuter times are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in front of the Hatch.

Allen told the senate of alleged abuses of the Legal Services Office by students enrolled in the Division of Continuing Education. He mountains that in the past Continuing Ed. students who needed legal advice "ran to Whitmore and paid their Student Activities Tax" in order to qualify for free legal services.

In order to rectify what he said "overburdens the system," Allen proposed limiting the access to student government services and jobs to students who are carrying at least nine credits.

The University requires that students complete nine credits a semester to be considered full-time students.

Exile exposes Chilean unrealism

By MATT LYON

Osiel Nunez, an exile from the Chilean junta, said yesterday there are nearly 8,000 people being detained by the junta because of their political beliefs.

Speaking at a press conference in the Campus Center, Nunez said he was held in various prisons and had been subjected to many forms of torture.

Nunez, a high ranking student leader under Salvatore Allende's Popular Unity government, was arrested in Sept. 1973 during a military assault on the State Technical University.

Thirty people were killed and 1,000 injured in the confrontation, according to Nunez.

After a massive international effort, Nunez was released from prison late last year, but was not allowed to leave Chile.

The military junta finally granted permission for him to leave for Mexico this April.

"Although the Chilean Junta has made gestures toward changing its policy of trampling on human rights, it continues, daily, to violate the freedom and liberty of the people of Chile," said Nunez through an interpreter.

Nunez said the secret police (DINA) has refused to give any information about 2,500 people who have disappeared since 1974.

There are witnesses who claim to have seen many of these people being detained by the police prior to their disappearance, said Nunez.

It is common practice, Nunez said, for the secret police to detain people suspected of having knowledge detrimental to national security.

People are often arrested and charged with conspiring to gain intelligence information, a fabrication which is used by the junta to round up any dissident individuals, said Nunez.

"It has been discovered that these round-ups often result in the assassination of thousands of comrades," said Nunez.

In Chile, Nunez said, "the university has been destroyed. There is a police unit that has recently been responsible for expelling 35 per cent of the faculty, 20 per cent of the student body, and 10 per cent of the professional staff, throughout the nation's eight universities.

"The departments of history and sociology have been eliminated from the university, as is the case with anything that deals with the national reality," said Nunez.

The junta has established in the University a chairmanship of national security, to be filled by a military man "whose mission is to introduce fascist values," Nunez said.

"In the libraries, all books with a Marxist perspective have been eliminated, as have all readings which deal with world reality and Latin American reality. There are restrictions on the length of hair that can be worn, and on the length of skirts, said Nunez.

In 1976 the total budget for all eight of the nation's universities amounted to 1.8 per cent of the national budget. In 1973, prior to the coup, the University of Chile's budget alone was 3.5 per cent of the national budget, said Nunez.

The total number of students applying to Chilean universities now is 40 per cent lower than the number in 1975, a year which had seen even sharper decline, said Nunez.

"The unemployment rate has risen under the junta to its present level of 25 per cent, leaving nearly 2.5 million people with no regular income. Malnutrition is wide-spread, and the infant mortality rate has increased sharply in recent years," said Nunez.

Nunez called for the American people to "make sure that not one single dollar more reaches the fascist junta."

Police recover wheelchair stolen from SW

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

A $500 wheelchair, stolen from the Southwest area early Monday morning was recovered by University police Tuesday night, according to a police spokesperson.

A call from a member of the Theta Chi Fraternity, 496 N. Pleasant St. directed police to the wheelchair. It was reportedly hidden in bushes on the northeast side of Mahar auditorium.

Captain Robert G. Joyce of the Department of Public Safety thanked the Collegian and the University community, on behalf of the owner, for the return of the wheelchair.

Breaking and Entering

Early Tuesday morning University police investigated a breaking and entering attempt at Hills House North. Screens were cut in two separate office windows, but entry was not gained.

Vandalism

A 1974 Toyota received $500 in damages to the windshield and dashboard Tuesday evening in lot 50. Damages were caused by a weight believed to have been thrown from the 19th floor weight-room window of Washington Tower.

Police were told that another weight was thrown from the north side of Washington Tower last week.

The Northeast side of the Campus Center auditorium was reported vandalized at 11:30 p.m. Tuesday evening. The door to the auditorium had been left open because of a smoldering waste-basket, and when the complaintant returned a short while later the fire hose at the top of the stairwell had been turned on and the floor was covered with two inches of water.

Damage estimates were still being compiled.

Triumph Stolen

At 4:30 p.m., Tuesday, a 1969 Triumph, valued at $1,450 was stolen from lot 13 near the Physical Plant. The vehicle was unlocked.

Union meets to face problems within Public Health Dept.

By JEAN CONLEY
Staff Reporter

Poor advising, a lack of student representation and dissatisfaction with the curriculum in the Public Health Department led students to organize a union in that department two years ago, according to Deirdra Scott, an organizer of the union.

Scott said that since the inception of the Public Health Undergraduate - Graduate Union (PHUGU), major changes have been made in departmental requirements, and the Generalists program was prevented from being dropped.

The Generalists program is a general background approach to Public Health with no field training or student teaching required.

PHUGU will hold its first meeting of the semester tonight in room 122 Draper Hall, to discuss present problems in the department and to hold elections. Members will also be able to assign themselves to task forces for the semester.

Different problems face the department this semester, Scott said, including the omnipresent lack of faculty which results in "seniors fighting to get into the courses necessary to be graduated with a Public Health degree.

Scott is upset about freshmen not being able to get into introductory Public Health courses.

"These are the courses that help one to grasp the concept of public health and allow one · the opportunity to select certain aspects of public health to focus interest on," she said.

The only requirement for inclusion in the union is a willingness to participate, and attendance at union meetings.

Wood fails to show at lunch date

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Dudley Phillips IV, former UMass graduate student, student activist, and Collegian columnist, yesterday waited to no avail in the Hatch for UMass President Robert C. Wood to join him for lunch.

Phillips, last spring, invited Wood to lunch in the Hatch, a symbolic gesture intended to open the lines of communication between the President and the students. Wood never responded to the invitation, and he did not appear yesterday because he is in Japan on a goodwill mission to Hokkaido University.

The invitation came at a time when relations between administrators and students at the University were strained. The claim at the time was that direct communication between students and the officials who run the University was all too infrequent.

"I guess we frightened him so much that he had to run off and go to Japan," Phillips joked yesterday.

Striking a more serious note, Phillips said if Wood "is going to continue to concentrate all the power and the decision-making in the Boston office, then he is going to have to improve communication with the main University campus."

Phillips was a member of the Campus Center Board of Governors and an economic advisor to former SGA President John O'Keefe.

He and O'Keefe previously had met with Wood in 1973 to discuss the same communication problem. Phillips said yesterday that the discussion then centered around the Wellman Document, which states that various campus groups should have input into the President's office for the purpose of decision making.

Phillips said that Wood admitted at that time that the system was not working.

Phillips said that nothing was done about alleviating the problem at that time. "Because of this," he said, "governments and groups on this campus are falling apart because the feeling is that they are doing nothing. The SGA lacks the students support and the faculty is turning away from it's senate and seeking the Massachusetts Society of Professors."

"Perhaps the biggest problem on the campus is the lack of stable budget, yet many people come up with ideas for raising funds from business and the government and they are not even considered, said Phillips.

Phillips also said that the trustees also are isolated from the campus in areas other than financial. He said that if Wood is to communicate the needs of the community he should familiarize himself with the problems of the students.

Philips, long behind the student cause as he sees it, has given up the fight, and last night he left the campus for good, disillusioned by the lack of people "willing to solve problems." Phillips said he was frustrated by the heavy bureaucracy, the shuffling of the administration and what he feels is the lack of concern for students problems.

Help for campus women offered by two programs

By MARY BETH ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Two programs aimed at helping graduate women students cope with unique problems will begin next week.

An assertiveness training workshop and three monthly discussion groups make up the program, which is sponsored jointly by three campus organizations.

The Graduate Student Senate, the Women's Studies department and Everywomen's Center are sponsoring the two programs to help female graduate students learn to assert themselves more in their personal and professional lives, and to provide support groups so that women can compare and discuss problems.

"In graduate school, both the faculty and student body are male-dominated," said Anne McComb, organizer of the assertiveness training workshops.

"You have to be pretty aggressive to succeed. It is a very stressful situation for women, when they are trying to combine school with marriage and families. The situation is particulary hard on single mothers returning to school."

The assertive training course will stress being more aggressive with professors and fellow students, as well as teaching women to feel comfortable making demands on their families in regard to helping with household chores, said McComb.

"We want to help women avoid the feminine pitfall of being passive in the aggressive graduate school atmosphere," said McComb.

"At the same time, we want to try and keep them from becoming hostile," she explained.

The program will consist of two five week workshops, one beginning on September 2[illegible] and the other on November 3. The groups will consist of between ten and twelve students, and there are still openings, said McComb.

There is a $15 fee for the course, and although graduate students will be given priority, undergraduate students may sign up if space is available, said McComb.

Barbara Stack, Secretary of the graduate student senate, described the goal of the monthly discussion groups as "getting women together to talk with each other.

We hope a side effect of these discussions will be to get women to see the problems they share, since many women experience the same things in graduate school, said Stack.

The discussion groups will meet September 23, October 21, and November 18, on the same day, Thursday, and the same time, 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. All groups will be held in the sixth floor lounge of Thompson.

Speakers to offer job hunting hints in Mahar Auditorium

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

Students who will be entering the job market next year should begin preparing themselves immediately, said Dr. George Odiorne, dean of the UMass School of Business Administration.

Odiorne is one of two scheduled speakers at today's "How to Get a Job" workshop to be conducted in Mahar auditorium at 3:30 p.m.

He is a former personnel manager with General Mills and author of Effective College Recruiting, regarded as one of the leading books on the subject of personnel selection.

Clark Edwards, coordinator of the credentialing service in the UMass placement service, will also conduct a workshop explaining how to use the service and the importance of such a service.

Both Odiorne and Edwards said they will stress the importance of beginning the search for employment early.

The workshops were organized by Ronald Albert, a graduate student, who said he did it because he too is looking for a job.

Albert plans another workshop for an Oct. 7 entitled "How to Write a Resume."

Odiorne stressed that although the workshops are aimed to the current crop of seniors, they can prove a valuable experience to other students who are not immediately concerned with the job situation.

Albert stressed the need for student input in future programs and asked for increased student participation in organization of these seminars.

The students who are genuinely interested in programs of this nature should contact Albert or Edwards.

They said that the programs organized will be based on the student response and suggestions received.

Edwards' workshop will deal, in part, with which areas are of interest to prospective employees.

Delay in Tuesday's Democratic vote tally

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

The final outcome of Tuesday's Democratic first district Congressional primary will not be known until next week when a recount of the vote is completed.

Official figures of the vote count show that Edward O'Brien of Easthampton defeated Edward McColgan of Northampton by a scant 29 votes — one of the closest races in the history of the state.

Marcia Goldstein, press secretary for the McColgan campaign, said yesterday that her candidate would petition Secretary of State Paul Guzzi for a recount of the vote. Because petitions will not be submitted to Guzzi until Monday, the recount will not occur until later next week.

It had been reported in the Collegian that 235 uncounted absentee ballots from Pittsfield could hold the balance in the election, but it was later learned all of the Pittsfield votes had been counted.

The final vote was 19,637 for O'Brien and 19,608 for McColgan. The eventual winner will face incumbent Silvio Conte (R-Pittsfield) in the November 2 election..

The complicated procedure for getting a recount involves gathering 10 signatures from each town in the district with a population of under 2500; 10 signatures from each ward of each city in the district; and 10 signatures from each precinct in each town with a population of over 2500.

There are 88 cities and towns in the 1st district, which is the largest in the state.

Goldstein said that the deadline for filing the petition with Guzzi is 5 p.m. Monday.

Officials from both campaigns must witness the recount, so it could take some time before the recount is finally completed.

In other races, Cong. James A. Burke (D-Milton) defeated challenger Patrick H. McCarthy of Randolph in the race for the 11th district democratic nomination. McCarthy had waged an aggressive campaign in giving Burke his first challenge for the nomination in 18 years. Burke won with more than 60 per cent of the vote. No Republican candidate will be in the November election, but an independent candidate, Danielle deBenedictus, a former assistant attorney general, will oppose Burke in the fall.

Edward J. Markey, a state representative, won the Democratic nomination for the 7th congressional district over a crowded field of seven other candidates. The seat was formerly held by the late Torbert McDonald.

Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, who is expected to be elected the next speaker of the House of Representatives, won renomination in the 8th district, as did Gerry Studds in the 12th and John Joseph Moakley in the 9th.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, as expected, crushed two anti-busing candidates who were seeking to unseat him. Kennedy, who spent nearly $300,000 for his 75 per cent of the vote is opposed by Michael Robertson in the November election. Kennedy is expected to coast to an easy victory over the little known Robertson.

In New York, Daniel P. Moynihan defeated Bella Abzug for the Democratic senatorial nomination, with three other candidates trailing far behind. Moynihan will oppose conservative Sen. James Buckley in November.

Many political observers feel that victorious Democrats will coast to victory in heavily Democratic Massachusetts. The exception to that could be right here in the first district, where Conte, a 16 year veteran of Congress, enjoys a large base of support.

News in Brief

Ethics force Schorr's 'lips sealed'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Citing the First Amendment and his own professional standards, CBS reporter Daniel Schorr refused under oath yesterday to tell House investigators where he obtained the classified intelligence report he leaked to the press.

Testifying before the House Ethics Committee, and warned repeatedly he might be prosecuted for refusal to cooperate, Schorr said if he disclosed the source of the report "the ultimate losers would be the American people and their free institutions.

"But, beyond all that, to betray a source would be to betray myself, my career, and my life. It is not as simple as saying that I refuse to do it. I cannot do it."

Schorr, perspiring under television lights in the jammed hearing room, cited the First Amendment guarantee of press freedom in refusing to surrender his notes or the copy of the House Intelligence Committee report he supplied to the Village Voice in New York for publication last February.

Nurse murderer to stay behind bars

STATEVILLE, Ill. [UPI] — Illinois parole officials took only 10 minutes yesterday to deny freedom to Richard Speck, the Texas drifter convicted of murdering eight Chicago nurses in 1966.

Speck, 34, a sometime seaman from Dallas, was given a folded statement in private by an aide to the Stateville Prison warden telling him, "Parole is denied."

At morning-long private and public hearings, Speck was called "a fiend... spawned in hell."

The father of one of Speck's victims said he wished the hearing "was an execution" and that Speck should be behind bars "as long as the girls are in their graves."

It was Speck's first bid for freedom since he was sentenced to 400 to 1,200 years in prison for the murders committed July 14, 1966, in a townhouse on Chicago's far South Side.

Authorities said Speck would be given another chance for parole in 10 to 12 months. He had little reason for optimism.

Cars won't be rolling for a while

DETROIT [UPI] — Some 170,000 workers were off the job in a billion-dollar contract dispute with Ford Motor Co. — America's largest industrial walkout in six years. United Auto Workers President Leonard Woodcook warned the dispute will not be settled in just two or three weeks.

Ford workers officially launched the strike at 11:59 p.m. Tuesday, but it had been obvious for days that a pattern-setting industry contract would not be reached peacefully at the No. 2 auto company.

Woodcook refused to predict how long the strike would last. A walkout against Ford in 1967 lasted 66 days.

The UAW leader also said he hoped President Ford and Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter would remain neutral in the dispute. "It's not their business," Woodcook said. "It's our business."

Pennies may disappear faster than ever

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Treasury Department said yesterday it is carefully considering eliminating the half-dollar and the penny, and minting a new, lighter $1 coin.

Mary Brooks, director of the Mint, told a news conference the department has not yet decided whether to make the move suggested by a research firm — but a decision may come later this year.

Results of the recently-completed study indicate Americans hoard pennies, rarely use half-dollar coins and almost never use the Eisenhower silver dollar.

Circulation problems for the three coins in recent years prompted the department to ask a North Carolina-based firm, Research Triangle Institute, to conduct an 18-month, $120,000 study into possible solutions.

Another reason for eliminating the penny, according to the study, is that the cost of manufacturing the coin rapidly is approaching its net worth.

Currently, it costs the Mint about seven-tenths of a cent to make a penny. The study estimated that by 1985, it will cost 1.27 cents.

Turkey 'deafens' U.S. monitoring

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Top administration officials told the Senate yesterday Turkey's closure of U.S. listening posts means the United States is unable to monitor Soviet troop movements which could threaten Isreal and peace in the Middle East.

Gen. Lew Allen, director of the National Security Agency, assessed the intelligence loss for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee as part of the Ford administration's effort to win Senate approval of a new defense pact with Turkey.

Under the proposed $1 billion, four-year pact, the United States would be allowed by Turkey to resume operations at 26 military installations on Turkish soil.

Testimony by Allen, who heads the nation's code-breaking and electronic monitoring agency, was secret.

But administration sources said the listening posts served to alert the United States in 1973 that the Soviet Union was preparing to dispatch airborne troops to intervene against Israel in the Arab-Israeli war.

Ford begins race

MICHIGAN (UPI) — President Ford kicked off his campaign yesterday with the anti-Carter theme that "Trust is not being all things to all people." Jimmy Carter told farmers that Ford has betrayed their trust.

Ford was at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor — where he was a football star in the 1930s — for the first official speech of his Republican campaign for the presidency in the Nov. 2 election.

Proclaiming that his two years as president have seen "an Incredible comeback," Ford said, "The question in this campaign of 1976 is not, 'Who has the better vision of America ... The question is, 'Who will act to make that vision a reality?' "

"It is not enough for anyone to say 'Trust me.' Trust must be earned. Trust is not having to guess what a candidate means. Trust is leveling with the people before the election about what we're going to do after the election.

"Trust is not being all things to all people, but being the same thing to all people. Trust is not cleverly shading words so that each separate audience can hear what it wants to hear, but saying plainly and simply what you mean and meaning what you say."

Ford said he took office during "a painful ordeal, economic adversity and political crisis" caused by Watergate and Richard M. Nixon's resignation.

"We were betrayed by corruption at the highest levels of government," he said. But "in the last two years, the United States has made an incredible comeback — and we're not through yet."

Carter Wednesday charged Ford's administration has ignored the family farmer. He carried the charge from a parched farm in South Dakota to an agricultural show in Minnesota, meeting Mondale and Humphrey met at the Farmfest at Lake Crystal.

Due to clerical error, an ad for Resources Judaica's first open meeting was omitted from Wednesday's edition of the Collegian.

We regret any inconveniences caused to those students wishing to attend the meeting.

Earthquakes rock Italy

UDINE, Italy (UPI) — A string of powerful earthquakes felt in six European countries killed and injured dozens yesterday in northeast Italy's hilly Friuli region, where a slightly stronger quake May 6 killed nearly 1,000 persons.

Officials estimated another 200,000 homeless joined the 41,000 who have been living since May in tent cities turned into quagmires by recurrent rainstorms.

Police said at least seven persons died in the two dozen major shocks that rocked the Friuli region from early morning to sunset.

The dead included three persons buried under debris, three killed by heart attacks and a Venice shipworker who fell 20 feet to his death while attempting to escape from a shaking vessel.

Fire officials said several motorists may have died in a landslide on a mountain road. More than 60 persons were injured, including several soldiers who jumped from barracks windows.

Thousands fled their homes in northern Italy and parts of Yugoslavia, Austria and West Germany after the first shock hit with a force of 6.3 on the open-ended Richter scale. The quake also was felt in Switzerland and France.

A stronger shock came next. It registered 6.4 on the Richter scale — just short of the 6.9 point shock of May 6 that killed nearly 1,000 persons and left tens of thousands homeless.

"It is a frightening morning," said the Rev. P. Coccia, director of the Prato observatory near Florence. "We are recording repeated phenomena and there doesn't seem to be an end."

Villagers who had refused to leave their homes after the May disaster panicked and demanded emergency relocation.

Giuseppe Zamberletti, commissioner for relief work, arranged truck convoys for the refugees and said he might requisition rooms in nearby beach resorts and private homes if their owners did not provide free accommodations.

The tremors, along with another shock last Saturday, ruined much of the reconstruction work completed since the May quake. Police said buildings weakened by that quake collapsed in about a dozen towns and villages including Germona, Majano, Trasaghis, Pradelis, Osoppo. Venzone and Ugovizza.

In Vito d'Asio, a home being repaired by several men toppled on their heads, killing one and critically injuring three.

An Italian parliamentary delegation which came to study relief for victims of the May quake fled their Udine hotel when the first tremor struck.

Cabbies driving

BOSTON [UPI] — Taxis returned to Boston's streets and airport yesterday after a two-day strike in protest of expanded limousine service at the airport.

Transportation had been severely hampered in the area during the shutdown in which nearly all of the city's more than 1,500 cabs stopped rolling.

A tentative agreement between taxi operators and the Massachusetts Port Authority reached at mid-day resulted in service resuming at 2 p.m., with full operation of cabs starting again at 4 p.m.

Clam watch on

BOSTON [UPI] — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency says clams dug from the Acushnet River in southeastern Massachusetts have been found to contain an extraordinary amount of the cancer-causing chemical known as "PCBs."

John A.S. McGlennon, regional director of the EPA, said maximum allowable PCB concentration in food for human consumption is five parts per million.

He said the level in three soft-shelled clam samples from the Acushnet River in New Bedford ranged from 21 to 53 parts per million.

Ban the ban?

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts Supreme Court yesterday ordered the Secretary of State to drop from the November ballot a proposed legislative alternative to an outright ban on handguns.

The ruling means voters in the November election will have the simple choice of voting for or against an initiative petition which would ban the private ownership of handguns.

The ruling stems from a suit brought by a group called People versus Handguns, which is sponsoring the petition placing the ban on handgun ownership.

According to a UNH Animal Sciences faculty person, more than half the students on the Durham campus are suffering from poor nutrition because "The next hockey game or the coed down the hall are more important than a well-balanced meal."

The Newspaper also revealed that one University student had been treated for scurvy a year ago.

Interspecies music

By RASA GUSTAITIS

It was from Nanao Sakaki, Japanese poet and wanderer, that I first heard of interspecies music. He had just come back from walking the depths of the Grand Canyon for two weeks. He said, "I would sit down to chant and sometimes somebody would come sit and chant with me — a coyote or a snake."

Then a friend named Pine happened to get into a session with a watersnake while chanting. Several people confirmed it: The snake came within a few feet of Pine, looked straight at him and listened. When the chant stopped the snake left, as any street musician's audience would have.

It's old-hat to argue whether other animals talk and sing with each other. We've had the "Song of the Hump-backed Whale" record, the wolf music record and Dr. John Lilly with his dolphin conversation studies. Now some are suggesting that the best language across the species barrier is music.

Dr. Lewis Thomas, head of Sloan-Kettering Institute, has written that all living beings make sounds that, together, may comprise one big orchestra.

"The individual parts played by other instrumentalists — crickets and earthworms, for instance — may not have the sound of music by themselves," he wrote in Lives of a Cell: Notes of a Biology Watcher, "but we hear them out of context. If we could hear them all at once, fully orchestrated, in their immense ensemble, we might become aware of the counterpoint, the balance of tones and timbres and harmonics, the sonorities," he said.

He suggests that if we tuned our attention and ears, "the combined sound might lift us off our feet."

Now the inter-species musician has appeared on the scene, trying to tune into the music of nature. On the Willie Bird turkey farm in Sonoma County, a violinist and vihuella (a type of mandolin) player did a number with 300 white turkeys. Turkeys are highly responsive to sound. Jim Nollman made them come in with great gobbling sounds in certain musical spaces while Tonee Marcus tried for a dialog by making turkey-like sounds herself. Mel Moss got it all on film.

Now Nollman is going to Hawaii to visit whales offshore. He's taking a slit drum he designed for that purpose, and a waterphone invented by a local artist, Richard Waters. It's a stainless steel sphere filled with water and ringed by a spiral of copper rods that are stroked with a bow. The resulting sound reminds of recorded whale songs.

Whales are favorites with inter-species musicians. Folksinger Judy Collins used whales in one album. Flautist Paul Horn has produced a record that includes a haunting number with a killer whale named Haida. Sax player Paul Winter and an electronic composer, Will Jackson, also have communicated musically with whales.

Whether any of this amounts to musical conversation is unclear. The turkeys and whales and wolves may be telling the humans to go away, and musicians may be talking to themselves. But we do know that Eskimos can understand wolf language to the point of translating to a visiting foreigner: "He says three men are approaching from the north."

And the idea that we might groove together, not just run from each other, is a good reason to keep trying.

Defends pornography

To the Editor:

My complements on the excellent "Polemic Poles" on yesterday's Collegian editorial pages. I feel I must take issue with Charlotte Allen's viewpoint, however.

She insists that pornography is a male-oriented enterprise devised to promote certain people's wallets, and as part of our sexist society, must be banned. She also mentions social history. Perhaps she has forgotten that pornography is the second oldest profession, the first being designed to fill certain other people's pocketbooks. Perhaps she has never noticed the female attendance at pornographic movies.

She says she would "like to think that most men do not enjoy being thought of solely in terms of their genitals." Truer words have never been spoken. However, both men and women have imaginations and fantasies. Porno gives both sexes an outlet for their fantasies. If these fantasies were obliterated or banned, people would be forced to hide and keep their fantasies pent up inside their subconcious minds. Then we would return to the days when anything other than the missionary position on one's wedding night would be disgusting and perverse.

But most of all, to take away pornography, we would have to rewrite the Constitution, because that obliteration would impinge upon everyone's freedom of choice, speech, expression and countless others.

Speaking of sexism, I noticed that everything on the bulletin board outside the Campus Center Coffee Shop had been taken down except for a sign in the middle that announced that the whole board was reserved for notices pertaining to women's activities. What were you saying about sexism?

Repair rip-off

To the Editor:

Over a year ago I had car repairs done by Cal's Sunoco on Rte. 9. To sum it all up, they did unauthorized work [thus inflating the already quoted price], refused to honor our American Express card and even refused us the mechanic's name upon request.

I have talked with several other people who have had similar bad experiences with this place of business, so I feel I am not alone in my anger and frustration at being 'taken.'

Just a word of caution — if you do have any car repairs done at Cal's Sunoco, be prepared ahead of time for things such as I've mentioned above; but to play it safe, I do no business whatsoever at his service station and I try to warn my friends beforehand so they don't learn the hard way as I did.

Tragedy in a prison cell

Vicente Sanza died last Friday in Springfield, Missouri at the age of 83. The Associated Press story in Tuesday's New York Times said "He died quietly...", and a Roman Catholic burial service would be conducted at Resurrection Cemetery in Springfield.

Now all of you who are perplexed because you don't know who Vicente Sanza is have no reason to wrack your brains searching for the answer. There's no reason you should know him or should have heard of him.

He was the Federal Government's oldest prisoner at the time of his death, having spent fifty years behind bars. He went to prison in 1926 for a life sentence after pleading guilty to second degree murder. He had slain three co-workers from the Rose Inlet Salmon Cannery in Ketchikan, Alaska during a card game, the AP story said.

It is most likely that he went to prison and was forgotten about, doomed to rot in a cell because he couldn't speak English well enough to deal with his plight. Year after interminable year he was simply locked within the machine.

Once he got caught up with the Feds he never got out from under their thumbs. He died in a prison hospital and the prison chaplain will conduct his funeral. There won't be any family there because no one's been able to locate any.

The AP story also said Sanza was a native of the Philippine Islands who came to the U.S. when he was 15. Yet he could barely speak or understand English at the time of his death.

However, it's not so much Sanza's death that is important to note, but rather, the fact that he was in Federal prison for 50 years and only after he had served 49 of them did authorities even attempt to have him paroled.

It seems unlikely that a concerted effort was made by politicians or authorities to keep Sanza in prison. It's unlikely that he was a dissident who should have been kept under wraps. It is most likely that he went to prison and was forgotten about, doomed to rot in a cell because he couldn't speak English well enough to deal with his plight. Year after interminable year he was simply locked within the machine.

And there are probably thousands more like him in prisons across the country. That's if they've been lucky enough to survive the often maniacal treatment from guards and prison officials, the filth and the humiliation that prison can wreak in one. Those thousands don't have the benefit of organized "outsiders" working to win their release nor do they have the knowledge of the legal institution known as "judicial process" needed to work for their own release.

Ultimately the solution to the problem of having human beings rot in prisons cells is the eradication of the prison system as we know it. No, I don't know what would take its place, but we couldn't come up with a much worse system no matter what we try.

Unfortunately that change is probably far in the future. Until then, we can only hope that the "lawmakers" will respond to the demands of citizens across the country for humane prison conditions and increased prisoner access to legal remedies available to them. And hopefully citizens will press those demands. And press, and press, and press, and press.

Doctor Murgeon's dilemma

It has come to my attention that Stockbridge and UMass Forestry students get very little Collegian coverage. So here it is; a special feature fiction presentation, just for our men and women of the honored profession.

I found this story in a book called "My Brother Was An Only Child" by Jack Douglas and I'll probably lend it to you if you want:

DOCTOR MURGEON, THE VIRGIN TREE SURGEON

Tree surgery, unlike training an aardvark, or an arbutus, isn't easy. First, you must learn how to make a sick tree well, then you must go to college to learn how much to charge. After graduating from college you must serve as an intern in some small patch of brush. After two years of sawing off twigs and emptying sap buckets you become a full-fledged tree surgeon and are ready to hang up your shingle (in whatever wood you are specialized in).

Doctor Murgeon, the virgin tree surgeon and our hero, had yet to acquire his first patient. He sat restlessly in his tiny office smoking cubeb after cubeb, waiting for the telephone to ring. He would have given anything to have a patient in the office right then. He'd even be willing to split a fee with Doctor Davey. The office door opening startled him out of his overanxious reverie. It was his nurse, Miss Eucalyptus. There was a man outside with a young birch (that's spelled right), that needed medical attention.

"Send him in," Doctor Murgeon almost shouted.

The man, a vicious-looking brute with a bashed in nose, entered heavily, dragging a sullen-looking young birch tree with him. "Accidental gunshot wound," said the man. Doctor Murgeon laid the young birch on the operating table, at the same time informing his formidable visitor that all gunshot wounds, accidental or otherwise, must be reported to the police, and reached for the telephone.

"Don't bother!" snarled the man, whipping out an unsawed-off shotgun.

"But why shouldn't I report this to the police?" asked Doctor Murgeon, staring at the man with his Scotch and watery blue eyes.

"Because, replied the man, his lower lip quivering, "I'm the Chief of Police."

"Oh," said Doctor Murgeon and whipped out his probe.

Doctor Murgeon had many cases in his long years of tree surgery. There was hardly a tree on Elm Street that hadn't been operated on by old Doc Murgeon. On quiet summer nights you could hear one tree say to the others, "Girls, I must tell you about my cement."

Cement was Doctor Murgeon's undoing. That and his extreme nearsightedness. One blustery night in November, Old Doc was called in to do an emergency appendectomy on Mrs. Cecil Fowler's Weeping Willow. Old Doc performed the operation in the kitchen, and despite the fact that Mrs. Cecil Fowler was expecting twins at any time, and despite her physician's advice not to drink any intoxicating beverages, Mrs. Cecil Fowler was lying on the kitchen floor having passed out cold. And let me say here and now, that if while Doctor Murgeon was operating on the weeping willow, Mrs. Cecil Fowler had been cold sober and conscious, if nearsighted Old Doc hadn't dropped and broken his glasses, if the lights hadn't failed when the tornado tore the roof off the house, it never would have happened. Poor Mrs. Cecil Fowler, instead of the weeping willow, "she" got the cement.

The next morning, in the cold grey of dawn, the willow died and Doctor Murgeon suddenly realized what he had done. He immediately grabbed a freight train and left for parts unknown.

Some weeks later, Mrs. Cecil Fowler went to the hospital and gave birth to, not twins, but triplets. A boy and a girl and a birdbath.

'You're important'

By FRED MISILO

At the beginning of each semester, a plea for volunteers in the Belchertown-Boltwood Project can be heard all through the five college community. Posters, meetings, talks, newspaper articles and advertisements announce the desperate need for volunteers in a variety of programs at the state school and in the community.

But why volunteer? After all, with a fifteen credit course load, lab reports, readings, nights out for much deserved socializing, etc.... who can find time to volunteer in anything? Well, to begin with and to be really honest and truthful about it, anyone can. One night a week really isn't much to offer. True, it is a commitment, and once you've decided to offer your one-night a week you are expected to be consistent. The experience that you will gain will be only as good as your sincerity and consistency throughout the course of the semester. But it is that commitment and that consistency which will bring to you a valuable and fulfilling experience.

You're needed as a volunteer because with your high ideals and youthful spirit, refreshing energy can be generated within the confines of the sometimes stifling institution. The people living at Belchertown State School have over the years led very confined and downright boring lives. Misconceptions of the developmentally disabled have led to inadequate and misguided care. It seems that over the years, one basic fact concerning the developmentally disabled has been distorted, confused and misunderstood. That basic fact is that being developmentally disabled doesn't take away a person's humanity, dignity and rights. The people living at Belchertown State School are just that — people. Human beings live at the school. They are real, feeling people with the same emotions, wishes, and desires as you or me. No matter what type of disability a person may possess, his-her basic human qualities still remain.

"You're important." Whenever someone tells you this or treats you in that manner, an important human interaction is occurring. Quite frankly, it's a very reinforcing and nice feeling to take part in this type of interaction. As a volunteer, this human encounter is a two-way street. You'll be important to the person or persons you'll be working with, and you'll be in a position to interact with certain individuals with importance and respect, so richly deserved but unfortunately so seldomly experienced.

You're not going to be a savior by volunteering one day a week for one semester. Changes take place slowly, very slowly, in ever-so-small steps. You won't be expected to work miracles — no one can. However, by offering support, encouragement and understanding, you can make an important contribution in whatever form; no matter how small or large.

Fred Misilo works with the Belchertown-Boltwood Project.

'Tip': The best kind of image

By JON HITE

There is an axiom in politics that implies that 'image' is the main ingredient in a winning election. Joe McGinnis describes in his book, "The Selling of The President, 1968", how Richard Nixon was sold to the American people like toilet paper or toothpaste. The real Nixon, who had to be taught to smile and talk, was transformed on the magic medium of television into a confident, experienced leader who knew what was right for America.

What would have happened if Birch Bayh had new clothes? What if Jimmy Carter had loose dentures? Would Ronald Reagan have done as well as he did if it weren't for Borax? The American voter, however inept it is, might have voted differently if the image were only slightly different.

This is most true in presidential elections where every appearance by the candidate is carefully planned. It is this type of "media event" that turns a speech before the graduating class of the Miss Sunshine Nursery School into a major policy statement on youth.

While American democracy is being turned into a salesman's delight, Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill plods slowly along, pressing the flesh, failing to accept that there is any correlation between being reelected and having urban renewal performed on his body. Tip O'Neill is not your image candidate.

There are two types of people who grew up in North Cambridge. Those who got rich and got out and those who stayed, crossing the MBTA tracks and walking up Mt. Auburn St. each morning, passed the rows and rows of three deckers that so strongly typify the Irish ghettos of today.

Tip O'Neill is one of those who stayed. He never forgot the people who first elected him to the state legislature over thirty years ago and his campaign style has not changed since.

O'Neill has been in Congress for 24 years, and is now on the verge of becoming the next Speaker of the House. He is a sensitive man, who understands all too well the power that accompanies the heavy mahogany gavel that has been held by Joe Cannon, Sam Rayburn and John McCormick.

It will be Tip O'Neill, who with a smile or a frown will decide the fate of legislation submitted by the next president. He understands this power and is champing at the bit to be the dynamic leader that his is.

Tip O'Neill is a big man, huge to be exact. His weight fluctuates between 245 and 280 pounds and his suits were cut for Haystacks Colhoun in 1959. Baggy pants, scuffed shoes and a coat that a shoplifter would leave behind. This is Tip O'Neill's image.

The next Speaker of the House will have a husky voice whose words are spoken in a clear methodical way. No one will ever misquote Tip O'Neill and no one will ever be mistaken for him. They broke the mold when Tip O'Neill was born; long white hair flipped back, sad eyes and a nose that makes Jimmy Durantee look normal.

While this lack of image would appear to be a liability, O'Neill doesn't worry. The 475 million dollars that he brings back to his district make up for all that. His candor, the ability to cry and his sincerity set him apart from the new breed of "TV Pol." To the people of Cambridge and Charlestown, image is something for congressman to have, not theirs.

When Tip O'Neill spoke to a senior citizens group three weeks ago he began by saying that he was "glad to be able to be there." The room seemed to light up after that because everyone there knew that he spoke the truth. Tip O'Neill was glad to be there.

Some politicians believe the image axoim. They spend two hundred dollars for a suit and ten bucks for a haircut. They spend hours in front of a mirror learning how to smile pretty and weeks in Florida getting a tan; while Tip O'Neill talks with his people and listens. He shakes their hands and laughs in the way that he learned as a kid.

And he gets elected. Tip O'Neill is Tip O'Neill's image and it's the best kind there is.

Mao's Life and Accomplishments tonite

A program entitled "Mao Tse Tung — Great Leader of the Working Class, His Death a Deep Loss, His Life a Profound Inspiration" will be held tonight at 7:30 in Machmer W-26.

The evening will include a presentation by Prof. Norm Chance of the Univ. of Conn. Chance is a frequent visitor to China, author and former head of the UConn Dep't of Anthropology. He has also served on the Nat'l Committee of the US — China People's Friendship Association.

There will also be a slide show focusing on government leadership, democracy and freedom of speech in China. This will be followed by a speech by the Revolutionary Student Brigade entitled: "Mao's Life and Accomplishments." All are welcome.

Invest in a fancy foreign import.

The PUCH Moped, a whole new kind of European road machine, is here. With more headroom than a Rolls. More legroom than a BMW. More economy, about 130 mpg more, than a VW. And a fully automatic transmission just like a Mercedes. OK, so your luggage room is a little less than an Audi station wagon. And your pick-up (0 to 25 in 60 seconds) is a little less than a Porsche. But your maintenance and upkeep are a whole lot less than anything on wheels, except maybe a Swedish skateboard.

Come in and add up the dividends you get, mile after mile. Invest in a fancy go-between. The new PUCH Moped. Just for the fun of it.

The Program of the Year isn't on TV. It's in the Air Force ROTC.

Look into the Air Force ROTC. And there are 4-year, 3-year, or 2-year programs to choose from. Whichever you select, you'll leave college with a commission as an Air Force officer. With opportunities for a position with responsibility... challenge... and, of course, financial rewards and security.

The courses themselves prepare you for leadership positions ahead. Positions as a member of an aircrew... or as a missile launch officer... positions using mathematics... sciences... engineering.

Look out for yourself. Look into the Air Force ROTC programs on campus.

Newman Center to offer 10 wk. course

"Friendship With Jesus," a 10-week course, will be offered at the Newman Center beginning Tuesday and continuing each Tuesday through Nov. 23.

The course will be conducted by Greg Goodman, graduate student, and Ellen Reed, faculty member, and other students and faculty members. It is designed "to help people find a deeper life in Christ through a commitment to daily Christian living."

Emphasis in the non-credit course will be on four basic areas of Christian experience: 1) coming to know Jesus in a personal way; 2) experiencing the release of the Holy Spirit; 3) growth in relationship with God; and 4) growth with others in a community life.

According to the course directors, students will be expected to attend all 10 sessions, to pray and study Scripture at least 15 minutes a day, to become involved in some aspect of community life, and to participate in the course sessions by sharing with others in the class.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Wednesday, September 15 — Born today, you possess an inquiring mind that keeps you forever poking and prying into questions both serious and otherwise. There is nothing too academic or too frivolous for you to deal with both intellectually and emotionally, for there is no end to your need to discover the "whys" behind any given thing. You can be very clever, shrewd, calculating and self-serving, but you can also be generous, sympathetic, understanding and helpful to others. The side of yourself you display at any particular time depends almost exclusively upon the degree to which you are interested in the project and the people at hand.

Although you are fond of change and often feel in need of involvement in several diverse activities at once, you are not a person troubled by confusion. You know what your goals in life must be; you know what your particular gifts are, how you must employ them and to what ends. The fact remains, though, that you find yourself sidetracked from time to time as you seek pleasures and fulfillments outside or beyond the given limits of your particular road to success.

Your need for a rational understanding of your own behavior may cause you at times to be more introspective than is good for you, especially from the point of view of your social life.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Patience and considerable fortitude are needed if you are to get through a difficult day with both gain and stability.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Irritability signifies ill health. You may wish to consult a professional if you're not feeling up to snuff. Don't refuse help in the afternoon.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Allow your quick mind to work without interference from your emotions. Sentimentality can spoil things for you today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Take care that you don't follow another into failure. Employ your own methods in your own way for best results today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your sensitivity to slights may cause you embarrassment and another resentment. Take your time assessing your present feelings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Try not to be as open to outside influence as usual. This is a day for employing your own ways and means as much as possible.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Unless you properly interpret another's signs of distress, you may well mistake an inability for mere frustration. Take a closer look.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your remarkable memory stands you in good stead today as questions are thrown out and answers demanded.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Be quick to forgive — but don't forget by which mistakes you were brought with another to the brink of failure. Reconsider in the evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Strong impulses are to be followed — but only after proper preparation. To move too quickly is to invite disaster in the near future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — An unselfish approach to the establishment of a new friendship serves all concerned best. Be gentle in your dealings with the very young.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take care that you don't move too hastily early in the day to destroy all evidence of recent failure. Something must be salvageable.

Guthrie preps for third NASCAR race

By TOM WHITFIELD
UPI Sports Writer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Janet Guthrie's acceptance into the fraternity of racers who drive the big money Nascar Circuit seems nearly complete.

And, on the eve of her third Nascar Grand National Appearance, she's relieved that most of the ruckus has faded.

"There are still two or three individuals in Nascar that remain fairly hostile," said Guthrie, one of 48 entries for Sunday's Delaware 500 at Dover Downs International Speedway.

"But there are a lot of guys — Dave Marcus, Donnie Allison, some of the drivers I've run with in the middle of the pack at Charlotte and Daytona — that have been very kind to me."

A certain segment of Nascar members will probably always resent Guthrie, a 38-year-old former physicist from New York. The reasons are numerous — her sex, the fact she attracted good sponsorship early, the attention she gets.

Her intelligence possibly could have something to do with it. No other Nascar driver was bounced from NASA's scientist-astronaut program because they didn't possess a PH.D.

All of that bothers her a bit, but she's happy that none of the repressed and not-so-repressed hostility has been apparent in her races.

"After all, we all drive more or less aggressively," she said. "I had to mind by P's and Q's very carefully on the first couple of times out, but as things go on, I will have more liberty to drive as I normally would."

Janet Guthrie was given tremendous publicity in her 14th year of competitive racing, when she entered the Indianapolis 500. She didn't expect all the hoop la her appearance caused.

"All the commotion ... it was really hard to get your feelings sorted out. But the media at Indy was very understanding," she said.

"But it really hurt was to open the paper and see someone say that it was all a publicity stunt. Now people believe I'm a race driver."

After failing to qualify at Indy for lack of a competitive car, Guthrie moved to Nascar, finishing 15th in both the world 600 at Charlotte and the Firecracker 400 at Daytona Beach. She has also driven some USAC races this year.

"I really enjoy oval track racing," said Guthrie, who started driving sports cars. "I guess I like it because every curve is a fast one."

She thinks her body and her "Kelly Girl" Chevrolet (sponsored by the temporary help agencies and repaired by veteran mechanic Ralph Moody) are ready for the 500-mile grind over the high-banked Dover track. Her competitors will include all the usual big names.

"It's the heat that gives the drivers the most trouble and I'be never had any particular problems with heat while a lot of guys do," she said. "It is possible, however, that I may find I would like a relief driver and I don't think this is any particular disgrace to me. Some of the guys take on relief drivers."

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — If August A. Busch Jr. has his way, the St. Louis Cardinals may spend up to $4 million in the free-agent market this winter to land a good righthanded hitter, a good righthanded relief pitcher — and maybe a pennant.

Busch, the outspoken 77-year-old club president who is getting restless in his drive for another pennant, needs the approval of the club's board of directors before he goes shopping with an open checkbook.

"I'm going to be the highest bidder without question if the board passes my recommendation," he said.

Busch is the president of the club, which is owned by Anheuser-Busch Inc., the brewery.

"Anheuser-Busch has plenty of dough," Busch said, "and there's no reason in the world why they shouldn't be willing to go along with this."

Busch has criticized the high salaries being commanded by some major league players but said he wants to bring another pennant to Cardinal fans and he will spend the money needed to do it.

Names mentioned as possibly being on the team's list are Oakland's Joe Rudi, Sal Bando, Don Baylor and Rollie Fingers.

Bruins open camp; not everyone present

FITCHBURG, Mass. (UPI) — Boston Bruins managing director Harry Sinden said Wednesday the team will not take final form until the question is settled on compensation for Bobby Orr moving to the Chicago Black Hawks.

"We're going to have a pretty good hockey club but we won't know how good until certain things work out," Sinden said.

As training camp opened for 34 players, Sinden said there were "A couple of areas of concern," but that things were "optimistic for a good season.

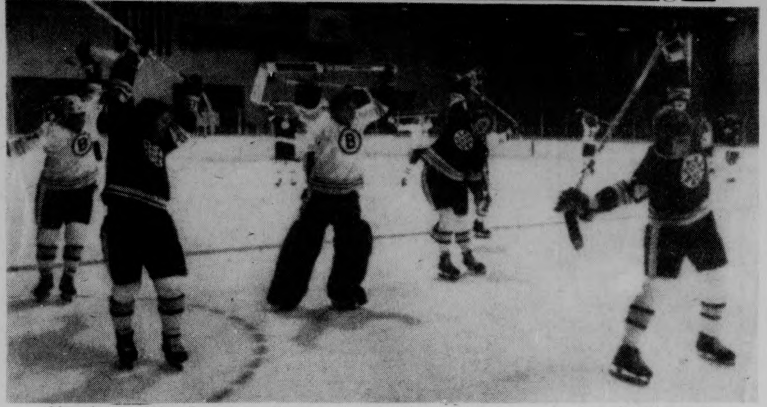
The items still not ironed out are the compensation for Orr and the unsettled salary question of Dallas Smith, left defenseman.

"Everybody is optimistic this year," said Sinden. "Hope springs eternal."

He defined one "area of concern" was defense, especially as long as Smith is absent.

Sinden said compensation from Chicago for Orr "will be conducted between the owners. The whole thing is 'can he or can't he play?" Orr has been turning in excellent performances in team Canada play. He said it was hoped the question would be settled "within the next 10 days or so."

The managing director said Smith was driving from Manitoba to Boston Wednesday and "we'll get together tomorrow."



Members of the Bruins go througn warmup exercises prior to their first practice of the preseason held yesterday. Of notable absence was star defenseman Bobby Orr, who is now with Chicago. (UPI Photo)

Do you know sports?

No matter how "unastute" a sports fan you may be, I'm sure you already know the following:

—You know Larry Csonka must love football to run behind that terribly incompetent Giant offensive line.

—You know Bobby Orr must love money to leave the friendly confines of Boston Garden.

—You know horse racing is really not a sport, but rather a creation to satisfy the working demands of short people.

—You know Muhammed Ali will keep promising retirement until the sport of boxing deceases.

—You know burnt racing driver Nicki Lauda will return to racing and become a champion again.

—You know Arthur Ashe won't be losing so early in a tournament again to allow himself to become the T.V. commentator.

—You certainly know now that there is a distinction in the play of Carlton Fisk and Thurmon Munson; only Muson tries.

—You know Jack Nicklaus can turn on his golfing genius whenever and wherever he so desires.

—You know Artis Gilmore will turn the Chicago Bulls around from a hustling loser into a lazy loser.

—You know the Olympic Games will be permanently held in Athens but the only team participating will be from Greece.

You know John Nabor will follow Mark Spitz to movie stardom.

You know Pele will become Secretary of State in the new Carter Cabinet.

You knew all these things, didn't you??

Bowling team offers new members fun

The UMass bowling team offers all the opportunity to travel, meet new people, exercise, and have fun.

This year's competition includes Southern Connecticut State College, University of Lowell, Cornell University and Worcester Polytech Institute these, along with UMass, are a few of the colleges that compete in the Tri-State Bowling League. Aside from the league competitions, there are various other tournaments such as the National Match games which are open to all undergrads.

Those members on the UMass team must practice almost everyday to keep up with a tight tournament schedule. The tournaments run from Oct. 17 (in New London, Conn.) through April 23. UMass also hosts a tournament at Riverdale Lanes in West Springfield. The reason it is held so far away is because Boyden has only 8 lanes and it is too small.

Last year, the women's team placed second in the semifinals of the Nationals. Two out of the last three years, the women have had representatives at the Singles Nationals. Three out of the past five years the men's team have had representatives at the Singles Nationals. Both teams are hoping for the same success as in the past.

Any amateur men or women bowlers interested in joining the team should come down to Boyden Lanes tonight.

Men bowl from 4 p.m. - 7 p.m., women from 7 p.m. - 10 p.m. Any conflicts, call Karen 256-6887 (leave name and number).

Netmen open against URI...

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The men's tennis team opens its fall schedule today against Rhode Island with a 2:00 p.m. match on the Kingston campus. Rhode Island did not face UMass last spring when the Minutemen strode to a second place finish behind Vermont in the Yankee Conference with an overall record of 5-4.

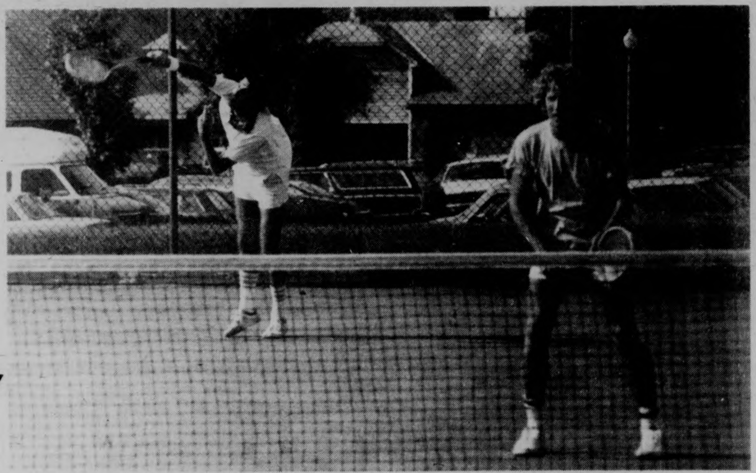
The two teams last met in the fall of 1975 where UMass posted a convincing 7-2 victory over Rhode Island. This year, the Minutemen tennis squad, with added experience and talent, look to be successful in today's match despite any personnel changes on the Rhode Island team over the past year.

Today's match should be a good indicator of how the team will cope with its greatest weakness; away matches. Last spring the tennis team lost all four of its matches on the road. This is the area where the net men need to show a marked improvement if they hope to rise above their present status of number two.

UMass will play six singles matches and three doubles matches today against Rhode Island, in accordance with intercollegiate procedures.

Coach Bill Brown plans to start freshman Adam Rosen in the first singles spot. Following Rosen in singles two through six will be: Alan Green, Jimmy Barnhart, Barnaby Kalan, Ricky Shartin and Steve Heyl.

Brown has chosen not to reveal his doubles teams until match time.



With preseason practices behind them, the UMass Men's Tennis team begin the "real thing" today, with a match against the University of Rhode Island. Doubles play, as shown here will be an integral part of the competition. (Staff photo by Andy Bernstein)

...and Duffers at Rhody as rookies take over

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

Full of enthusiasm, but lacking in experience the new look UMass mens golf team journeys to Kingston R.I. today to open another fall season. Gone are the John Laseks, Glen Sullivans, and Rick Olsens which carried last springs team to the national championships in Albuquerque N.M. Waiting in the wings however are many talented young players hoping to fill the void these players left behind. Traveling to R.I. today will be three newcomers, freshmen Ron Laverdiere, and Mark Powers, along with sophomore Rick Duggan. "They're young, and they're going to make inexperienced mistakes, but they've worked hard and we'll stick with them," said an anxious coach Fan Gaudette.

Veteran members of the squad returning this fall are senior co-captains Bob Sanderson and Tim Diskin, and Tim Kurty and sophomore Jim McDermott. Both Diskin and McDermott are relatively inexperienced in match play, and also will have to mature under match conditions.

Although the inexperience may hurt Gaudette is not complaining, "every kid on that team is capable of shooting 75 on any given day so we're really not that bad off."

Although it is the first match of the season it could very well shape the course of the entire season for the Minutemen. "I'll know better after today who the players are that I'll take to the remaining five man tournaments," said Gaudette.

Todays match at Point Judith C.C. features a quadrangular match between UMass, Bryant, Providence, and Rhode Island colleges. The winner is determined by the lower 6 out of seven stroke total. However, after this match the remaining tournaments only allow for a five man squad, putting added pressure on the golfers.

Combine this with the fact that two more members of the squad are unable to compete for varying reasons, and its obvious that the competition for the key spots is furious. Thus the golfers who can avoid the costly mistakes in Kingston today, will most likely find themselves in Stowe, Mass. for the Yankee Conference championships on Monday.

Sittler raises Canada Cup

MONTREAL [UPI] — Darryl Sittler faked out Czech goaltender Vladimir Dzurilla, then fired into the vacant net at 11:33 of the first overtime session to give Canada Cup of Hockey Tournament.

The victory, before a standing room only crowd of 18,040 at the Montrael Forum, enabled Canada to sweep the Czechs in two straight games in the best-of-three final series.

Sittler took a pass from Lanny McDonald at the Czech blueline and faked out Dzurilla.

Earlier in the overtime session, Guy LaPointe had an apparent cup-winning goal disallowed. He shot with one second left in the first half of the first overtime, but his shot trickled past Dzurilla after time had expired in the session.

Guy LaFleur also had a goal disallowed 8:30 into the overtime when the Czechs deliberately knocked the goal cage off its post and received a bench penalty for it.

Canada, which finished first at 4-1 in the round robin portion of this six-nation tournament to earn $100,000, received an additional $50,000 for the finals victory, meaning each player on the 25-man squad got $6,000.

Czechoslovakia, second in the round robin at 3-1-1, which was good for $75,000, received an extra $25,000 as the losing finalist for a $100,000 total.

Sox need trades to get out of cellar

The Red Sox were mathematically eliminated from winning the American League's Eastern Division this week. At this point, nobody is surprised at that fact, but if one was to say in April that the defending champions would fall flat on their faces this season, he would have been told to go see a doctor.

I, like many others, had picked the Red Sox to win the American League pennant this year. If the Sox had at least been a contender this season, things might have been different. For example, I don't think the fans would have booed Fred Lynn, Carlton Fisk and Rick Burleson as much as they did if the Sox had still been in the race.

Only Earl Weaver, manager of the Baltimore Orioles, predicted that the Red Sox would have a difficult time repeating as champions. Weaver said that in 1975 every member of the Red Sox had their best years. People laughed at him. "What does Weaver know anyway," they said. "Rice and Lynn will be even better in '76 and we have Fergy Jenkins and Tom House to beef up the pitching staff."

But Earl Weaver was right. Fred Lynn and Jim Rice did drop in production. Denny Doyle did not hit .300 has he did last year. Rick Wise is a .500 pitcher. Carlton Fisk is not the Carlton Fisk of the last four years. To make matters worse, Jenkins and House were flops.

It was a combination of many things that caused the demise of the once proud Red Sox. But that's past history. The fact remains that the Red Sox of 1976 just aren't the same team as the one who took Cincinnati to the seventh game of the World Series last year.

The Orioles are not the same team that stayed close to the Red Sox until the final week of the 1975 season. But the Yankees came out of nowhere to become the class of the AL East.

The reason the Yankees are where they are now is because Gabe Paul made some skillful trades. The only Yankee regulars to come out of their farm system are Thurman Munson and Roy White. When Bobby Bonds was sent to California for Mickey Rivers and Ed Figueroa, I thought the Yankees had given up too much power. But it turned out to be a steal of a deal as Figueroa and Rivers have been instrumental in the Yankee success and as for giving up too much power, the Yankees currently lead the American League in the number of home runs.

After the 1974 season, when the Red Sox blew a big lead, Dick O'Connell refused to push the panic button and make a blockbuster trade. In the meantime, the Yankees went out and acquired Bobby Bonds and Catfish Hunter, making them the favorite to win the pennant. But all know what happened last year, don't we.

So where does that leave the Red Sox? Should O'Connell stand pat as he did in 1974, or should he go out and try to improve the club via the trade market?

I think Mr. O'Connell will be very active during the off season. Didn't he already try to improve the Red Sox in June when he acquired Joe Rudi and Rollie Fingers?

There are some mightly attractive free agents on the market, including Rudi and Fingers. If O'Connell doesn't grab some, another team will.

Bobby Grich will probably be the most sought after free agent. If he gets involved in a bidding war between the Red Sox, Yankees and Angels, the Sox may decide he isn't worth that kind of money. That's why Catfish Hunter is not wearing a Red Sox uniform.

Don Sutton, who is on his way to a 20 game season for the Dodgers, wants to come to the Red Sox. He is not a free agent, so the Sox will have to try and make a deal for him. Sutton has demanded to be traded and says the only teams he will agree to be traded to are the Yankees, Mets or Red Sox. He is a 10 year veteran so he can veto any trade.

If the Dodgers do not trade him, he probably will refuse to sign a contract with them. Sutton and his agent were at Fenway Park this summer and Sutton stated that he would prefer to come to Boston. He also said he heard a rumor that he would be traded to the Sox, along with Dave Lopes and Ron Cey for Rick Wise, Dwight Evans and Tom House.

Lopes and Cey would be a welcome addition to the Red Sox infield as Sutton would be to the pitching staff. All the Red Sox would need is an outfielder to replace Evans (Rudi?) and a new pitcher in the bullpen (Fingers?).

If the Red Sox can make those deals, they should once again be a strong contender for the pennant. If not, it may be a long time before the pennant flies again at Fenway.

A local hi-fi dealer has threatened WMUA with a court suit if the station persists in making public service announcements about the UMass Union Stereo Co-op, according to a source close to the station. But the station is undaunted, and will continue to promote the co-op, our source says.

CBS News has cancelled plans for a special report on American workers called "Goofing Off in America." The plans had to be dropped after visits to 15 factories found the preconceptions just weren't true.

"It seems to me," said producer-director Andrew Rooney, "that most Americans are working quite hard." The network has no plans of going ahead with a program describing how hard we work, however.

Two new Boston based newsweeklies hit the stands in recent weeks. Esplanade will compete with the already established Gay Community News for the area's gay liberation audience. And Equal Times, carrying interesting features on women's concerns, is struggling to keep afloat in these first few crucial months of publication. They have been having trouble in garnering advertisers.

In the Thirties, Hollywood operated under the assumption that people were breathless to hear all about the way its devotees made a living. Now, in the wake of Woodward and Bernstein, it's Journalism's turn.

A glance at the Fall TV slate tells us that the news reporter may be replacing the cop and detective as the prime time hero(ine). CBS offers include "All's Fair," a comedy pairing a young liberal photographer with an aging William F. Buckley-type columnist, and "Andros Targets," a drama featuring a Greek investigative reporter.

Meanwhile, NBC will be bringing us "Kingston," with Raymond Burr as editor-at-large of a broadcasting chain and "Gibbsville," an evening soap opera, based on the writings of John O'Hara, starring Gig Young as a washed up, alcoholic newspaperman.

But you know what happened to Hollywood.

Earn college credit for watching the tube? A bill establishing a television network for Massachusetts higher education may come to a vote on Beacon Hill later this month or early October, according to our State House representative, Jim Collins. Under the bill, a network commission composed of representatives from all sectors of public higher education in the state would plan, produce and distribute television and other audio visual programs on such campuses.

Farib Behfar, creator and owner of Hahjee's Place", came to the U.S. from Iran originally to study metal furniture design, then turned down jobs in the field in favor of pursuing his Master's degree in Business Adminstration and Behavioral Science. Meanwhile, he acquired proficiency in the restaurant field by working for some of the most successful restaurants around, including Anthony's Pier 4, Joseph's Aquarium Restaurant, and the Cafe Budapest in Boston, as well as Mama Leone's in New York, where he was one of Mama Leone's favorite employees.

Hahjee's Place occupies the former "Orange Bowl Ice Cream Parlor" midway between Amherst and Northampton. The informal decor includes butcher block tables which were hand finished by Behfar, and his father Hahjee. (The name "Hahjee" is an appelation of honor in Iran.) Dark wood paneling, captain's chairs, and plants on each table define the simple, comfortable atmosphere. Hanging plants frame the picture windows looking out over the majestic Holyoke Range.

The menu features deli-style sandwiches (top priced sandwich is the Reuben at $1.95), charcoal broiled beefburgers with toppings of mushrooms, cheese, or bacon, main dishes of Chicken or Beef Kabobs, Shrimp Scampi or Creole, and Mousaka. The Specialty, though, is Crepes.

Nine different varieties of dinner crepes grace the menu. The Spinach Souffle is a crepe enveloping finely chopped spinach which has been whipped with eggs and cheese. The Ratatouille Crepe contains a harmonious medley of vegetables, featuring fresh cooked zucchini, onions, and tomato sauce. Crepe de la Mer (the top priced item on the menu, at $3.95) contains tiny shrimp, scallops, and mild fish in a complementary white sauce. These crepes are all somehow artfully constructed so they don't become soggy, despite the sauce-y fillings. The Cheese Delight Crepe, with its five fromages melted together, sounds like a must for my next visit to Hahjee's.

Before our crepes, we sampled the Stuffed Mushroom appetizer, which was spicy and moist, a pleasant change. French Onion soup served in steaming crocks, as well as a "Soup de Jour" are offered, and as the weather gets cooler, Behfar plans to offer two daily soup specials, one vegetarian, and one hearty meat-based soup, along with daily Soup and Sandwich, Sandwich and Salad, and Diet Plate Specials.

All of Hahjee's crepes and main dishes include tossed salad with Hahjee's Special Dressing. Spices and herbs are used with inspiration in all dishes where they appear but are shown to special advantage in this non-separating oil and vinegar dressing, which also contains a special herb from Iran.

The food is so light that dessert at Hahjee's Place after dinner is a distinct possibility. I recommend the Mint Chocolate Crepe, which is peppermint ice cream inside crisp crepes, with chocolate sauce and a whipped cream crowning the whole glorious affair. Cool and refreshing. There are also Peach, Strawberry, and "Pineapple Upside Down" crepes. Behfar makes a special crepe with fruit and apricot brandy when time permits it.

A surprisingly good house wine goes for only $2.95-litre, and bottled wines are also affordable. Bud and Mich are on tap. Bottled Schlitz is $.70, and Heineken $1.10.

Behfar hopes to provide a relaxing and inexpensive restaurant for the student who has a limited budget but educated tastes in food. He's open fifteen hours daily, to encourage leisurely dining and lack of crowding. He says he's not in it to "make a fast buck", but to establish a reputation, and possibly open more restaurants like Hahjee's Place in the future. Right now he's making plans for adding on a lounge with a "harem" atmosphere and entertainment, in the adjoining room. With something for everyone from the vegetarian, to the heartier appetite, to the diet conscious, and with Farid Behfar's feel for the reknowned Pesian hospitality, Hahjee's Place is sure to become a favorite with the college market.

Getting By 101

by Greg Tarlin

Good morning class. I'm Professor Harlowe Shapely, and this is Getting By 101, for freshpersons only. So, if any of you aren't freshpersons or came here for a different class, take a hike. The rest of you can take a seat. I apologize for the lack of chairs, but as you can see, there's plenty of room on the floor. If you can't see me well, and still want to, then you probably need your eyes checked. And if you can't hear me, it's a good chance to practice lipreading, or catch up on your sleep, whichever you prefer.

As you all know, unless I'm giving you more credit than you deserve, this course has been designed to help you, being the naive, innocent freshpersons that you are, to become acquainted with the policies and standards of this institution, and then guide you in the effort needed to make your stay here as pleasant as possible. In other words, 'how to get by'.

Most of you will be here for four years, unless of course, you're a 'Stocky', in which case you already know how to get by. And a few of you might follow through on some brave but moronic urge to leave the safe and secure confines of your dorm before graduation, and seek your fortune in this less than perfect world. But the majority of you will stick it out and eventually look back on these anxiety-plagued semesters as the 'good old days'.

Now, you may ask, just what exactly do I mean when I refer to getting by. A pretty foolish question if you ask me, but I realize you are only freshpersons. 'Getting by' is simply the art of exerting the least amount of time, effort, and money possible to reach a certain goal, in this case a degree, but still reaching that goal in relatively good shape. You may have also heard this art referred to as sluffing off, shirking, cruising, etc. I happen to be somewhat of an expert in this field, having gone through eight years of school and gotten my Ph.D., not to mention this job, without ever opening a book or attending a class after my first semester. What, you may say, about exams? And I, referring to that old maxim, reply, 'Where there's a will, there's a way.'

Now then, let's get down to business. When you were here at orientation, unless you skipped orientation, in which case you should be in a higher level course; you all chose a schedule of classes. And sometime during the summer you received a green piece of paper in the mail alleging to be your schedule, but to your great dismay, instead of listing times and buildings, the paper was covered with words like CANCELED, OVER-SUBSCRIBED, and POSTPONED BECAUSE OF RAIN. For the average freshperson, without the benefit of this course, or worse yet, knocked out of this one; this computerized mess would cause a great deal of wasted time and effort. He would arrive on campus and proceed to run around like a chicken with his head cut off, trying to find, and then get into, a bunch of courses he never had any desire to sign up for in the first place. Obviously a poor method, and, to quote the eminent philosopher, Moe Howard, he has "gotten nowhere fast". The proper procedure is to merely go to the classes you originally signed up for, bring a couple of ad-drop forms, and sit tight. By the end of a class or two, the professor will sign you in because the names on his roster have not showed up. This is a surefire method, except in the case of certain business courses in which it could take as many as ten classes of bugging and begging the professor. Tell him you are a second semester senior and need the course to graduate. If he is still obstinate, bring a couple of large friends to his office and threaten him physically.

Now that you've gotten the classes you want, you must learn how to avoid going to them. Some professors are very helpful, with things like lecture notes and frequently canceled classes. However, most of the profs, being the stubborn lot they are, would like you to attend their classes. Here we have a definite conflict. They want you to go — you don't want to go. There are a number of options you can take. A friend of mine at Montana A&M Polytech named Elbert Smegma was particularly adept at missing entire semesters of classes. He would simply have a friend break his leg at the beginning of each semester. After a few days in the infirmary, Elmer would be back lounging around the dorm, unable to attend classes because of the cramped seating. He would send a note to the professor saying that he would keep up with the work by studying the books, which of course he wouldn't. When it came time to go out and take the Final Exam, he could always find some sympathetic studyhead who would let Elmer cheat off him because of his disadvantage.

Another system is to find some cretin, who would like to sit in on your class because he feels the lectures would be interesting, but couldn't sign up because he was in a different major. Tell him he can take your place if he agrees to take the exams and do the papers. You'll be amazed by the extents to which the stupidity of your classmates goes.

There are countless others, but they'll have to wait because I see we've run out of time. Let me just add that you have a ten page paper on 'How Getting By is a Universal Art as Well as an Academic One', due on May 15th. I advise you to remember that date because it could very well be the next time we actually meet.

Campus Periodical Guide

by Susan M. Rivest

The age-old maxim "publish or perish" still maintains a steady grip on most if not all UMass faculty members. Fortunately for them, and for students who find the time to check things out, there are a wide variety of scholarly publications produced on campus.

Your academic department more than likely puts out a magazine of some sort, for the purpose of publishing professorial gibberish from UMass and other universities nationwide. Some of the magazines produced by people in this campus are highly respected in their particular fields.

The Massachusetts Review is a quarterly of literature, the arts, and public affairs, published independently with the support of the Five Colleges. Although it has been in existence for about 17 years, few students discover its hiding place in four years of campus travel. The Mass Review office is located in the basement of Memorial Hall, the ivy-covered building of stone and mortar opposite Bartlett Hall.

The magazine reflects a basically liberal philosophy while its various editors focus on subjects from English literature to contemporary politics. Ms. Lee Edwards, an editor of The Mass. Review, directs much of her considerable talent and energy towards feminist writings and criticism. In 1972 Ms. Edwards was an editor of a special edition devoted to Woman. In fact, "Woman: An Issue" was such a success that it was subsequently published by Little Brown Co. in hardback.

The Massachusetts Review is published four times yearly and is available on newsstands or by subscription. Edwards says she is "anxious to let students know where we are and what we have to offer." There is a special rate of $8.00 on yearly subscriptions for students of the Five Colleges.

Another literary magazine produced on campus is Chomo-Uri, a publication of the Feminist Arts Program of Everywoman's Center. It seeks submissions in poetry, drama, fiction, graphics, photographs and essays.

According to Staff Member Annette Townley, "Chromo-Uri is committed to maintaining a relationship between artistic integrity and political expression, and hopes to see the arts used as a vital educational tool."

The name "Chomo-Uri" (pronounced with a soft "ch" as in "church") was the ancient name given by Tibetans to the world's highest mountain. They called it Chomo-Uri, meaning 'Mother of the Turquoise Peak'. We now call it Mount Everest.

There are a wide variety of academic publications available on the UMass campus, specialized and otherwise. They range from subjects concerning the English Literary Renaissance to the study of Horticulture. Check with the head of your academic department for the latest published ideas and discussions happening in your field. You may find that although your political science professor mumbles inaudibly through lectures, the articles he has published in Polity, that department's scholarly magazine, are crystal clear.

Doctor Dodder

Dear Doctor Dodder:

Having recently arrived from Florida some drastic changes have occurred in my life. I thought that by now all would be forgotten, I think you're jealous because we've got Jimmy and all you have is Bill Proxmire. First the curl left my hair and it looking listless and then all of my African violets started fading. What could possibly happen next?

Transplanted Dixie Peach

Dear Peach:

Hopefully it will not be your best friend telling you that you have bad breath. But, your African violets and your coiffure seem to have both come down with a case of the dry heats. If you maintain a higher amount of humidity and supplement it with a moderate room temperature you will notice that your Saintpaulens should start to revive. You can increase the amount of humidity around the plants by setting each plant on a saucer filled with wet gravel; or to create an entire environment more hospitable to your violets, place pans of water on your radiator or heater. Soon your room will feel like the jungles of Borneo but at least you will not have to go to the trouble of learning to speak Indonesian.

Dear Doctor Dodder:

I am a person who takes extreme pleasure in rubbing his plants. I like to breathe heavily into their leaves and especially run a stream of water around the stem thereby heightening the roots' sensation to incalculable bounds. Unfortunately, my shrimp plants seem to be becoming a little saggy around the pits. Could my hourly waterings be a cause of this flaccidity? How much is too much? How canl tell when they need it?

Leaf Lover

Dear Lover:

No problem with the panting as long as you do not do it over the phone. No problem with too much carbon dioxide but too much water, like too much of anything and that's all folks. What the doctor suggests is a diversification of your tactile delights; touch the soil, tap the pot with your knuckles. If the soil looks dry, feels dry, and the pot rings upon stimulation then if the plant is in active growth, water.

If you have any problems with your plants, if you want to exhibit your rose, or just want to know what mushrooms to dazzle your friends with at the dinner table tell them to write the doctor in care of this paper

by Mark Leccese

A seventy-three-year-old full-blooded gypsy with an ill-fitting suit and a thick Spanish accent held spellbound an audience of several hundred at Smith College with nothing but his two hands, a guitar, and his hot gypsy blood.

Carlos Montoya, the man who first made the flamenco guitar a solo concert instrument, and who thirty years later remains the undisputed flamenco master, appeared at Smith's Greene Hall last Saturday night in the first concert of Smith's Great Artist Series.

A Montoya performance is a fascinating thing, Montoya himself a fascinating sight. A short, portly, bald man, all one sees of him when he sits down to play is his legs, his right arm reaching over the body of his guitar, the fingers of his left hand, and thoughtful in concentration, his moon face. He plucks the strings with fingers of both hands, sometimes plucking with just his left hand, up on the neck, and dramatically holding his right hand in the air, like a magician.

There is something stirring about the flamenco music of the gypsies; something terse and exciting and almost violent. Until now, flamenco music had never been written down, and all of the pieces Montoya played Saturday night were his own arrangements of traditional gypsy themes. All the pieces, even the fast, choppy, oddly-metered piece that brought to mind heel-pounding dancers were fluid and moving, and the slower pieces had a richly textured, multi-linear quality.

The program was seventeen numbers long, but a prolonged standing ovation brought Montoya back for two encore pieces. The first of the encores, Montoya stumblingly told the audience, was, " 'Maleguenia', arranged by me. Very short and very strong." An accurate choice of words from a man who claimed not to know the language, and after much applause, Montoya told the audience he would do just one more, and now, I must confess, I'm stumped. His accent was so thick that the title of his final number eluded me. It did, to my straining ear, sound something like "A Spanish Coda", but your guess is as good as mine, even if you weren't there. He stood as he struck the last chord of the piece, raising his hands and guitar over his head. The audience again stood and applauded, and Montoya smiling broadly, waved and strode off the stage.

ROXY MUSIC
Viva!
(Atco)

Just when Roxy Music were standing on the verge of gettin' it on in America with their Country Life and Siren lps, it seems that this pioneering bunch of Anglo-rockers have decided to split up. This really comes as no surprise considering the events surrounding the band over the past two years. With the ever increasing stature of leader Bryan Ferry, the rest of Roxy jumped into various side projects that at times looked more important than Roxy business.

To say the least, Viva! is a dubious ending. The uncertainty that plagues the album reminds me of the less-than-glorious bow out of Family. The biggest problem here is the selections and the time periods — some of Viva! dates back to 1973, circa Stranded. Somehow I refuse to accept that the longer songs are any indicator of live Roxy Music. All three tracks, "Dream Home", "If There Was Something" and "The Bogus Man", pale against the Roxy rockers here. I guess every band is prone to its excesses, but this excess hardly merits inclusion. As one good friend put it, "Roxy Music albums are supposed to be fun".

All is not lost though. Most of the '74-'75 tapes are exceptional live Roxy Music. Not surprisingly they are all short tunes. They are "Out of the Blue", "Do the Strand", "Both Ends Burning" and "Pyjamarama" — true rock gutslammers. All are tight with room for the band to take off and kick ass. Such is the case with "Out of the Blue", "Both Ends Burning" and "Do the Strand". Eddie Jobson's electric violin solo during "Blue" will singe your brain pods. Burnout version of "Burning" and "Strand", featuring The Sirens (a female vocal trio), climax their respective sides. "Burning" may well be Viva's best track; a five minute ball of energy that captures the essence of Roxy Rock. Just check out the MacKay-Manzanera-Jobson triumvirate careening towards glory.

As fine as the short stuff is, the overall effect of Viva! is not as fulfilling as Siren or Country Life. One can only imagine the prospect of Viva! consisting of all short tunes. Like I said, it's a dubious ending, but never-the-less an essential closing chapter. (B+)

ABBA
Greatest Hits
(Atlantic)
ALICE COOPER
Alice Cooper Goes To Hell
(Warners)

Back in 1973 ABBA had had a big hit with a song called "Waterloo," an uptempo and highly calculated pop tune. Soon a string of equally as slick hits followed. And this is the inevitable greatest hits albums. Normally, I would without hesitation crap on such nonsense like this. (And maybe ABBA deserves to get crapped on), but there is something likeable about this stuff. "Waterloo," "S.O.S." and "Mamma 'Mia" sound great for some strange reason. The delivery is unemotional, but you can feel the slickness oil each track. Maybe I'll come to my senses; but I have this feeling that we've all been humming along with ABBA just like we've been humming along with all those vapid "silly long songs." (B-)

Never thought you'd see the day Alice Cooper shared review space with something like ABBA did you? Well to be truthful, it's all one big error. This error is no way an indication that we've decided Alice has fallen to level of ABBA. In fact, old black eyes does a superb version of "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows." ABBA could never do that and get away with it! There's also a big hit single too, a tear-jerker called "I'll Never Cry." At least AC's emotional! Sure has been a long time since the likes of "I'm Eighteen." (C)

I Was An Extra For Woody Allen . . .And Laughed To Tell The Tale

by Diane Ungar

Long summer days as stockboy or waitress, and longer ones of unemployment, take their toll in tedium by mid-August. It was not unusual then, that the orange posters at the Loeb Student Center served to brighten more than just its hallways.

"Woody Allen is currently filming a motion picture here in New York. College students are needed as extras for a scene to be shot at the Fashion Institute of Technology. All interested students are invited to an open call..."

No sooner said that done. Six hundred interested students streamed through the institute's front door for their debut in Woody's new untitled film, slated for release by United Artists early next year.

"I'd like some positive, generally favorable reactions from you people," Woody said, chewing a formidable wad of gum. "So if you can repress your negative urges for a few hours, I'd appreciate it."

The students, responding to ads posted in August at New York University in Greenwich Village, were paid $10 for the day's work. About 40 of them were members of the Student Actors Guild. Ostensibly, they were paid to laugh at and applaud an empty stage for 4½ hours. Their presence was needed to portray a concert scene at the University of Wisconsin. According to the crew, the concert will be spliced on at a later date.

Woody fed the cues from the side of the equipment-cluttered stage, reminding the crowd on feebler laughs that "you're getting paid for this." A random inquiry revealed the expected. All were ardent fans who had doled out larger portions of wages to see Woody's past films. And usually more than once. Why had they gone to BANANAS, TAKE THE MONEY AND RUN, SLEEPER, and LOVE AND DEATH? For the pleasure of laughing at Him.

Now they were being paid to do so.

For some, the minimal salary only recompensed the expense of transportation. For others, the sum afforded the day's wardrobe.

The extras were warned to wear no blue onto the film set. This, unfortunately, excluded blue jeans, denim skirts, and blue workshirts, the staple student attire, from the day's wardrobe. Several Woody loyalists were caught-in-the-red, forced to go out and buy new non-blue pants. All conceded it worthwhile, and the collage of beige, red, green and grey was striking. One girl explained, "I think it's about some nut who hates the color blue."

Actually, the film is reported to be based loosely on Woody's early (and therefore only, having been a freshman dropout) collegiate life and stars himself, Diane Keaton, and Tony Robinson. Robinson, Woody's fans might recall, first appeared as the best friend whose wife Allen falls in love with in "Play it Again, Sam."

According to the New York Times, other scenes were filmed this summer in a Third Avenue movie theatre, at Yankee Stadium in the Bronx, in East Hampton, Long Island, and in Greenwich Village. (Woody lives in an uptown Manhattan apartment that overlooks Fifth Avenue and Central Park.) The collegiate laughs in the institute's hot auditorium were all he needed before two conclusive weeks of filming in Los Angeles.

"I need a real generous laugh," Woody said, throwing back his own head in mimed hysteria. "And if you could all laugh together..."

The crowd erupted in spontaneous laughter, stopping only when Woody raised his hand.

"Perfect. Now pretend, for example, I've just said something enormously clever." The auditorium exploded in wild applause and Woody hastily mumbled into the microphone, "No, no. Not that clever. Just act like you're mildly enjoying me."

Light chortling and snickering broke out.

"I don't want any hissing from this audience. We're paying you, remember?"

A red-haired fellow of slender physique slouched onstage to take Woody's place. Posing where Woody had stood he passed instantly as the comic's double. "Dennis" dressed in an outfit identical to Woody's — a green plaid shirt with sleeves similarly folded above the elbow, brown corduroy trousers, and work boots. His stance, hands on hips, replicated Woody's as did his thick, horn-rimmed glasses. He even had Woody's receding hairline and chewed gum. The only outstanding difference was his silence.

Dennis' presence gave Woody the chance to survey the scene as director, suggesting alternate staging for even his own appearance. Standing at the back of the auditorium, hair clipped short, and looking young and uncannily adorable for a 45-year old man, he conversed with some Louise Lasser-like woman. (It was not Lasser, though rumor has it that Allen is turned on by overbites. In an early nightclub act he confessed a crush on five-year old Hermina Jaffee who had the biggest overbite in Brooklyn. "She used to eat a piece of toast," the shtik went, "and finish the outer edge first.")

After peering through a camera and binoculars, he asked Dennis to reposition himself. Apparently satisfied, he strode to the stage walking with a George (of the CBS situation-comedy) Jefferson lilt. His hands were cupped in loose fists that swung behind him, buoyantly, with each well-placed step.

While the crew prepared the lighting for the next few shots Woody unwrapped a fresh stick of gum. The intermission was tedious and he chatted with the crew, indulging in frantic gesticulations as though working out a high school cheer. An American flag and a Wisconsin one were placed at either end of the stage. Two electric fans, previously cooling the audience, were repositioned to unfurl the flags. Before the group could complain, Woody returned to the mike.

"Okay, people — in a few moments I need a laugh as though you were laughing in Wisconsin."

An attempt at high-pitched, bewildered laughter displeased the crew and had to be redone. This time, Woody prepped the crowd with his longest monologue of the day.

"I used to do this all the time, ten years ago," he said, referring to his early stand-up nightclub routines. "But I never got a turnout like this. I'd go Midwest or Upstate New York to colleges, and get barely half the house. The students used to make embarassed excuses for me like everyone's on Easter vacation, or we had a magic show last week and the kids spent all their money on that."

The crowd broke up laughing and the cameras rolled. Scene seventy-two was complete.

Woody thanked the crowd by way of comparison. "I used to play at the Ivy League schools," he said, "and they never appreciated me."

His tone suggested a compliment worth more to his fans than the ten dollars awaiting them in the lobby. Six hundred satisfied extras filed out of the auditorium, radiating only the pleasure of a rare day in New York.

Keep in Touch

story by Craig Roche

The hands are what capture attention first. They are not always the graceful, uncalloused hands of a student. These are the hands of people learning by touch, learning to work in arts that many people have lost all together. It has been just a few short generations since the majority of us, having grown up to consume the mass produced articles of the giant conglomerates, forgot how to work with our hands. For the adventurous, the curious, the skilled and unskilled, there exists a place on campus where these arts are being rediscovered.

Located on the first floor of the Student Union, across from the Hatch, the Crafts Shop has become a center of learning and working activity for a growing number of the university community. In this comfortable area is space, equipment, suppplies, and tools for work in ceramics, photography, leatherwork, lapidary, woodwork, silversmithing, stained glass, silkscreening, and enameling. In short, everything needed except the creator. You.

It would be hard, almost impossible, to pinpoint just why and when the resurgence of interest in crafts came about. Here at the University, it occured about five or six years ago.

First there was the Crafts Guild, at that time a group of craftspersons in the area who banded together to obtain a work area where they could work on their particular art. It was a true guild open only to the members. Then in 1970 it became the Crafts Shop, moved from the location where the People's Market now is to their present location in the Student Union. The Shop is open to all students today. There are no members, just a staff of seven people there to give the people who come in advice, instruction, and information.

Funded from the Campus Center Fee, the shop makes no profit in their operation. The tools and machines for the various crafts are used without charge, the only items that cost money are the basic supplies, such as leather, silver, clay, and dyes. Shop manager Penny Worman stated that "the Board of Governors is very generous in their allotment to the Crafts Shop, If we could only get people to stop stealing all the little stuff, all those small tools that are so necessary when you work in jewelry and leather."

The theft of the crafts tools is a problem that affects all the other people using the Shop directly. Often times tools must be replaced twice in a school year, which causes the price of articles the students do buy to rise, and naturally prevents craftspeople from working while the tools are on order.

The Craft Shop hosts classes in instructing newcomers to the crafts offered at the Shop. Right now intro pottery workshops are running with others soon to start. The times and days for the particular classes are posted high on the wall to your left as you enter the shop.

The Craft Shop itself is open from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday thru Thursday, 10 a.m.-6 p.m. on Friday, and noon to 4 p.m. on Saturday. It is "one of the few meaningful experiences at UMass where you work at your own pace and come out with a finished product" as Marion Abrams,, one of the staff, so aptly put it. You have the chance to make your own art. Be an artist then. But hurry, the Christmas rush will soon fill up the shop.

Bang a Gong

DAEVID ALLEN & EUTERPE
Good Morning
(Virgin — Import)

GONG
Shamal
(Virgin)

Daevid Allen, like Robert Wyatt, was a founding member of the Soft Machine. He left after their first recording date and formed the band Gong, which, after a few years of unremarkable puttering around, evolved into the world's first (and so far only) Zen-jazz-rock-electronics-stoned-fairy-tale-for-adults group, with a complete fictional world and mythology, a large cast of characters, a continuing story-line, and a double dose of nonsense, all of which wound up in a trilogy of albums known collectively as "Radio Gnome Invisible" and individually as Flying Teapot, Angel's Egg, and You. Having completed his masterwork, Allen left the group and went off to Majorca to write the book which would explain it, the Book of Gong, only to find that the Muse of Music would not let him be. That, and his stumbling upon the Spanish group Euterpe (YOO-TER-PEE) have resulted in Good Morning, a fruitful meeting of Old World instruments and New Age electronics.

As always, Allen's songs have the knack of sounding like familiar favorites even on first hearing, an effect brought about, not by lack of freshness in the material, but by the irresistable friendliness which seems to be a natural part of anything he does. If on Good Morning there is occasionally a Donovan-esque tendency towards somewhat preachy flower-childisms, they are at least delivered in Allen's winning manner of having something enjoyable to share with you, as opposed to Donovan's stick self-righteousness. Aside from that and the fact that Allen apparently borrowed the melody for his "Wise Man in Your Heart" from Dylan's "As I Went Out One Morning" (from John Wesley Harding) this is about as nice a word from the Head Pixie as you could want, and easily one of the most cheerful albums in existence.

And what, you may well ask, has become of the planet Gong in Daevid's absence? Well, when Daevid stopped the world to get off, he tossed the keys to lead guitarist Steve Hillage, who used several members of the band to make his solo album, Fish Rising, and then left the band himself.

Leadership now appears to have fallen to bassist Mike Howlett, a comparative newcomer with only the last two Gong albums to his credit, and little of the writing for either of them. Under his guidance the band has become a great deal slicker and overtly jazz-funkier, unfortunately, in the manner of, say, Weather Reports lower points or any of the recent Zappa outings. On Shamal the planet Gong itself and all its inhabitants seem to have disappeared, its place filled, by rather colorless, pseudo-cosmic lyrics.

But in terms of music the band has lost none of its imagination and precious little of its humor and general zip — which places it way ahead of either of the aforementioned groups. This particularly applies to Didier ("Bloomdido Bad de Grasse") Malherbe, the band's sax and flute man, who has been with the group longer than anyone except the now-departed founder. His compositions, "Bambooji" and "Cat in Clark's Shoes" give the album its most beautiful and hysterical moments, respectively; "Bambooji" with its lonesome wind effects and soulful Japanese bamboo flutes and percussion, and "Cat" with its hilarious tango in 11-8 time, complete with schmaltzy sax and violin. The other four cuts on the album weigh in at two very good, one fair, and one not-so-hot.

It is to be hoped that in the future they will do away with both lyrical and commercial restrictions on their music and show what they can really do, which, judging by the potential of this album appears to be a lot. New members Mireille Bauer (marimba-glockenspiel-xylophone) and Jorge Pinchevsky (violin) show particular promise. Probably the best way to explain my attitude towards Shamal is to say that when I first heard how funkified the band had become I did my very best not to like this album and I like it anyway. You figure it out.

EARTHQUAKE
(Beserkly)

Back Street Crawler, Boston and Earthquake's second releases are good samplers for the loud rock and roll fans, especially the Boston and Earthquake lps. Back Street Crawler isn't so molten, more in the Free-Bad Company vein undoubtedly due to the guiding light of the late Paul Kossoff. Kossoff, if you remember, formed Free with Paul Rodgers and Simon Kirke (now Bad Co.). After Free split, Kossoff bounced around until Back Street Crawler was born. Their first lp, The Band Plays On, was an uneven effort. It was no better or worse than Bad Company's output. Then tragedy struck and Paul Kossoff passed away — never fully recovering from his bout with drugs. 2nd Street is his last recorded work.

Recorded after BSC's first American tour, 2nd Street is a startling improvement over their first. The performance is rather exceptional, especially Paul's heart and soul guitar solos. I guess it's really true when they say you never appreciate something until it's gone. Kossoff will be missed for sure. Hopefully, BSC can pick up the pieces and carry on. Let's hope Koss left a seed that will grow. (B+)

A relative new kid on the block, Boston is a New England hard rock band who have come up with an ear-shattering debut album. Boston is headed by one Tom Scholz, a MIT graduate who likes electronics and such things. He's also responsible for much of the material. The whole record is clean and dynamic, lovingly created to be played LOUD. "More Than a Feeling", reportedly the tune that caught the record companies, should be a hit single. "Foreplay" is a seven minute guitar piece that's killer material. While they're far from being true punks, Boston packs a sizeable punch. Aerosmith better watch out, 'cos Boston is an up and coming band that's gonna be over soon. (B+)

Earthquake has been around for a while now, but they only came into their own when they signed up with Beserkly Records — the people who brought you Jonathan Richman & The Modern Lovers. Their first Beserkly release was Rockin' the World, a live album. It's a fun album with an uneven performance, but highly likeable. 8.5 is another thing entirely. I have no reservations about calling this their best. Everything clicks loud and proud. Mostly rockers, it is interspersed with a couple of ballads and one long track that's stunning. The two best whammer jammer's are "Finders Keepers" and "Little Cindy". "Finder's Keeper's" is a torrent of energy, you may just find yourself blown across the room. The long cut, "Saving My Love" is contrasting moods, lead off by a quiet section that slowly builds up to a burnout ending. Nothing gets bogged down at all, plus the production is impeccable. Obviously Earthquake's peak, 8.5 is as destructive as its title implies. (A-)

LINDA RONSTADT
Hasten Down the Wind
(Asylum)

It must be a sign of the times. Artists in this recession are unwilling to vary profitable formula and challenge themselves and their art. Content to produce and reproduce endless variations of the same material, the big sellers roll in the money, they revel in indolence. A pox on the profits.

We all know Ms. Linda Ronstadt can sing the hell out of a tune. She's been doing it all along, and continues to do so on her latest, Hasten Down the Wind. With her canny arranger Andrew Gold and her masterful manager Peter Asher, she need only apply her beautiful voice to whatever songs are selected and watch the money roll in. While Hasten is as commercial a product as any she's done, it is not quite the carbon copy of her biggest and best ('Heart Like a Wheel') that 'Prisoner in Disguise' was. Still the formula and familiar patterns are quite apparent. One reggae, one oldie, a dash country, and maybe one unknown, provided the rough edges are removed are all mixed together to produce a Linda Ronstadt album, a piece of vinyl so slick it's a marvel that the stylus remains in t-he groove.

Ry Coder's 'The Tattler', Willie Nelson's 'Crazy', and Karla Bonoff's 'Lose Again' elevate this album from being a heartless piece of plastic. Other songs, for ex, 'Give One Heart' (from Orleans) is a faithful cover but nothing else, or Tracy Nelson's 'Down So Low' (a song so closely identified with Tracy I'm surprised Linda had the balls to do it) are carbon copies with Linda and her band taking the places of the originals. Nothing else.

The best facet of this rhinestone 'gem' is the debut of another fine writer, Karla Bonoff. Her songs frame the album, it opens with 'Lose Again' and closes with 'Someone to Lay Down Beside Me'. Like the McGarrigle sisters, whom Linda also unveiled, Bonoff is a classy writer who deserves to profit as much from this album's sales as Linda and the musicians on it.

HERBIE HANCOCK Secrets
(Columbia)

On Herbie Hancock's past few albums, his music has gone the route from avant-garde, spaced-out piano wanderings to funkified, electronic repetition; the former probably influenced by his Miles Davis sidekick days, the latter, no doubt, by money. With Secrets, Herbie stops just short of disco, in part because the music is a little better constructed, but mostly because the songs are too slow to be danceable.

All the electronic disco ingredients are there. Guitars twanging, bass and drums throbbing hypnotically, infrequent tenor sax blasts, much too frequent whistle blowing, various electronic keyboards (including an Oberheim polyphonic synthesizer), and even semi-lyrics to the first song, 'Doin It', those being the phrase "Keep on doin it" sung approximately thirty times in a row (which may be great for marathon sessions in the sack, but can get a little monotonous while sitting aaone). All of which adds up to music that is a far cry from the kind of progressive jazz Hancock is capable of.

However, even at his lowest, Hancock is listenable, and, in fact, one cut — 'Gentle Thoughts' — in which it sounds like Herbie is playing an ordinary piano, is pleasant. Nevertheless, most of the album is just listenable, not likeable, and for Hancock fanatics only. The rest of us can sit back and wait for Herbie Hancock to get serious again.

FLO & EDDIE
Movin' Targets
(Columbia)

"Write another song for the money. Something they can sing, not so funny. Money in the bank to keep us warm." This from the guys who brought you big hits with the Turtles ("Happy Together" and "Elenor") and busted your stitches, while simultaneously grossing you out, with Frank Zappa's Mothers Of Invention. Moving Targets is Flo & Eddie's third post-Zappa album and their best. The duos snide comments and on-the-mark cynicism seems to be finally realized. (Although they should thank Frank for providing much of the fodder they've picked up on).

The best material comes on Side Two, nicely kicked off by "Keep It Warm." "Keep It Warm" is a neat parody on the Beach Boys and The Beatles, not to mention various other vulnerable targets. The music features a capella Beach Boy chorus and the inclusion of well worn Beatles and Beach Boy cliches'. "Keep It Warm" is down-right precious! The next cut, "Guns" is somewhat vicious; "Ever fly a B-52? Not a lot you gotta do...Never hear the sound of tears rolling down." The closer is the title track which is simply icing on the cake. "Is this record all that you had hoped for: Don't you wish you could get your money back?"

Ever since Flo & Eddie (aka Howard Kaylan & Mark Volman) explored parody with the Turtles' Battle Of The Bands, the Zappa era and their first two solo albums, they've been usually on the mark. Moving Targets is closer than earlier stuff and for anything else better to say, easily one of the best comedy (?!) albums of the year. (B+)

JETHRO TULL
Too Old To Rock 'n' Roll: Too Young To Die
(Chrysalis)

Considering myself to be the world's number 1 (or at least number 2) Jethro Tull fan it is with more than just a little bit of regret that I listen to the group's newest release, Too Old To Rock 'n' Roll: Too Young To Die. I regret the fact that bassist Jeffrey Hammond-Hammond has left the group, replaced by the less than titillating ex-Carmenite John Glascock. I regret the fact that Ian Anderson has taken his role of producing to such slick extremes as to virtually eliminate the past heavy metal influences of both Martin Barre (guitar) and John Evan (keyboards). I regret Ian's self-admission that he is, indeed, growing too old to rock and roll. Oh, such regrets.

Still, this album is not without its memorable moments. Brief though they may be, Barre does have his moments of heavy metal glory. His riffs on both "Quizz Kid" and "Taxi Grab" help to make these two songs the best on the album. Other tunes which stand up well to repeated listenings are "Big Dipper" and "Pied Piper". Ian's lush orchestrations fail to gel well on several of the remaining cuts, best evidenced by the failure of "From A Dead Beat to an Old Greaser."

Bring back Tull's glory days, I say. Up to, and including, the masterpiece of A Passion Play, Jethro Tull was as good a progressive rock group as one could hope for. Lately, however, the spark seems to have gone out of them. Hopefully, Ian and his mates will soon be back on the right track, doing more than merely living in the past.

Miracles: Saxophonic and Otherwise

RAHSAAN ROLAND KIRK
The Return of the 5000 lb. Man
(Warners)
Other Folks Music
(Atlantic)

Performing saxophone miracles has become commonplace for Rahsaan Roland Kirk, but his latest bit of magic is the ultimate; after a severely debilitating stroke in November left most of his right side paralyzed, Rahsaan returned to the music scene in April with a wild vigor that not even a brush with death could faze. He is, as I write this, blowing the doors off the Jazz Workshop in Boston. If there were any doubts about him being more than human, they are gone now.

On record, Rahsaan is always trying something original, be it the nearly unaccompanied playing on Root Strata or his marvelous ear party called The Case of the Three Sided Dream in Audio Color. His latest two releases, made before his stroke, may not be satisfying in all aspects, but their consistent variety and genuineness make them both attractive and fun.

The Return of the 5000 ib. Man gives Kirk the chance to use one of his favorite additions, a vocal chorus. The album is very involved with lyrics to songs as varied as the Henry Warren chestnut "There Will Never Be Another You" and the jazz standard "Giant Steps." These last two receive the schmaltzy treatment and Rahsaan's saxophone work seems secondary to the proceedings. Pianist Hank Jones lends his swingingly gracious air to "Sweet Georgia Brown" and Kirk's Chu Berry inspired tenor solo climaxes in some very Rahsaan-ish double timing. Kirk is cogent and sensitive despite the raucous organ trioon "I'll Be Seeing You". This cocktail lounge quartet is much a part of Kirk's past and Trudy Pitts' obscene organ fills are reminders of the jazz reign of King Jimmy Smith the Terrible.

Though no version of the Mingus elegaic to Lester Young, "Goodbye Porkpie Hat" has ever approached the original, Rahsaan's heartfelt lyrics give this one a new dimension: "Now some folks they may tell you Lester Young is out of style (out of style?)..." You will be singing this, I assure you. The masterpiece of this Rahsaan variety show is his "Theme for the Eulipions", a beautiful fantasy of making music for travelers in desolate airports that incorporates actual airport sounds, Betty Neals' narration and lyrics, the vocal chorus and two fine tenor choruses by Kirk. The concept and realization of this piece are magically matched and the swelling of the voices under the narration at the climax is truly stunning.

Other Folks Music, another grab bag of moods, styles and compositions, puts greater emphasis on the playing of the smaller, very cohesive studio group. "Donna Lee" suffers through a fast samba rendition that sabotages the slippery grace of the Charlie Parker melody, but Kirk rebounds to pull some odd duet harmonies from his reed trumpet and manzello on the ballad "That's All".

Frank Foster's lovely "Simone" gets a tender reading by trumpeter Richard Williams and Kirk until the incredible drummer Roy Haynes and Rahsaan start erupting at each other, Kirk fashioning a cavernous honk chorus while Roy crackles in response. The three originals by the other group members who make up the best music on the album and evidence the bright talent Kirk surrounds himself with.

Pianist Hilton Ruiz' "Arrival" is exceptionally solid with four fiery solos and a trademarked Rahsaan rideout. Without question Kirk is an elemental force. Even with his facility halved, he is the most musically charged being alive.

BLOODSTONE
Do You Wanna Do A Thing
(London)

Intuition told me to play this new Bloodstone album at a party, an obvious destiny for a lp of this nature. So I did just that and happily — I guess — the record debuted to good notices. The crowd favorites were predictably the disco-oriented tunes like "Stand Up, Let's Party" and "Shake The Building," which are longer funk and bump and poop yourself out exercises. With a tip of the hat to the big names of the funk-disco field, Bloodstone has finally — for me — come up with their best yet. (B)

The concert season in Pioneer Valley gets off to an exciting start as four hot bands move into town this weekend. Orleans, with Johanna Wild opening, will perform two shows at the University Fine Arts Center tonight. Friday finds Duke and the Drivers at the Hatch, also at UMass, while EmmyLou Harris and Loudon Wainwright III will perform in the beautiful Academy of Music in Northampton.

Orleans, who last year had a huge hit with "Let There be Music", are a band that has been gathering a die-hard following over the past four years. "Dance With Me", the single from that album, was a showpiece for all of the band's strong points — catchy lyrics, light harmonies, an infectious beat, and strong musical hooks. It worked for them in the clubs and on record.

Piloted by John Hall, who co-writes most of the band's material with his wife Johanna, Orleans is also the brothers Lance and Larry Hoppen, Wells Kelly, and Jerry Morotta. The group has a new album out, "Waking and Dreaming", and a rising single from the album, "Still the One".

Tickets for the September 16 Orleans show are $4.00 on sale up to show time at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. There are two shows, one at 8 and the latter at 11. No drinking or smoking is allowed in the Fine Arts Center, the Eastern Mountain Concerts people point out, so please observe the ban on smoking and drinking there. The future of concerts in the Fine Arts Center depends on your cooperation.

Friday night Duke and the Drivers returns to campus. It was one year ago they last were here, and that's too long a time. The band has a second album out on the ABC label, "Movin' On" and are a sure-shot to set toes tappin. One of Boston's favorite and best club bands, Duke and the Drivers are beginning to realize a widening appeal as a concert act. It has happened before to Boston bands — there's J. Geils, the James Montgomery Band, and Aerosmith to name a few. The Duke, with his cohorts Rhinestone Mudflaps, III, Sam Deluxe, Cadillac Jack, Mad Mississippi Buffalo, Koko Dee, and Bobby Blue Sky are taking aim at your dancing shoes and any other partyin part of your anatomy. Tickets for the night's festivities are on sale in the Blue Wall and Hatch Deli Bar from 11:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. They are $2.50 in advance and $3.00 the day of the show.

The concert series at the Academy of Music in Northampton gets off to a classy, auspicious start this fall, offering a tuneful double bill headlined by the lovely EmmyLou Harris. Opening for her is the one and only Loudon Wainwright III. Known primarily for his "Dead Skunk" song of a few summers ago," Loudon has few peers as a songwriter. Like his equally jaundiced contemporaries Randy Newman and Martin Mull, Wainwright cocks one eye at the absurdities of life and softens those hard realities with his gentle personality.

EmmyLou Harris originally gained notoriety for her work with Gram Parsons on his solo albums. After his untimely death, EmmyLou emerged as a strong solo performer in her own right. Her two albums on Warners are modern day classics in contemporary country. The Hot Band, her group, manages to impress without ever threatening to steal the stage from the lady they so capably augment. The tickets for this Friday night pair of shows (the first at 7:30, second show at 10:00 p.m.) are $5.00 in advance and $6.00 the day of the show. The Academy of Music is located on Main St. in Northampton, and accessible by the Five-College bus system. It is without a doubt the most beautiful spot for catching a concert in the immediate area. New renovations to strengthen the stage can only add to the quality of the structure there.

There it is, a fine start to the music and entertainment scene in the Pioneer Valley.

Tower windows screened

By JAY SARET
and PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Physical Plant employes will today begin to permanently affix screens to specified windows in John Adams and Washington Towers in Southwest.

The decision was reached last night at a meeting between Southwest officials and John Findley, Area Management Coordinator for the Physical Plant. The meeting was called as a result of excessive yelling between the two dorms and several incidents of objects being thrown out of the dorms, including an incident early yesterday morning in which a student was injured.

Officials attending the meeting expressed the belief that the throwing of objects from the dorms would cease if screens were bolted or soldered onto the windows.

Findley said that "work will begin immediately to affix the screens, beginning with the lounge windows, and followed by the even number rooms in Washington" (the side facing John Adams).

Early yesterday morning, Steven Rodman was struck on the side of the head by a roll of toilet paper thrown from Kennedy Tower while he was entering Thoreau dorm at about 1 a.m.

Leo Froio, head of residence at Thoreau, yesterday said that "Steve was knocked unconscious for about 30 seconds, before he came to, not knowing what happened. He was taken to the informary where he will remain until at least Monday." Froio said that Rodman has both eyes bandaged, although he will not lose sight in either eye.

On Wednesday a weight thrown from Washington Tower smashed the window of a car parked in a lot below.

Findley said that the Physical Plant is "sending out bids for a new type of screen that cannot be removed and are made of a heavier mesh" It will be about two weeks before the bids are submitted and accepted, and the present screens will be used in the meantime.

To begin to curb the problem, floor counselors at the meeting exchanged telephone numbers so that if someone is seen throwing objects or yelling from the dorm, a floor counselor can be called immediately.

"I think there are people in this room who know who's doing it," said Floyd Martin, an associate head of Southwest, apparently referring to the floor counselors that were present.

Also attending the meeting were heads of residence of both dorms who expressed the concern that students sometimes are reluctant to turn in offenders who might be friends. James Moriarty, head of residence in John Adams Upper, said "you have to draw the line somewhere. You have to be loyal to the people of Southwest before you are loyal to your friends."

Martin said "We have to let them know that we are going to come down hard on them. I'm not talking about a temporary suspension. I'm talking about a permanent suspension from UMass, and as far as I am concerned, any university." Martin added that the UMass police are prepared to take criminal ac-

Mao: Great leader, not ruler

By KEVIN CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

A University of Connecticut professor, speaking at the Revolutionary Student Brigade forum to the late Mao Tse-tung, last night, called him "one of the greatest leaders, not rulers of our time."

Norman A. Chance, an anthropology professor at the Storrs campus, cited "untruths reported by the western press in the coverage of Mao's death, at the seminar conducted in Machmer Hall.

"Though the western press called Mao a "great leader' some of their reporting and editorials did not," said Chance.

"The Wall Street Journal called Mao 'a political titan' and a 'Uptopian idealist', though some of the western press were somewhat complimentary," said Chance.

"Mao gave China a sense of self-respect", said Chance while criticizing a syndicated cartoon by Thomas Oliphant, which appeared shortly after Mao's death.

Oliphant's cartoon depicted Chinese peasants carrying Mao's coffin in an obvious sense of disarray.

Chance, who visited and lectured in China in 1972, called China's form of government "a concept democracy."

"The Chinese people have some rights which we do not think they do. They have the right of free speech, freedom of assembly and the freedom of choice," said Chance.

"A person who got on a soapbox to address a crowd would not say 'We should have a capitalist society,' but more likely he would say, 'We should increase our production ouput,'" said Chance.

Charles V. Bagli, a member of the brigade, opened the tribute with a brief history of China under the Communist regime.

"Mao was a pretty important man, said Bagli," important enough for grudging admiration from Ford and Kissinger, said Bagli.

"As a young man, Mao read books by Adam Smith, Napoleon and Benjamin Franklin. He was really impressed with some of Franklin's ideas," said Bagli.

Bagli also called Mao "a dreamer with his feet on the ground."

"Mao was able to immensely improve living conditions while he was leading China," said Bagli.

The Revolutionary Student Brigade spent one week organizing the tribute to the late Chinese party chairman, according to Bagli.

Chance is the former head of the University of Connecticut at Storrs department of anthropology and is presently a professor in the department.

"When I went to China I studies their educational reform systems and lectured on educational reforms here," said Chance.

"What the western press calls 'power struggles', the Chinese people call a struggle between two lines," said Chance.

"We are not honoring Mao because he was a mythical figure," said Chance, "but because he was a great leader."

"One of Mao's sayings was 'the working people are, indeed, the makers of history," said Chance.

Chance called Mao, "A revolutionary leader who gave his whole life to serving the people."

"Marxism-Leninism explains the laws of society," said Bagli, in his talk on the brief history of Communist China.

Buchwald to speak in FAC

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

Art Buchwald, the noted humorist and political columnist will be the first Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) speaker this semester. He will speak to the first 1,940 people who arrive at the Fine Arts Center Auditorium next Tuesday before his 8 p.m. lecture.

Those who do not get seats will be able to hear the talk over WMUA.

A syndicated columnist whose material appears regularly in over 500 books, Buchwald takes a light look at the gloomy world of politics. He has also written over 15 books, his latest titled "Washington is Leaking". For the cover photographs for this book Buchwald posed in various fountains in the Washington D.C. area and in the Reflecting Pool at the Capitol Mall. Passing tourists didn't even flinch, he said, taking it for granted that most people stood in the Reflecting Pool up to their waists.

Born in Mount Vernon, New York, he was raised in a series of foster homes on Long Island until he snuck into the Marines at the age of sixteen.

"I was afraid the war would be over before I got in, so I gave some drunk a half-pint of whisky and got him to sign my papers as my father," Buchwald recalls.

For this he was awarded the Runaway of the Year award last year (it was predated for 1942) from the Special Approaches in Juvenile Assistance Board.

He attended the University of Southern California from 1945 to 1948 and then went to Paris on the G.I. Bill of Rights. There he wrote for the International Edition of the New York Herald Tribune in Paris covering night clubs, movies, food and wine.

His columns became syndicated in 1952 and in 1962 he went to Washington to cover politics. He describes Washington as "Disneyland North", and has covered the Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon and Ford administrations.

To get jobs, start out early

Students wanting jobs found out how to get them from George Odione.....

By DARLENE LORKIEWICZ
Collegian Staff

Students who manage to get the jobs they want are those who start looking early, according to Dr. George Ordione, dean of the School of Business, in a speech to about 350 business, engineering and science majors yesterday at Mahar Auditorium.

Ordione also said students must leave a good impression on recruiters in order to land desired jobs.

Some qualities, he said, that are looked for in prospective employees, are intelligence or high grades, maturity, how well the interview was handled, if they had well thought out career plans and general friendliness.

Ordione said there are certain attitudes which cause recruiters to toally disregard some applicants. The "I am better than you are, you are all wrong and there is hope for you only if you reform yourself" attitudes, he said, will cause the applicant "to get heaved out of the interview."

Another point Ordione made, was for students to find out as much as they could about the company they were applying with. This shows the recruiter that the applicant is ambitious and really wants the job.

However, some applicants have been too well informed about the interviewing company, and in many instances they knew more about the company than the recruiters, he said.

Ordione also said because of Affirmative Action laws, numerous suits have been brought against large companies, causing them to give a favorable amount of attention to women, Chicanos and Blacks.

The first lecture on "How to Get Hired" attracted only a small audience, Ordione said, and last year a group of about 30 to 40 were in attendance.

To help students get started in their search for jobs, Clark Edwards, director of the Placement Services Center spoke to the audience at the conclusion of Ordione's speech, informing them of resources available on campus.

The placement center is involved in representing the students to the employer. The center also suggests codes of behavior for students during the job interview and schedules interviews with potential employers, he said.

Clark informed students that in order to arrange for an interview they must have credentials on file with the office. He said those interested in arranging for interviews should register soon, since interviews begin in two weeks.

The Placement Center offers services to students in the form of workshops on subjects like resume writing, a job bank with announcements from prospective employers, and general advice, he said.

During the year about 600 recruiters, representing 400 employers, interview UMass students, he said. The length of time it usually takes to get hired is about two to three months from the time of the initial inquiry.

Some major fields Clark considers good job prospects are accounting, marketing and engineering. He also advises students to keep their options open to travelling and accepting jobs outside the New England area.

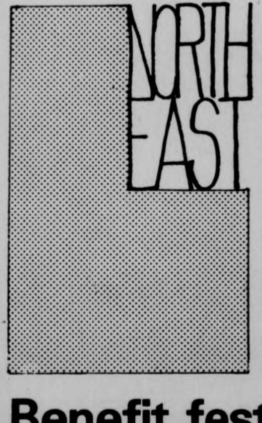
NEAG Fall concert set for Saturday

By ROB GALVIN
Collegian Staff

Final preparations were made last night for the Northeast Area Fall concert, by the Northeast Area Government (NEAG). The concert will be held this Saturday from noon to 5 p.m. with the bands, Deerfield and Midnight Shift performing.

According to NEAG President John Weisse, the weather outlook is not promising, and, if it rains, the concert is off, because there is no rain date.

Another topic discussed was the allocation of this year's dorm loans. These are monies given by NEAG to the Northeast dorms to cover expenses and possible projects. Although no set figure was decided upon, a proposal of $250 per dorm for the semester, will be discussed within the dorms and voted on next week.



Dates were tentatively set for two future events. On Friday, Oct. 29, NEAG will be sponsoring a movie, as yet unselected. A committee has been chosen to pick the film, which will probably be a horror film, in honor of Halloween, according to Weisse.

The annual Northeast semiformal will be held on Saturday, April 23. The affair will be held in the first floor Campus Center Auditorium, and the officers said they hope the event will be more successful this year.

NEAG also announced their new office is located in Knowlton House, room B-1. They had previously been located in Leach House. A proposal to have the weekly NEAG meetings rotate from dorm to dorm was discussed, and tabled till later.

Funds in the amount of $81, have been allocated to Hamlin House, in order to sponsor a coffee house this Sunday. The coffee house will open at 8 p.m. and is located in the Hamlin recreation room.

Free coffee and doughnuts will be served and there will be live, musical entertainment. The Hamlin Coffee House will run on alternating Sundays throughout the semester, if the response this week is encouraging.

Any Northeast area musicians who are interested in voluteering their talents, are asked to contact Dan Simes, 317 Hamlin, 6-9448.

Broad organization sought by People's Gay Alliance

By DOROTHY CLARK and KRIS FURRER
Collegian Staff

The People's Gay Alliance (PGA) this year is attempting to broaden the base of its organization because it has been too restrictive in its membership and further involvement of the entire student community is desired, according to Paul Amato, co-president of PGA.

The group is presently involved in several functions, including a Speakers' Bureau, which sends gay men to seminars, classes and counseling groups in the Five College Area to speak on gay issues.

The group is also in cooperation with the UMass Lesbian Union. There is also a Dance Committee which holds dances at Farley Lodge once a month and a coffeehouse committee, whose events also take place at Farley Lodge.

The PGA has provided various workshops, such as one which was held on alcoholism last semester, and another which dealt with establishing an identity in a subculture. They have a HotLine, where concerned gay men will listen and give advice to those who call. The HotLine is in use during office hours, which are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m to 5 p.m.

Paul Amato stressed the changing of the organizational structure. People will be needed to staff the office and to serve as committee persons, rather than the situation of two or three people making most of the decisions which affect the PGA, as has been done in the past.

Committee persons are self-appointed to an established committee, or one of their own creation, Amato said.

The organization is open to lesbians, bisexuals, and heterosexuals, but at present it is basically gay, white males. Amato repeatedly said the organization is open to everyone and anyone who wants to volunteer their services and participate actively.

The PGA is attempting to establish a rapport with the other student organizations in the Five College Area. The organization is holding a gay disco tonight at Farley Lodge, near the football stadium from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. Free beer and punch will be served.

The PGA held its second meeting last night on the ninth floor of the Campus Center. There were about 40 in attendance and Amato said the PGA hoped to expand and integrate this number.

The People's Gay Alliance welcomes visitors to come by and find out what is going on, or just to chat. Their office is located in Room 413 in the Student Union Building. Drop by during office hours or call 545-0154.

Benefit festival today for Mass. Bottle Bill

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

An entertaining, informative "Indian Summer Festival" will be presented from to 6 p.m. by the Committee for a Massachusetts Bottle Bill.

According to Susan Kaplan of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG), the benefit concert is expected to raise $1000 in donations. She said Sen. James A. Kelley (D-Oxford), a supporter of the measure, has agreed to match the amount raised.

The event will be held on the Metawampe Lawn behind the Student Union building. Music will be provided by Mitch Chakour, Real Tears and Offering. Also, Earthfoods and Saga Food Service will serve refreshments for the event.

Bumper stickers and other informative material will be distributed and two cases of beer, in returnable bottles, will be raffled off.

"This is a chance for the people to really become aware of the Bottle Bill concept," Kaplan said.

Claiming that out-of-state bottle manufacturers have spent up to $300,000 in "propaganda" opposing the Bottle Bill, she added, "These companies are obviously frightened. They are ready to spend a lot more money on a media blitz, to try and persuade the people."

Kaplan said since the committee has only $8000 to promote the bill, "We must make people realize how important this is. The Bottle Bill is anti-litter and energy conserving. We can't afford not to pass it."

Budgeting process gives new students picture of ed costs

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

The University is currently in the process of changing its budgeting procedures to give incoming students an idea of how much their total education will cost, according to a member of the Undergraduate Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee.

Suellen Smith, Rents and Fees Committee co-chairperson, said a report in yesterday's Collegian, outlining the change in the University's budgeting schedule, contained several inaccuracies.

The story fails to differentiate, says Smith, between the University's fees schedule, which is being moved up this year to October to facilitate the transition to a new, multi-year schedule, and the yearly University budget which will continue to be developed until the spring semester as it was in the past.

Smith said the multi-year fee schedule will benefit the student who must plan the cost of a four-year education and who in the past was unable to compute it because of the rising cost of student fees and room rents.

The change to a four-year fee schedule is "a good thing in the long run," said Smith because it allows students to plan for the cost of their education.

However, Smith said, "This one year we are going to be caught in a real bind." The change in this years fee planning, for the 1978 fiscal year, allows only seven days for the senate group to come up with any alternatives should they disagree with the University's projections.

Smith explained the past schedule released the preliminary estimates to the Senate on Feb. 28, allowing them until late April to develop any challenges. The final determination of the fee rate, made by the trustees, was not set until June 1.

This year the schedule plans for the University's projections to be released Oct. 15, and the senate to return with their recommendations or alternative proposals within seven days.

The trustees, in accordance with the accelerated schedule will meet for their vote on Dec. 1, said Smith.

"We are trying to get the administration to say that the December approval date by the trustees is not inflexible," said Smith.

Parking regs enforced next week

By JAMES ODATO
Collegian Staff

Full enforcement of campus parking regulations is to begin next week, according to David L. Johnston, director of the Department of Public Safety.

Johnston said cars will be towed and tagged when violating on-campus parking restrictions. He called enforcement of parking regulations "the biggest problem faced by the Department of Public Safety."

Parking Enforcement Officer Sgt. Richard J. Wesoloski said a squad of 10 parking officers and five first shift police officers will patrol parking areas.

According to Johnston, parking citations can be issued from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., but day crew officers and guards finish at 3 p.m.

Varied fines of $10, $5 and $2 can be levied to parking violators depending on the seriousness of the violation.

Johnston urges all people to register their vehicles, watch times on parking meters, and be aware of proper parking areas.

Those with outstanding fines for parking violations will not be permitted to register for parking stickers, Johnston said.

He said warrants have been issued for the arrest of violators who have not paid fines, but admitted that persons living in other parts of the state would probably beat paying their parking fines.

"It would cost us more than a $10 fine to track them down," he said. An excess of $500,000 in parking fines remains uncollected dating back to 1973, he said.

In 1974, 32,575 parking citations were issued, 2,333 cars towed, and $103,513 was collected in fines, according to Johnston.

Only 13,843 citations were written in 1975, and $49,462 was collected in fines, but 4,243 cars were towed away last year, almost twice the number in 1974, he said.

Johnston, who attributes the decrease in parking citations to towing, said, "Towing is a great enforcement tool."

Sgt. Wesoloski said parkers disregard warnings, adding that about 400 warnings were issued this Tuesday without drivers responding by moving their vehicles.

All fines collected go to the Student Scholarship Fund, according to Lynn E. Santner, associate director of the Scholarship Office.

"It is an unrestricted scholarship fund, meaning undergraduates, graduates, and both in-and out-of-staters may receive it," Santner said. He said about $50,000 is given students each year, with the average grant ranging from $200 to $400, depending on the student's need.

According to the Parking Office, about 10,000 vehicles have been registered for this year, comparing to about 10,300 last year. Parking Office personnel say they believe more cars will be registered.

Because there are more cars than parking spaces, Johnston said, the Parking Office must rely on the rotation system. Under the system, all parkers will have a space if they do not expect to use it for an eight hour stretch and if there are no violators.

Both Johnston and Susan J. Campbell, coordinator of the Parking Office, believe the system is functional. "It works," said Campbell. "The only problem is not all persons will be able to park where they want."

She said about 11,000 various vehicles will be using the 9,500 available parking spaces.

Both the Department of Public Safety and Campbell stress the importance of the Student Senate Transit Service, a free shuttle service for University staff and students both on and off campus.

"The shuttle system has been God-send," Johnston said.

Mike Sharff, assistant manager of the service, said there are more people riding the buses this semester.

However, he said "I don't expect the buses to get any more crowded once parking enforcement begins.

Parking stickers range from $3 for renewals of peripheral lot stickers to $55 for the lots closest to the center of campus.

Across from Blue Wall

New cash facility will be in Reading Room

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

A new cash handling facility may be constructed by the start of next semester in what is now the Reading Room across from the Bluewall in the Campus Center, according to Bud Wilkes, Campus Center manager.

Wilkes said last night at a Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) meeting that the new facility would shorten lines for check cashing and increase security. A present cash handling facility in the Student Union has a total of 420 square feet, which is totally inadequate, Wilkes said.

A security door system, teller stations, a receiving safe and alarm components will cost about $14,786, Wilkes estimated. Utilities, walls yet to be built and a fire proof safe brings the estimate to $38,000.

The new facility would have about 1900 more square feet than the present facility has, and six teller stations would handle the check cashing and lab fees now handled in the Student Union. Lab fees are now collected at one end of the candy counter in the Student Union, and according to Wilkes, this system of two cash handling operations is a security problem.

He suggested that as a temporary measure, more rooms could be designated as quiet study rooms on the Campus Center daily schedule.

Wilkes hopes the Campus Center can absorb at least some of the cost for construction. He said the cost could have some direct effect on the $64 Campus Center fee, however.

The new facility, if it becomes a reality, will not provide the services a commercial bank has. The new cash facility will not handle loans, for instance, but "it will maximize the services we do have," according to Dean William F. Field, acting Director of the Campus Center, who also attended the meeting.

The idea of a commercial bank in that area started a year and a half ago, when bids were sent out to area banks. At that time, the First National Bank of Amherst proved most financially feasible. It would have paid $24,000 rental fees for the first year of operation. The space the bank would have occupied at that time was the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union, but now the Student Federal Credit Union occupies that space.

Michael Pill, a BOG member said "At least the Campus Center cash handling facility will not chase the Credit Union away."

A non-commercial bank will be more flexible as far as hours are concerned, Dean Field said. "If we have to open on Saturdays and holidays, we'll be able to do it." The facility will also procure student employment, he said.

Late this summer Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said he still endorsed the idea of a commercial bank. He said a commercial bank could lower the present Campus Center fee "about $5."

"At least the Campus Center cash handling facility will not chase the Credit Union away."

Chile military junta especially harsh on the universities

Osiel Nunez discusses the military junta in Chile, and how it has affected student life there. (Staff photo by David Olken)

By BETH LEFEBVRE
Collegian Staff

The military junta of Chile is especially harsh on the universities in that country Osiel Nunez said in a speech before 50 people last night in the Commuter Assembly Lounge.

He said he believes an almost total destruction of the scholastic system has occurred, as almost all the classes are being censored, and also being presented in a way that satisfies the Fascist government.

In many cases, recent history courses and political courses are not even presented, he said.

The government, Nunez said, has allotted few funds for the universities, so the price for tuition and fees has risen at an unbelievable rate. Students are forced to undergo three months of military training to graduate, and for these reasons about 50 per cent of the students have not returned, he said.

According to Nunez, since the students are not returning to school, they are flooding the job market. Because they have no experience, they are not hired for anything and as a result are increasing the economic pressure that the Chileans are living under.

The students have begun to consolidate and fight the junta but it has taken three years to organize. Nunez said he feels the forces against the military have risen strongly and that hopefully the world is seeing the last remains of a regime which is violating the personal rights of its citizens.

Not just the students, but all Chileans have been denied the right for a free press, the right to a freedom of speech, the right for a free trial and the right for public demonstrations, he said.

Nunez points out that violations of any of the dictatorial rules often means prison for years, a term at one of the many concentration camps or even execution.

Political pressure from outside governments and internal pressure from students and workers has eased up slightly, according to Nunez, but as an exile from his own country, he said the slight easing of the pressure is not enough.

Student Union bear hits 20

By TRISH MASTENDINO
Collegian Staff

A side note to the visit of UMass President Robert C. Wood and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to Japan's northern island of Hokkaido, is that a gift from Hokkaido University students to UMass has been sitting in the Student Union building for almost 20 years.

The bear, located directly above the main entrance, was given to UMass in recognition of the University's long established friendship with Hokkaido. The life-sized, hand-carved bear is symbolic of Hokkaido's government and university.

On January 11, 1957, UMass President Jean Paul Mather presented the bear at the dedication ceremonies of the then new Student Union building.

Mather had previously made a trip to Japan in September to help organize an exchange program between the two universities, and himself participated in the dedication ceremonies of Hokkaido University's Student Union, named the Clark Memorial Center.

At the time of the bear's arrival on campus, Winter Carnival Weekend was in full swing and an Associated Press photograph of the bear with five UMass beauties tempted journalists from Life and Time magazines and the New York Times to see the festivities.

A close relationship between the University of Hokkaido and UMass has existed since 1876 when William S. Clark, then president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College accepted an invitation extended by the Japanese government to help establish an agricultural college in Japan.

In the following years, a former student of Clark's, W.P. Brooks, continued the friendship and became president of Sapporo Agricultural College.

One UMass professor, who was at the University at the time of the dedication, said last night in an interview he regretted the lack of a permanent public display in which gifts from Hokkaido University might be more fully appreciated by students.

Financial Benefits
In addition to its full 4-year scholarships, Army ROTC offers 3-, 2-, and 1-year scholarships for which all cadets are eligible to compete. You don't have to be a scholarship winner to take Army ROTC, or to receive the $2500 paid to all cadets during their last two years in the program.

Curriculum
The subject is leadership. The course is Army ROTC. The curriculum, quite different from the "left-right-left" drill sessions and military history classes of yesterday, is exciting, challenging and flexible. Practical leadership with on-hand adventure training and management experience aid in developing men and women to shoulder greater responsibilities, at an earlier age than most other graduates.

Job Opportunities
Upon graduation as a commissioned Army officer and selection for active duty, you'll have an employment option starting at $10,500. Such an option is invaluable among college graduates facing extreme difficulties in today's job market.

News in Brief

Non-Catholic masses

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope Paul VI yesterday decreed Roman Catholic priests may say public masses for the repose of dead non-Catholic Christians under special circumstances.

The Vatican Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, in a decree issued under the Pope's authority, said the existing ban on such masses "shall continue to be the general rule," but bishops could grant exceptions in patticular cases.

The decree said such exceptions could be granted "whenever both the following conditions are verified:

—"The public celebration of the masses must be explicitly requested by the relatives, friends or subjects of the deceased person for a genuine religious motive.

—"In the bishop's judgment, there must be no scandal for the faithful."

The congregation said Roman Catholic priests in many countries were being asked to celebrate such masses, "particularly when the departed showed special devotion and honor for the Catholic religion or held public office at the service of the whole civil community," such as a Protestant president of a country where Catholics live.

The decree said the restrictions applied only to public Masses.

Boston protest

BOSTON (UPI) — Police arrested 28 women, including a member of the Boston School Committee, as they staged an antibusing sit-in yesterday outside a high school on historic Bunker Hill.

One protestor, a 56-year-old woman, collapsed from an apparent heart attack at a nearby police station while being booked on disorderly conduct charges, police spokesman Albert Knuipis said.

Beatrice T. Longstaff, rsident of the street in Charlestown where the sit-in occurred, was under evaluation in the emergency room of Massachusetts General Hospital, a hospital spokesman said.

Among those arrested outside Charlestown High School was School Committee member Elvira "Pixie" Palladino, a leader of militant opponents to a three-year old federal court order desegregating city schools. The elected, five-member School Committee supervises public education in the city.

All were later released on personal recognizance and ordered to appear in court Oct. 1.

The sit-down in the middle of an intersection blocked a school bus arriving to transport students to an occupational training program, a school spokesman said.

"I thought we were very peaceful," Mrs. Palladino said after her arrest. "We sat down very quietly and didn't utter a sound.

Seabrook nuke hurts

BOSTON (AP) — Industry and labor groups have joined here to warn that any further delay in building the $1.4 billion nuclear power plant in Seabrook, N.H., will seriously hurt New England's economy.

The six organizations said Wednesday they would ask to present their case for going ahead with the construction to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

"Without energy we are without jobs and we face social and financial chaos," said Edward J. King, president of the New England Council for Economic Development.

Joining the Council in supporting the project were the Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO; the Massachusetts Chapter of Americans for Energy Independence; the Massachusetts Building and Construction Trades Council, AFL-CIO; the Massachusetts Construction Industry Council, and Associated Industries of Massachusetts

Abortion amendment opposed

WINDSOR LOCKS, Conn. (AP) — The wife of the Democratic vice-presidential candidate said yesterday she opposes any constitutional amendment banning abortion.

At an airport news conference, Jean Mondale said, "Women should have the right to make decisions affecting their own lives," including whether to have an abortion.

She said she sympathizes with women who might feel they need an abortion.

Mrs. Mondale also has said she sympathizes with those who seek to preserve life, referring to anti-abortion activists.

No action on Scott

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Ethics Committee has voted to take no action against GOP Leader Hugh Scott and most other senators who allegedly received illegal contributions from Gulf Oil Corp., it was learned yesterday.

The vote was 5 to 1 in a secret session Wednesday.

Three members who allegedly received Gulf funds voted to take no action. They were Chairman Howard Cannon, D-Nev.; Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., and Carl Curtin, R-Neb.

Only Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., cast a dissenting vote at the unannounced meeting, which ended the committee's investigation into charges that Gulf lobbyist Claude Wild Jr. parceled out hundreds of thousands of dollars in company funds to various members of Congress over a 13-year period.

Scott never has denied receiving Money from Wild, but has maintained that he thought the funds were legal private donations, not corporate contributions.

Tuition tax credit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate yesterday approved by voice vote a program of tax credits designed to ease the cost of college tuitions.

The program was attached to a minor House-passed bill in hopes of final congressional approval before adjournment.

The tuition tax credit was dropped in conference from the compromise tax reform bill.

The program would provide a full credit against taxes paid for the first $100 in tuition costs beginning in 1977 and rise to $250 by 1980. The program, however, would not go into effect until July 1, 1977.

Chairman Russell B. Long, (D-La.), said he was "encouraged" that an agreement could be reached with the House and that President Ford "can veto or sign it on its own merits."

Sen. Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, estimated the first five-year loss in revenues at $3.2 billion and said "taxpayers will not benefit at all."

Recall Rizzo?

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — A judge yesterday validated a petition seeking the ouster of controversial Mayor Frank L. Rizzo, and ordered a special recall referendum placed on the Nov. 2 general election ballot. Rizzo said he would fight the ruling to the state Supreme Court.

The mayor also criticized Common Pleas Court Judge David N. Savitt, who validated the petition and ordered the issue placed on the ballot, as a "political enemy."

Hearst sentence date set

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Patricia Hearst yesterday was ordered to appear in court Sept. 24 for final sentencing on her conviction for taking part in a San Francisco bank robbery in 1974 while she was underground with the Symbionese Liberation Army.

The date was set by U.S. District Judge William Orrick, who said he would hear defense pleas for leniency and an expected motion for a new trial before pronouncing sentence.

Miss Hearst, 22, who currently is being held in the federal Metropolitan Corrections Center in San Diego, was convicted March 20 by a jury of seven women and five men of taking part along with four SLA members in the robbery of a Hibernia Bank branch on April 15, 1974.

She was sentenced by trial Judge Oliver J. Carter to the maximum term of 35 years in prison on two counts, armed bank robbery and use of a firearm in commission of a felony.

Carter said at the time he was imposing the maximum sentence becasue it was the only way he could get additional psychiatric examination of the newspaper heiress to help him reach a final decision on her sentence, which he said he would reduce. However, Carter died June 14 and Orrick was assigned to the case.

Orrick is expected to follow Carter's guidelines, normal under similar circumstances.

Carter has said he was opposed to straight probation for Miss Hearst, and federal prosecutor James L. Browning Jr. said he would not be surprised if Miss Hearst received a term of about six years in prison under the Youthful Offenders Act.

Miss Hearst's chief defense attorney, F. Lee Bailey, said in June that new evidence has turned up in the case and he will ask for a new trial on the basis of it.

No matter what the sentence, Miss Hearst still is scheduled to face trial Jan. 10 in Los Angeles on an 11-count indictment charging robbery, kidnapping and assault in connection with a shooting incident at Mel's Sporting Goods in Inglewood, Calif., a month after the bank robbery.

Two SLA members, William and Emily Harris, were convicted on several charges in the Inglewood case.

Miss Hearst also is expected to testify at the trial of the Harrises on the original charges of kidnaping her from her Berkeley, Calif., apartment Feb. 4, 1974. A grand jury is scheduled to hear secret testimony on that case Sept. 27.

More jurors chosen in Saxe trial

BOSTON (UPI) — Three more jurors were chosen yesterday for the murder trial of Susan Saxe, accused of being an accomplice in a 1970 bank robbery in which a policeman was killed.

Selection of the two women and one man brings to four the number of persons selected for the 16-member panel. Three of those chosen so far are women and all but one are white.

Picked yesterdav were Jean M. Sullivan, 21, a secretary; David W. Carr, a tow truck driver in his 20s; and Leila K. Robbins, about 40, an unemployed adult education teacher.

Ms. Saxe, wearing denim pants and a white cotton shirt with brightly colored cuffs and front, conferred frequently with her lawyers, Nancy Gertner and Thomas Shapiro, about each juror who passed Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin's questioning.

John T. Gaffney, the assistant Suffolk County district attorney, will seek to prove Ms. Saxe, 27, is guilty of bank robbery and felony murder, a charge lodged against someone who allegedly participates in a crime in which a murder occurs. It carried a life sentence and is just as severe as a first degree murder charge.

The charges are in connection with a September 1970 robbery in which $26,585 was taken from the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank. William A. "Lefty" Gilday is serving a life sentence for shooting patrolman Walter Schroeder, who was fatally wounded in the shootout.

At the start of yesterday's jury selection session, McLaughlin granted about five motions entered by Ms. Gertner to change some of the questions asked of jurors.

But an obviously irritated McLaughlin snapped it was "improper, if not insolent" for Ms. Gertner to ask him to alter the tone of his responses to questions she proposed to him for relay to jurors.

During that questioning, several jurors, most of them white women in their 40s and 50s, were excused by McLaughlin when they acknowledged they had already reached a verdict in their minds because of the publicity in the case.

hole in the wall

The other morning something very strange happened to me, and I'd like to relate it to you.

It was a clear beautiful day so I decided that instead of trying to run people over with my bicycle, I'd walk to classes. I was half way between Southwest (where I pretend to live) and my 10:10 when I saw this large wall that wasn't there the day before. Right smack dab in the middle of the wall was a hole. Being a red-blooded American, I was naturally curious, but as I approached the hole, some guy jumped out from nowhere and grabbed my arm.

"You're walking the right way my friend, now keep on going and you'll be at that hole in just a few seconds."

I stopped. "Wait a minute! Who are you?"

"Never mind that. Just come over here to this hole. Now, take a look at how big that is."

"So?"

"So? Aren't you the least bit interested as to what's behind that wall?"

"Well, sure."

"Well, the only way you're going to find out is by looking through that hole."

"I'm not even sure I want to see what's behind there."

"I'll give you some hints. It's what everybody talks about. It's what your father and mother never told you about, except to tell you it was dirty, and it's what happens in those dreams when you wake up all hot and sweaty."

"Wow! All that's behind that wall?"

"You bet, kid."

"Well, damn it, I want to check that out."

"The only way you can do that is by looking through the hole."

"Why can't I just walk around to the other side?"

"It'll take you too long and, aside from being awfully exciting, it's awfully scary too."

"Okay, let me see through the hole."

"Right this way! Just put your eye right up..."

"Hold it!"

I turned around to see a woman jump out of nowhere and stand between me and the hole.

"Nobody's looking through my hole in any wall while I'm here!"

I turned to the guy I was already talking to.

"Who's she?"

"Don't worry about a thing son, I'll have her out of the way in no time."

"No you don't! You're not getting rid of me that easily!"

"Look! I run a legitimate business here!"

"Look kid," now she was talking to me. "You don't want to see what's behind there."

"I don't?"

"It's a waste of time and money. It's stupid, its junk, its sexist, its...."

"I want to see it."

"Come on. Can't you see he's just trying to make money off of you? He's trying to use you."

"I don't care. If what's behind that wall is what he says it is, I want to see it."

"It perpetuates stereotypes that are destructive, as well as insulting, to women."

"I don't know that."

"I do!"

I turned to the guy who was now just standing there listening tous argue.

"It's your choice kid. You don't have to see it if you don't want to."

"Are you making money off of me?"

"Of course I am, but if you don't pay me, there are plenty of others who will."

"And you don't see anything wrong with it?"

"I don't, no. But there are certainly others who do."

The woman grabbed my arm and turned me around.

"There are other ways to spend your money. He's right, I can't make him stop showing you what's behind the wall but I can appeal to your better sense of judgement."

"But what he's showing is what I've always wanted to see."

"That's what he's telling you but do you really believe it?"

"Hey, leave the kid alone already. Come on kid. The show's about to begin."

"Don't offer him something that's not really there!"

"It's the closet he's going to get for a while!"

"What's behind there is not the be-all and end-all of life, you know!"

"It's a natural urge that begs to be satisfied!"

"But your gimmick here is a poor substitution!"

"It'll come close enough!"

I stood there and watched the man and the woman stand almost nose to nose while shouting their remarks at each other. I quietly backed away and started toward my class. Both of them were arguing so hard that they didn't realize I had gone.

"Well," I thought, "I'll have to come back some other time. After all, I'd still like to see what's behind that wall."

Readers' respond to porno view

To the Editor:

Reading Sparks and Allen on pornography, you get the impression they're not even talking about the same thing.

Allen begins by saying: "Show me a movie that portrays sex...on an egalitarian, nonoppressive level, and we will have risen above the sludge called pornography." This definition reduces the rest of her argument to tautology.

That is, according to her, pornography must see "women...as perverse sickies in a lesbian affair." This is not because of anything in the society at large, as she tries to make you think. Rather, from the unique way Allen defines pornography, any work which did not portray lesbians as "sickies" would not be pornography! No matter how erotic the contents!

This special definition clouds the rest of her argument. So it is not really a condemnation of what we think of pornography to claim that "submission of women is used as erotic stimulus". Again, those skinflicks that don't do this are not "pornography."

Most of the rest of her column is devoted to ways that erotica should be less oppressive. (and I agree — it should not be oppressive at all).

Her argument is consistent, but comes off sounding as if she wants to ban dirty movies. This ain't so. Allen just wants to ban dirty movies that advocate "submission of women", which is very different from what she apparently is asking.

The second part of her column is devoted to "the banning of sexist films on this campus". Allen begins by asserting "the same way-violence on TV affects...attitudes and behavior..., porno influences the ways...people think...and consequently, act." This is crediting pornography, with entirely too much power. First, no one knows how subliminal suggestion works. Secondly, anyone who does try to act in the unvelievable roles that erotica offers, finds out fast that they don't work that way in real life.

Statistics don't "prove that the recent proliferation of porno is directly related to the increasing number of rapes and assaults upon women." No more than they "prove" that the increasing number of fires set is "directly related" to the presence of fire engines at most of them.

You cannot oppose an unjust power structure by asking everyone to give up more power to a central board of a few people. Education and action against specific films, for instance, would be ways of opposing sexism. Mobilizing people against the institutional arrangements that sustain sexism, among other evils, is good. But don't strengthen the machinery of oppression on this campus. Isn't it strong enough?

(Incidentally, it is ironic that Allen complains of "marble-mouthed liberals" who "do nothing", when they should be "kicking out" the pornographers "on their asses" for being too macho!)

Sparks goes to other extreme. His definition of pornography seems more usual. But he uses an extended civil liberties argument. However valid this is, he just doesn't deal with real issues like racism and sexism.

The argument that we must "make the masses aware of our point of view, not be forcing our ideas on others" means that, logically, we shouldn't change conditions unless 100 per cent of everyone agree absolutely on the proposed change.

Social change has to come from actions by large numbers of people, not by some special elite. Sparks understands that. But the support needed for this kind of action seldom appears because people talk about something or write books. It comes about because someone has dramatized the viewpoint clearly enough to make people draw connections between their own position and that evil.

I cannot believe that Sparks seriously thinks that people perceive sexism in pornography because "most x-rated movies often (but not always) show women glad that a man has raped them, or enjoying the way he forced them to submit to some bizarre practice. The issue isn't the sex itself — everyone gets their jollies in their own way. The problem is the way many (but not all) movies show macho male dominance of women as something that "all women want". It is a blatant form of the way sexism is justified in our society: "women want to depend on a man"; "women are naturally servile and dependent", etc. This is the real issue.

Sparks is so much easier to deal with that I only spent a third of this essay on him. The troublesome items have required much more thought, and Allen raised them. This is difficult because I mostly agree with her.

Mike Federow

To the Editor:

I've always considered myself a feminist, and a staunch supporter of the First Amendment, but apparently the two cannot be reconciled at UMass when it comes to x-rated movies.

I'm a woman and don't feel oppressed by this trash. I find x-rated movies offensive not because they're sexist, but because they're obscene.

Charlotte Allen's editorial in Wednesday's Collegian what "statistics prove" a correlation between porno and rape? Most of all, I'm sorry to see her waste her time and energy in an effort to suppress trash and by doing so align herself with those advocating censorship.

Lucy B. Montes

To the Editor:

Concerning the editorials on pornography in Wednesday's Collegian, I would like to delve deeper into the underlying issues and discuss the implications of each point of view. The basic elements at hand are censorship and sexism. Both are undesirable elements which stand in the way of an elightened society. Mr. Sparks clearly sees the potential harm of censorship; the restraint of free expression. Although it may seem morally justifiable when connected with such objectionable material as sexual exploitation, censorship must be taken for what it is and the potential abuses it lends itself to. From this perspective it is clear that Ms. Allen's argument shows a very shallow, naive conception of the problem.

In America today such films as "Deep Throat" make money and will continue to do so as long as there is a demand for such material, just as alcohol remained profitable during Prohibition. Obviously Mr. Sparks realizes this; unfortunately he can't seem to grasp the fact that such organizations as Baroque do indeed promote, or at least illustrate sexist ideas. In this light his rationalization for the operation of Baraque must fall to pieces. The means do not justify the ends.

Nevertheless no person has the right, and no person should have the power to stop his or anyone else's free expression at any time. What we must do is change and educate our society to a point where sexist material will no longer be desired. We must no impose restrictions which merely lash out at the symptoms, but rather attempt to wipe out the disease.

Mark E. Gunning

To the Editor:

Steven Whitman's commentary on mind manipulation in Wednesday's Collegian was right-on with the exception of a few points.

By some miracle I regained my senses — though not my belongings — and left the California branch of Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church known there as the Creative Community Project.

Without meaning to undercut the real intensity of mind control practiced by all the new "cults of unreason" my own five month ordeal and subsequent research has shown that the recovery through deprogramming and-or therapy takes different amounts of time depending on the case, but very rarely as long as a year as you stated.

Deprogramming itself can sometimes take only a few hours; just enough time to get the person thinking in a discerning way other than what's been drilled into his or her head day in and out for months or sometimes years.

The threat of these groups is real. They thrive by deception rather than any alleged goals or ideals. The best preventive medicine would be an informed public.

The fate of the Steinways

By JIM SCHPEISER

Mr. and Mrs. Steinway live in a closet. It's a rather large closet, as big or bigger than my living room; but it isn't a nice place to live.

They don't have any clothes or company.

Mr. and Mrs. Steinway live in a cement section of the Fine Arts Center at UMass. They are the grandparents, if not the greatgrandparents, of all the musical instruments at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Like some of our relatives in nursing homes across the country, they are shut off with hardly anyone to befriend them.

I have a tiny black kitten named Kahlua. My roommate has a dog who shall remain nameless.. This dog feels a lot like our relatives in the nursing homes feel.

Mr. and Ms. Steinway reminded me of those poor people, poor not in finances perhaps but in friends and-or desire to live full lives.

THe dog is old and sick and neurotic, and nobody wants her around; but the kitten is playful and outgoing.

We live our lives and even our children grow old

Mr. and Ms. Steinway are vary large, black grandpianos owned by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and entrusted by trustees of its University to remain in their deep dark cement closet until someone famous asks to play with them.

I came along and asked some kindly lady secretaries if I could play with Mr. or Ms. Steinway (although I didn't know them by name at the time), because the practice rooms were full with musicians. The ladies o.k.d. the situation with a higher-up's approval; so I kept them company for a couple of hours. I heard a woman singing when I took a break, sounding better than the piano.

Then Max the big jovial Fine Arts Center worker came down, worried that someone was mistreating the Steinways. He began chewing me out.

I defended myself. "You're not supposed to play down here or they would have put them up in the practice rooms."

"But they don't fit in the practice rooms."

"They're supposed to be for concerts. That's why they're being stored down here. It would mean trouble if all the music students came down here."

"I'm not a music student."

That's the gist of our silly conversation, rescued by one of the secretaries who calmed Max. Later, after we shook hands, I heard big Max say, "Do you know the one about the alligators?"

He added, "If you're up to your ass in alligators, it's hard to remember you came to drain the swamp", as if in apology for his bluntness.

Leaving, he said, "if you can play that nice, you can come back anytime we're here and use them, which won't be too often."

So my music problem is solved; but what can we do about the swamps of life that surround us..well us first of all, the University should find covers for the pianos, Max says, and maybe we can all reach out to some people on the outside and drain those deadly swamps of wasted hours of forgotten lives of loneliness in the middle of wealth and teeming humanity.

Training in violence

By PAUL FISHMAN

The conspicuous arrival of an ROTC recruitment booth on the Campus Center Concourse, complete with rosy audio-visual imagery of the joys of basic training, may strike many as incongruous. It has been only six months since Lynn Edward McClure, a 20 year old Marine recruit, was brutally beaten to death during Marine boot camp exercises ... and the true nature of ROTC was revealed.

While in this common military ritual, Marines often suffer black eyes, slashed lips, oh, an occasional shattered rib from the padded "pugil sticks", this time it was different. Lynn Ed McClure was slow. And retarded. On December 6, 1975, protesting, "I don't want to fight," the youngster dropped his stick and helmet.

According to testimony, the Marine Drill Instructor, Sergeant Harold Bronson, then ordered a succession of recruits to beat the helmetless McClure, shouting "Kill him, Kill him, Kill him." Recalled one disgusted recruit, "We were like animals." Under the urging of Sergeant Bronson, the last recruit slammed a blow against McClure's head, inches above the right ear.

Writhing in convulsions, McClure never regained consciousness ... dying three months later. Doctors said his head had virtually "caved in". He was buried in his Marine uniform ... with full military honors.

All charges against the drill sergeant have been dropped, "in the interest of justice."

Is this kind of savage violence uncommon? Richard Fox of the Los Angeles Military Law Panel thinks not. Years ago, Fox offered a $100 prize for any Marine recruit who survives basic training without being beaten by a drill sergeant. So far, there have been no takers.

But this revelation hardly disturbs the military. Explains the officer who recruited the retarded boy, "If a man ain't willing to die or kill, he doesn't have any business there."

ROTC, an institution promoting violence and sanctioning killing, has arrived on the Campus Center Concourse. And ROTC doesn't have any business being there, either.

On a rainy day

By SCOTT McKEARNEY

Stepping out of the rain and into the Campus Center, I am at once overwhelmed by the masses of people busily moving in every direction. Needing more attentiveness and dexterity than in semesters gone by I make my way to the Hatch; luckily finding a table in the back and slipping into the seat.

Sitting back, exhausted after office hopping and running into inquisitive acquaintances, my mind reviews how much energy was needed to accomplish so little and takes account of how much lies ahead before life and school feel settled for the semester.

Having reached the legendary and prayed for 'senior year', I still find getting started, locating that extra course, and in spare moments trying to make home feel like home, an exhausting and mostly empty experience.

Standing in lines, helping people with their schedules at work, finding directions, and overhearing conversations of anguished freshpeople struggling to beat the computer at its 'over subscribed' happy game, you get the sense that survival depends on not taking academic education too seriously, especially here.

Reflecting on the past three years of college, trying on different majors, performing some of the most eloquent lies of my life to get into over filled courses, trying my hand at the fanatically serious world of student politics, and most of all just trying to survive, I realize how little time or support there was for developing my individual interests and potentials. UMass 'reality' is too damned time consuming for any personal or romantic ideas like that, especially while stacking the cores and hustling the credits.

I think of the freedom, the peace, the chance to grow so anticipated when coming to college and wonder where did the time go? I only know where it has been passed.

I have been a lot of places since arriving for my college experience, struggled through many personal problems and realize that my real education-learning a little bit about living as an independent, hopefully thoughtful human being, has occurred in spite of the race race of bureaucratic hassles and rubber stamp academia.

So many people are chasing after dynamic careers and secure jobs, little understanding that real growth and success comes by listening to the feelings of the too often starved self within. All of the degrees, money and distinction, we chase, and all of the bureaucratic, programmed, and stifling rules we are socialized into serving, will never bring the serenity and self worth that all this phoniness promises.

Sometimes I would like to be the "Catcher in the Rye" and cut through the hassles for my new and old student friends who get so depressed and hyper trying to understand and plan their careers amidst this crazy beginning of each semester. It would not work though. One can only learn the hard way. Maybe some people will even get to like it and see where it all makes sense.

If getting started has got you down, do not worry — it is your human feelings showing through, listen to them and do not take it all too seriously.

Well it has been a nice cup of coffee but how can I get into that over-subscribed course? Let's see, what can I tell the Professor ... ?

More bike racks

To the Editor:

Originally this was going to be a nasty letter. A letter directed at all those thoughtless students who like to lock their bicycles sideways in the bike racks.

But the problem is caused by a shortage of bike racks. Students who ride bicycles to and around school have to, unfortunately, lock them up. It would be really nice for starters if there were a couple of more bike racks in front of the Student Union.

It's pretty ludicrous to have less than 100 spaces available at the Student Union when 25,000 people are using the place. Let's budget some money to purchase a few good racks. Think about it — wouldn't it be money well spent?

Anyone who is interested in Hillel or who is concerned about the Jewish community on campus is invited to come. This brunch will be the first of a series of open meetings to provide a forum for discussion of issues and suggestions for Hillel. The brunch begins at 11 a.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union. There will be a small fee to cover the cost of food.

Gay church house slated for Sundays

A house church is a small group of people (small enough in number to meet in someone's house) who meet weekly to discuss the issues in their lives as those issues relate to their religious outlook.

It is basically an exploration of faith on a scale which allows for depth of sharing. Although the format of gatherings may vary slightly, generally there is an opening reading to help focus the group toward a meditative-contemplative frame of mind. After responses to the reading, members may share events in their lives in an attempt to relate those events to their religious feelings (or, perhaps, to discover what their religious feelings are).

This group meets on Sunday evenings from 7:30 to 10:00 at Cottage B (behind Worcester Dining Commons).

For further information, call United Christian Foundation at 545-2661 or 545-2789.

Gay discotheque tonight at Farley

Smith music dept. hosts chamber recital

A chamber music recital arranged by Philipp Naegele, violinist and member of the Smith College music department, will be the first of this year's Smith faculty concerts. The recital will be held Sunday at 8 p.m. in Sage Hall.

The program for the concert includes the Duo in A major for violin and piano by Franz Schubert, the Trio in D minor for violin, cello, and piano by Felix Mendelssohn; and the Brandenburg Concerto in G major, for violin, two recorders, and small orchestra by Johann Sebastian Bach.

Joining with Naegele for the concert are Eugenie Malek, piano, and Bernard Krainis, recorder, both members of the Smith music department; Matthias Naegele, cello, music student and son of the violinist; and Sonia Linblad, a recent Smith graduate.

Members of the Smith College Chamber Orchestra will perform in the Bach concerto.

The concert is open free to the public.

tions against any student caught throwing objects from dormitories.

One floor counselor from Washington said that he believed that another problem in Southwest was that of people throwing objects back from ground level and hitting the lower floors.

John O'Leary, tower coordinator of John Adams, said that a crowbar was thrown through a second floor window last semester after a lot of yelling. "I think that the problem starts with the yelling," he said.

Moriarty said the residents of John Adams Upper "want to see the guy who threw the barbell out of Washington prosecuted."

Rob Gilbert, head of residence of Washington Upper, related an incident in which a tennis ball was thrown from Washington Tower at 7:30 a.m. yesterday.

The main concern expressed by those attending were to establish a feeling of community and to make Southwest residents aware of the serious situation.

Keven Fandel, head of residence of John Adams Lower, added that the focus of floor counselor training is to make counselors aware of the problem in advance so that they would be prepared to deal with it.

Martin closed the meeting by saying "the change must come from within. The police can't change things; it must be a joint effort of the students and the staff of the dorms."

GOVERNOR, IF I MAY JUST ADD A NOTE OF WARNING...
WHEN YOU MEET MR. FORD IN DEBATE NEXT WEEK, I'D GUARD AGAINST THE ATMOSPHERICS. "LOVE" AND "COMPASSION" ARE NOT ISSUES WITH WHICH POINTS ARE MADE.
THERE IS NO LOVE IN ABORTIONS, NO COMPASSION IN EMBARGOES! BUT THEY ARE SOCIAL REALITIES! THE PRESIDENT CAN ONLY BENEFIT IF YOU PERSIST IN UNFOCUSED POSITIONS!

Bromery also said the BOG was not representative of the students, and he cited a survey in which 79.1 per cent of the students surveyed said they wanted a full-service commercial bank somewhere in the Campus Center.

The BOG said the question was misleading because it included the clause, "if having such a bank were to reduce your Campus Center fee by $5 per year."

The board has been opposed to the idea of a commercial bank for both ideological reasons, and that such a bank might take customers away from the Student Federal Credit Union.

Field proposed that the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union be looked at for possible construction to a more closed in, secure and quiet lounge for study and music listening.

The present Music Listening room across from the Bluewall could be moved if a barber shop and the Campus Center Travel Service move to that space.

Those two moves were also proposed by Wilkes.

The Music Listening room is "horribly inefficient". The room has maintenance is too expensive to be feasible, Wilkes said.

Wilkes and Field said no moves will be made until adquate study space is mapped out.

Also discussed at last night's meeting was the rents and fees budget. The University is shifting to a multi-year budgeting schedule this year, requiring the budget to be completed by Oct. 22. The proposed budget will be issued to students on Oct. 15, leaving only seven days to prepare alternative proposals if they are not satisfied with the original proposal.

"I think we'll have some kind of Campus Center fee increase, but we're going to lay out the possible increases early in the year," said Dean Field. He said he thinks fees will begin to relax next year.

"At least we have an honest bond issue this time," he said.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Thursday, September 16 — Born today, you are one of those who cannot bear to have things other than your own way. Your reactions to your surroundings are in direct relationship to the degree of harmony in the immediate environment. Peace and quiet enable you to work well and profitably; disorganization causes you both mental and physical distress and keeps you from doing your best, no matter what sort of help you may receive in your efforts. You have an active mind that needs more or less continuous exercising. To be without some sort of intellectual stimulation for more than the briefest time works a very definite hardship on you.

You possess a talent for employing words to their best advantage. Public speaking or writing with the aim of changing other people's minds suits your talents well, for it is an endeavor that uses your gift for determined effort in combination with your natural powers of persuasion as they can be made manifest in language. Only a tendency to be peevish in the presence of higher-ups can keep you from successfully carrying out your aims as they are determined by your talents.

Restlessness at times causes you to miss out on opportunities for gain. There are times when you are so busy wondering what to do next to fill your days that you fail to recognize the possibility of action in circumstances or situations as they arise.

Friday, September 17

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — This is a day when your heart may well control your head. Make an effort to draw equally from reason and emotions; results lie therein.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Employ your natural ability for leadership today. You can make it easier for the young to achieve maturity if you show the way.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Serious argument with loved ones on the home front may cause you to lose out through inattentiveness on the employment scene.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — End the work week with an imaginative recovery from near failure. This is a good day for impressing higher-ups permanently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your desire to reach the top gets a considerable boost today from one who has your best interests at heart. Register gratitude.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Act quickly upon another's offer to gain for you a favorable position on the employment scene. The offer may not be made again.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Your love for humanity in general makes others feel especially kindly toward you today. Keep your own secrets in the evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A kindly approach to another's difficulties -- in spite of the harshness of the situation as a whole -- should make a solution possible by evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Because you are attracted by the new and different, you must be especially careful today not to fall in with bad company. Use your best judgment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Though you may not have expected to make gains of a material nature today, you should be able to do so without much effort late in the afternoon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Don't confuse another's reverence for fear. If you do, you will get one of the major surprises of your life before day's end.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A great deal of patience is required of the Leo today, especially if he is not to turn against a friend in need without knowing it.

Bombing defendant guilty

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Everett C. Carlson was found guilty Thursday in U.S. District Court of transporting explosives used in three Massachusetts bombings.

Carlson, who displayed no emotion as the verdict was announced, was the first defendant to go to trial in connection with the July 1 bombings of a National Guard truck in Boston, a jetliner at Boston's Logan Airport and the Essex County Courthouse in Newburyport, Mass.

Judge Edward T. Gignoux continued the case to an unspecified date for sentencing. The conviction carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Joseph A. Aceto, who pleaded guilty to similar charges last week, was the star prosecution witness during the four-day trial, held amid tight security.

Aceto testified that he, Carlson, Richard J. Picariello, 27, of Portland and Edward P. Gullion, 27, of Boston, operating as the Fred Hampton Unit of the People's Forces, bombed the three Massachusetts targets and planned other terrorist blasts during the weekend of the nation's Bicentennial.

Picariello and Gullion, both under indictment in the case, are on the FBI's list of 10 most wanted fugitives.

U.S. Atty. Peter Mills pointed to corroborating evidence gathered from FBI surveillance which showed Carlson among a group which left Picariello's apartment prior to the bombings and returned the next morning.

Testimony was dominated by Aceto, a 23-year-old Portland man who also pleaded guilty to transporting explosives used in the July 2 bombing at the Seabrook, N.H., Post Office and abortive bombings the following night at the A&P regional headquarters in Boston and the Polaroid Corp. in Cambridge, Mass.

Aceto, arrested July 4 in Danvers, Mass., following a high-speed chase, spent two days on the witness stand, in which he gave an insider's account of the Hampton unit, named for a slain Black Panther leader from Chicago.

Aceto recounted the group's origins, revolutionary ideology, and techniques of making bombs out of dynamite stolen from construction sites. He told of raising money by robbing three Maine banks and soliciting contributions from unidentified donors in Maine, Massachusetts and New York.

The witness said he and Picariello, seeking to demonstrate their opposition to a proposed utility rate increase, planted two bombs which damaged Central Maine Power Co. headquarters in Augusta on May 11. He described other planned targets, including a nuclear submarine at the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard in Kittery and jet planes at Pease Air Force Base in Newington, N.H.

Drill team meets tomorrow

By SUE SCANLON
Collegian Staff

This weekend the UMass Vet and Animal Science Dept. will sponsor a dressage show and combined training event. The dressage show will be held on Saturday, beginning at 8:30 a.m. The UMass Drill Team will also be performing on Saturday at noon. The combined training event will be held on Sunday, starting at 8:00 a.m.

In dressage, the horse and rider must perform a predetermined pattern of movements. The horse is judged on his precision, flexibility, and grace in executing these movements. Dressage requires a great deal of discipline on the part of both horse and rider. Many of the UMass riders will compete in this test of horsemanship.

In the combined training event on Sunday, the horse and rider is tested in three ways. The first is the dressage. In dressage the emphasis is placed on the balance, rythym, impulsion, calmness with keenness, and obedience of the horse.

The second phase of the event is the cross-country. Here the strength and endurance of the horse is put on trial. The rider must guide his horse over a demanding course of varied terrain. The horse and rider are also timed as they negotiate the different obstacles. The speed and type of obstacles make the cross-country the most dangerous phase of the event.

The final phase of the event is the stadium jumping. Again the horse and rider are timed as they travel over a pre-set course of jumps. However, the stadium jumping is held in an enclosed ring with large, more brightly painted fences. Points are taken off if a horse refuses at a fence or if he pulls down a rail off a jump. Although the rider tries to accomplish a fast time, precision and pace are most important. The horse and rider team with the least amount of penalty points after these three phases of the combined training event, is the winner.

There will be participants from all over the state competing in the dressage show and the event. All spectators are welcome. There will be food and refreshments on the grounds; all proceeds will go to the UMass Indoor Arena Fund. The Drill Team performance, the dressage show and the combined training event assure this to be an exciting show of horsemanship.

No, they are not off at Suffolk Downs. The UMass Drill team will be staging a match this Saturday at 2:00 p.m. The public is cordially invited. (Photo by Pam Katsurakis)

Booters drop scrimmage

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Perhaps the UMass soccer team has had too many scrimmages this pre-season.

The booters dropped their second straight scrimmage yesterday afternoon, as Amherst downed the Minutemen 4-2. On Tuesday the team lost to Brown, 6-1.

At least yesterday wasn't a total loss. At the same time coach Russ Kidd's first 11 players were losing to the Lord Jeffs. his second 11 defeated Amherst's second 11 by the score of 6-0.

Amherst jumped out to a 1-0 lead as Richard Dansoh scored the first of his three goals. Scott Bunbar put the Lord Jeffs up by two before Tony Biladeau tallied for the Minutemen. But Dansoh scored two consecutive goals to up the visitors lead to 4-1.

UMass got a goal from freshman Mike Shannon in the second half. But that's as close as the Minutemen came, as Amherst simply outhustled the seemingly tired UMass team.

"We obviously are still on the depressed side physically," said UMass mentor Russ Kidd.

On Saturday the booters go at it again in their final scrimmage before they face Bridgeport in the season's opener. The opponent will be Williams. Last year UMass beat Williams in a scrimmage by the score of 8-2.

Amherst coach Peter Gooding was happy with the win. "We're starting to look like a decent club," Gooding said. "I think the town has two very good soccer teams. Both UMass and Amherst have very good clubs."

After two straight losses, the UMass booters would like to have one more win under their belt before they face Bridgeport. Hopefully they can forget the last two games and play like they did in their first two scrimmages.

UMass opens YanCon play

Minutemen visit Bear country

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

"We love to play football so much, we'll go anywhere," said head football coach Dick MacPherson yesterday and the UMass football team is proving it by taking a six hour ride up to beautiful Orono, Maine to take on the Black Bears of the University of Maine tomorrow at 1 p.m.

The Minutemen also like playing the Black Bears as they haven't scored on UMass in six years and haven't defeated UMass since 1965.

But Maine may not be the patsy it was in recent years. Last year's game was close with UMass winning 10-0 and Maine outgaining the Minutemen 261 to 241 in total offense. UMass is still favored in the game by 14 points.

Maine also has a new coach in Jack Bicknell who has put in a new offense, the veer similar to UMass'. "They run our offense and more," said MacPherson.

"They're more diversified than we are, but that's surprising with a new coaching staff," MacPherson continued.

While the coaching staff is new, most of Maine's defense is not. It has nine starters returning from last year including captain Jack Legget, Maine's only member of the All-Yankee Conference team. Other returnees on the Black Bear's five-two defense of note are linebackers Scott Shulman, Chris Keating and defensive back Mike Crosgrove.

Mike's brother, Jack Crosgrove leads the Maine attack. More is expected of Grosgrove in leadins the Black Bear attack as he missed most of last season with an injury. He did play last year against the Minutemen and went 5-14 for 47 yards.

Maine does have experience at the skill positions on offensive with Crosgrove, Mark DeGregorio at flanker, Jim Dumont at fullback, Rudy DiPietro at halfback, and Rich McCormick at wide receiver. Last year DeGregorio was a halfback and McCormick was a defensive-back, where he lead the team in interceptions. Dumont was the leading rusher with over 600 yards.

While the skill positions are experienced, the whole forward wall has to be rebuilt from last year, and the Black Bears are thin in that area. They are short at those positions, too, as Maine lists its starting center and left guard at 5'11" and 5'10" respectively. Coach MacPherson discounts this though.

"It has been our experience that they down grade their size and play up their speed," said MacPherson. "Their players look bigger than they say and their skill people aren't as fast as they say."

"They are tough up front," coach MacPherson said.

Though both teams are 1-0, the records are deceiving. UMass beat a tough University of Toledo team last Saturday 28-14 while Maine trounced St. Mary's of Canada 49-14. "The hotter the fire, the sharper the edge," said MacPherson in reference to this fact. "They didn't have to play hard to win that one. They didn't show everything. That game gave no indication of what they're like."

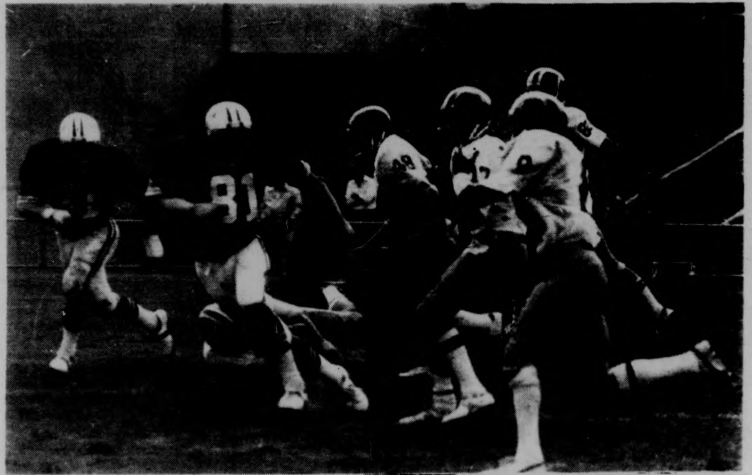
It is also the first game in Yankee Conference competition for both teams, and it's still too early in the season to take them lightly. We went up there and beat them 42-0 in '74 and we ended up tied for the title (the Bean Pot). They have some people back from last year's team that lost 10-0."

Someone not back from last year's win is co-captain John Toner. He received the doctor's clearance this week and will make the trip, but he will not play and might not play next week either.

Todd Holt, shaken up at near the end of the Toledo game, is all right and will play at right cornerback. With Holt healthy, John Van Buren has been moved back to wide receiver with John Gladchuk and Bob Zawada to shore up the thin wide receiver group.

Otherwise the starting lineup stays the same as Brian McNally will open as quarterback with Rich Jessamy and Billy Coleman behind him in the backfield. Jeff Lauder and Dennis Borbato will start at the tackle spots with Dennis Kimball and Gerry Greene at guard and Dave Williamson snapping the ball. Moses Williams and Kevin Cummings will split the tight end duty.

On defense, Steve Ciccolini will open at middle guard with Dennis Fenton and John Willis going at the ends. Peter McCarty and Joe McLaughlin, taking Toner's place, will be the linebackers with rovers Jack Tucker and John McDonald. The defensive backfield will be the same with Holt and Dave Croasdale at the corners and Ron Harris and Greg Sprout at the safties.



Rover Joe Bighham (81) and linebacker Joe McLaughlin (51) close in on Toledo running back Irv Kenerly (8) who is about to receive the ball. The defense will try to stop Maine tomorrow like it stopped Toledo last week as the Minutemen won 28-14. (Staff photo by Chris Turner)

Chaney joins Jabbar, Lakers

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (UPI) – The Los Angeles Lakers Thursday signed Don Chaney, considered one of the finest defensive guards in pro basketball, to a multi-year contract, filling the need of the "big guard" for which the faltering club had been searching.

Chaney, 30, a 6-foot-5, 210-pounder, came to the Lakers as a free agent after playing last season with the now defunct Spirits of St. Louis in the ABA, which folded earlier this year.

A first-round draft out of Houston in 1968, Chaney played seven seasons with Boston, helping the Celtics win two NBA and four division titles from 1969-75.

"I am delighted to have Don with us," said new Laker coach Jerry West. "We needed a big strong defensive guard with his qualifications."

Chaney said his right knee, which he injured last February, is completely healed.

"I had an operation on it April 20," he said. "It's okay now." He said he had negotiated with some other clubs, "but when the Lakers showed an interest in me, I leaned that way. My mother lives here and I like this area."

Chaney played on the Houston team that scored a 71-69 upset win over UCLA in the Astrodome in 1968 that broke the Bruins' 47-game win streak. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, now the Laker center, was the star for UCLA.

URI drops netmen

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The men's tennis team opened its fall season yesterday with a disappointing 6-3 loss to Rhode Island. After splitting with Rhode Island in the singles competition UMass went on to lose all of the doubles matches.

Wins by singles players Adam Rosen, Alan Green and Ricky Shartin were not enough to lead the Minutemen to victory.

Road matches continue to haunt the netmen from last season when all of the team's losses were on the road. This fall half of the team's matches are away and in order to break .500 the Minutemen must win on opponents courts.

The tennis team faces a strong Boston University team Saturday, here on the UMass campus. Last spring the netmen barely greased by B.U. 5-4. In contrast to today's losing performance, it was the doubles teams that pulled out last spring's victory over B.U. Coach Bill Brown expects B.U. to be a tougher opponent than Rhode Island.

Saturday's match will be played on the courts near Boyden Hall at 2:00.

Women harriers to run Lowell Invite

By DAVID RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's Cross-Country team will face its first test of the 1976 season tomorrow morning at 11:00 when they travel to Lowell to compete in the Lowell Invitational Meet.

The race will be contested on a three mile course through the woods and over paved roads of the Lowell-Dracut State Forest. Lowell University will host the meet.

Physically, the Minutewomen are generally healthy, with only minor injuries nagging a couple of runners. Sue Swartz, one of the top five harriers last year is nursing a strained calf muscle. Bonnie Bukowski, Laurie Wolfe, and Cathy Martin all have shin splints and are questionable participants in the meet.

Coach Ken O'Brien elaborated on the team's preparation by saying, "It's the same weekend we started competition last year with the team, but this year's team is apparently a little bit ahead of last year's schedule because it's their second year and last year was their initial start."

Of the entries received up to Thursday, Brandeis would seem to be the team most likely to give the Minutewomen a strong challenge. They have a trio of strong runners in Mona Millstein, Donna Randall, and Robin Snyder. A good prospect for top individual in the meet is Marina Buckley, an Amherst College freshwoman. Challenging them for the championship will be the top returning UMass harrier, Jane Welzel. Welzel will be trying to break the "second place jinx" that seemed to plague her last season.

O'Brien had a very definite idea of his philosophy for the meet. "It will be the kind of a meet where, rather than go down there with preconceived, absolute goals or objectives, we'll go to gain experience for those kids who are just starting in college cross-country, and at the same time break the ice for the kids who are returning from last years team," he said.

"We really want to find out where we stand physically. So far the kids have looked good in workouts, but we have no idea where we stand in competition." He added "It'll give us ten days between this race and the next race to plug up any gaps we find tomorrow."

O'Brien concluded, "Of course it would be good to win."

Metawampe strikes again!

I can still see the newspaper headlines in front of me; "Texas is upset," "Alabama is upset," "USC is upset." Well, let me tell you, the Great One is upset. The Resplendant Redman goes to all the trouble of looking into the future — all the bother of graduating third grade so that he can lear to write — goes out of his way to present to you his unerring knowledge of the future, and now this. Yes, the future has played a dirty trick on the Ingenious Injun ... a trick he is not likely to soon forget.

But enough dwelling in the future. What will be done will be done. I must have the courage to move behind to the past. I therefore take this nostalgic moment to relate to you the incident of the naming of Metawampe Lawn.

It was a mild, clear Saturday morning as spring settled upon the tiny town of Amherst. The birds chirped, leaves bloomed on trees and everyone at the ceremony was hung over from the night before. A dignitary smiled and stepped forward. He asked that the statue made in my likeness be unveiled. The crowd froze as the man spoke once more; "I hereby name this statue 'Metawampe Lawn' in honor of Harvey Lawn, this school's first Dean of Admissions."

I was so angry that I didn't bathe for a year.

Tougher opponents highlight UMass' '76 football program

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

A major factor in determining the won-loss record of any team in any sport is the schedule. The "enemy, the "bad guys", cali them whatever you may, the fact remains that opponents usually have a great deal to say when discussing the outcome of a season.

For the UMass football team, overcoming the adversaries of a tough schedule will be the key in the Minutemen's quest for a Yankee Conference championship and possible post-season play.

Dick MacPherson's forces began their season on a high note with their 28-14 victory over Toledo, a newcomer to the UMass schedule. Toledo, a school rich in football history, five years ago possessed a 35-game winning streak, the longest in the nation at that time. The football program for the Rockett's has taken a downhill slide since that win skein, but nonetheless, for UMass to beat an established football school should give the Minutemen confidence to overcome other strong opponents.

Aside from the regular Yankee Conference schedule, UMass will once again meet forces with powerful Boston College. Newcomers, in addition to Toledo on the UMass schedule, will be Ivy League favorite Harvard, and Rutgers, a Division I school with its football program on the upswing.

The following is a look at each opponent order of their playing dates:

Maine — One must look back seven years to find the last time the Black Bears have scored against UMass, when in 1969 Maine took a 49-7 zapping from UMass. And Maine has had even less success vs. UMass since then, being shut out six years in a row, including a latest 10-0 defeat last year.

With a record as embarrassing as that, one might figure a Maine score tomorrow might spark a state-wide celebration. But really, the 1976 Maine football team is no joke. Led by a superb senior quarterback in Jack Cosgrove, and an excellent receiver in Mark DeGregorio, the Bears do have an offense, and if last week's 49-point explosion against St. Mary's of Canada is a valid indication, it may be a potent offense at that.

Harvard — The Crimson are the talk of the Ivy League this season, and with players of the caliber of QB Jim Kubacki (fourth in the nation in total offense last year) All-East tight end Bob McDermott and split end Jim Curry (led nation with 20 yards per catch) as his targets, Harvard may be more action than talk.

UMass and Harvard haven't met since 1973, with the Cambridge kids winning, 24-7.

"Harvard is a game we love to play," coach MacPherson said. "We're very competitive with Ivy League teams," he added, "We've never been embarrassed by them, and they've never been embarrassed by us."

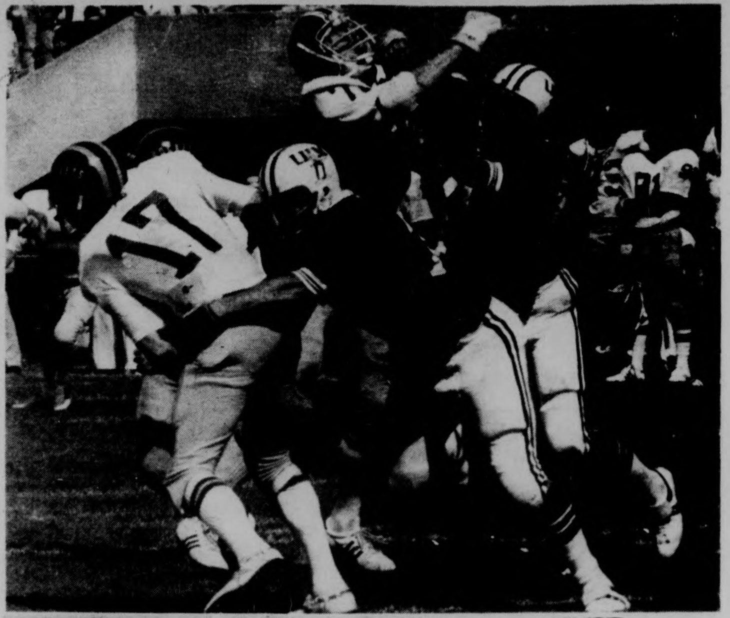
Boston University — The Minutemen have beaten B.U. four years in a row, scoring a 21-0 shutout last year. With 10 starters back on defense, though, the Terriers have to be reckoned with.

Coach Paul Kemp says his BU team is the hardest hitting group he's ever had.

Defensive ends Dave Lindstrom (6-6, 247) and Kevin Graham (6-2, 228), both seniors, are considered superb, and should anchor the defensive line.

Offensively, the Terriers possess the fine passing combination of junior quarterback Gary Geiger to receivers Steve Richards and Jim Sturgis.

Rhode Island — URI is the only team in the YanCon that UMass has an overall losing record to, and with a two game winning streak vs. the Rams, UMass hopes to turn that record around.



This is how the 1976 Minutemen will have to attack their new opponents on their schedule. (Staff photo by Jim Higgins)

Experience marks this Rhode Island team with nine defensive and seven offensive starters returning, including 1974 All-American running back Rich Remondino. With fullback Rick Moser to compliment him, Rhody's running attack will be one of the best UMass faces.

Connecticut — What can be said about this rivalry? As always, the team who wants this game the most usually finds a way to get it. Last year it was UMass romping 29-14, but who can forget the emotional 10-9 Huskie win two years ago?

With 10 starters back on offense, including All-New England running back Nick Giaquinto, UConn has the experience.

The game will be homecoming at UMass, and hopefully Connecticut won't ruin it again.

Rutgers — When Rutgers added this UMass game to its schedule better than three years ago, no one figured the New Jersey school would later upgrade its program. Anyway, Rutgers did, and as a Division I school, will present quite a problem to UMass.

The two teams have met twice before, with the Minutemen grabbing both contests, the last in 1973, 25-22.

Holy Cross — With a new coach (Neil Wheelwright) and a new offense (wishbone), this is supposed to be the year of improvement for the 1-10 Crusaders. Last week proved differently with a 17-3 loss to New Hampshire.

Sophomore QB Pete Colombo will run the wishbone, but with only three returning starters on offense, Wheelwright may be asking too much.

New Hampshire — The Wildcats ruined any chances for post season play with a 14-11 victory last year. UNH then won two games in post-season play to give the Yan Con a push in recognition.

Running back Bill Burnham victimized UMass last year, and showed no mercy last week with Holy Cross.

QB Allen threw only one interception last year, and with the confidence gained in post-season play, UNH may win many games on pure emotion.

Boston College — Why, you might ask? I don' know. Anyway the high-flying Eagles, complete with Glen Capriola, linebacker Pete Cronan, and a stunning upset against Texas, will end out the UMass schedule, and hopefully nothing else.

UMass lost by only 10 points last year, but by a whopping 70- margin two years back. The Eagles appear to be out of UMass' league, but anyway, it'll be a challenge, and a good way to measure the quality of Minuteman play.

McNally reaches top spot after facing long, hard climb

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

It's been a long hard climb to the top for UMass quarterback Brian McNally. But now that the No. 1 quarterback spot is his, he is doing very little to show that he doesn't deserve it.

Not only has McNally led the team offensively with his pinpoint passing and smooth execution of offensive plays, but his teammates also look to him somewhat as an inspirational leader. Being elected co-captain of this year's Minuteman football team by his fellow teammates, is a testimonial to his leadership qualities.

No, McNally isn't exactly one of those holler guys who tries to lead a team with a lot of yelling and screaming. McNally is a soft-spoken individual who lets his actions speak louder than his words.

McNally, a 6'3", 195 lbs. senior from Concord, Mass., was named first team quarterback on the All Yankee Conference team last year for the fine job he did in directing the Minutemen to an 8-2 season.

However, if it wasn't for a couple of key injuries to previous UMass quarterbacks, his fine talent might have been mistakenly overlooked.

"During my sophomore year, seniors Fred Kelliher and Mark Tripuka were battling it out for the No. 1 quarterback spot. At that time there was no real need for a third-string quarterback, so the coaching staff switched me to defensive halfback," McNally said.

McNally's switch into the defensive secondary didn't last very long, as he was called upon by the coaching staff to switch back to quarterback, when Kelliher and Tripuka were riddled with injuries.

McNally progressed very well in re-adjusting to his quarterback role. At times he directed the UMass offense like an experienced senior. It looked as though McNally had found his spot in the UMass lineup.

Then his bubble burst midway through the year.

"In the UConn game that year I suffered a separated shoulder during the middle of the game. Eventually the shoulder had to be operated on," McNally pointed out.

At that time, it appeared that his future as a UMass quarterback was very much in jeopardy.

Refusing to get down on himself because of his injured shoulder, McNally successfully recovered during the off-season and was prepared to battle Kelliher for the No. 1 quarterback spot that following spring.

It was a unique position for McNally to be in. Kelliher returned after being red-shirted the previous year because of a season-long injury he sustained. That spring it seemed academic that Kelliher would be leading the UMass offensive attack.

When the season began last year, Kelliher was UMass' No. 1 quarterback. But Kelliher just couldn't get the Minutemen offense in gear. Under Kelliher, the offense sputtered and was ineffective.

During the second game of the season last year, the call again went to McNally to get the offense in gear. McNally responded, and after Dartmouth game, he became the top gun in the UMass offense.

"There was no hard feelings at all between Fred and I when I took his job from him. In fact, Fred did all he could to help me improve my game, and contribute to the team in a positive way," McNally said.

Although he completed only 41 per cent of his passes last year, McNally consistently came up with the big play when needed. This year he has gotten off to a flying start by hitting on 70 per cent of his passes for 115 yards in the Toledo game.

"I've really enjoyed my years at UMass, and I really have enjoyed associating with our group of seniors this year. We have been together since freshman ball, and I think they're a really great bunch of guys," McNally said.

Women's Cross Country

NCAA title for an encore?

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

It's pretty hard to improve on near perfection, but that's what Coach Ken O'Brien's women's cross country team is out to do this year.

The 1975 season by Minutewomen harriers go 6-0 in dual meets, win the New England Championship, win their own invitational, the Apple Orchard Classic, finish second in the Brandeis Invitational, and cap the season off with a ninth place finish in the National Championship. For an encore, they may just have to win that NCAA title.

The prospects of the women bettering their 1975 performance seem very good, since only one runner, Maryanne Wilcox, was lost from that squad, that due to graduation.

Heading the list of returnees is junior Jane Welzel. She was a consistent front runner, for the past season, and although she finished second in all her races up until the New Englands. There, she came back to beat all the women who had defeated her during the regular season, as she finished second in that race to Cathy Whitcomb of Tufts. Welzel also ran a very creditable 37th in the NCAA Championships.

Along with their proven front runner, the women also have the depth necessary for a successful championship team. This is provided by no less than six returning veterans; seniors Johara Chapman and Diane Perry; juniors Sue Swartz and Julie Lafreniere; and sophomores Debbie Farmer and Anne Bradshaw. This group was responsible for the fine regular season showing and also for the New England title, as Lafreniere finished fourth, Chapman seventh, Swartz 14th, Wilcox 18th, Bradshaw 22nd, and Farmer 26th.

Providing the veterans with intense inter-team competition for top placings are several women who are either new students or out for the first time. First year runners Barbara Callanan of Scituate and Monica Scott of Newton have impressed O'Brien in pre-season workouts, as well as Bonnie Bukowski and Laurie Wolfe, two track athletes out for cross country for the first time. Also showing well in early workouts has been Maggie Crowley, who was Class A mile champ at Brockton High, then took two and a half years off from competition. According to O'Brien she has progressed, with hard work over the summer, to the point where she is approaching her former potential, and will be a definite bet to move up into the top group of runners. This overall team strength is definitely a plus factor, as it will provide for a strong sense of team unity and positive team improvement.

An interesting and outstanding facet of the women's success story is the fact that the team has only been in existence for one season, and consequently the women are relatively inexperienced in competition. Even if the women did run in high school, as in the cases of the upper classwomen, they were forced to sit out two years at UMass due to the lack of a program.

Bradshaw and Farmer probably had the easiest transition to make, since they both ran for two years in high school, and had no break in their careers when they came to UMass. Lafreniere ran for two years in high school but had a year layoff when she got to UMass. Chapman had no high school experience but did compete for one year for the Sugarloaf Mountain Track Club. Swartz, Welzel, and Perry had no experience at all until last year, which makes their accomplishments all the more noteworthy.

Much of the credit can be laid to coach O'Brien, who is one of the most respected and successful coaches in the east. After leading UMass to several titles as an athlete, O'Brien has returned to lead the men and now the women to conference and New England titles in both track and cross country. This year should prove to be no exception, as both teams are deep and well stocked with veterans as well as new talent.

O'Brien feels that once again Brandeis and Williams will be teams to beat, with Middlebury also showing an improvement. He pointed out the women's fine track season, distance-wise, and he gave his prediction for the season.

"I hope the fine track season may have helped us open up a bit of a gap on the competition, but at any rate, we won't lose any ground," he said. "We have a mature team, a veteran team despite their youth, and I can't see us having anything less than a similar season than last."

The Minutewomen will get a chance to test the value of their daily workouts (anywhere from three to ten miles) on Saturday, September 18 in the University of Lowell Invitational.

The Men

Ken O'Brien molds team with depth and pride

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Everyone thought that without 1974 All-American UMass graduates Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas that Coach Ken O'Brien would have to wait a long while before Massachusetts Cross Country would be heard of again.

But without too much fanfare, O'Brien has put together a team within two years that is capable of gaining national recognition.

How is he doing it? First of all, O'Brien did not sent out huge scholarships. Using the limited budget he had, he, along with coach Arnie Morse, recruited good young runners out of high school with outstanding running attitudes. Combining this with returning sophomores and junior captain John McGrail, the '75 Minutemen earned a season mark of 9-2 and captured their sixth consecutive Yankee Conference championship.

When the 1975 season opened, the question of experience for six of the starting seven varsity runners made pre-season predictions difficult. Losing only to Providence (third in the NCAA 1975 cross country finals), and a one point loss to Vermont (the UMass JV's comprised the UMass varsity in that one), the Harriers seemed golden to gain New England prominence.

However, inexperience haunted the Minutemen as the team collapsed in the New Englands and IC4A's, the annual Eastern cross country championships.

Senior captain John McGrail, who earned All-American honors at the National cross country meet at Penn State last fall, said, "For ten guys, last year was their first year of running varsity races. Because of the competition, each guy felt that day after day, he had to prove himself to the coach."

"What happened is that too many guys peaked at the Yankee Conference and then fell apart due to the strain, of the workouts, McGrail added. "Physically and mentally, we as a team were tired for the championships."

But a few things happened following the season that may be the impetus this season. Besides John McGrail earning All-American honors, a freshman named Mike Quinn teamed with sophomore Frank Carroll and McGrail in outdoor track to shatter distance records and qualify for the NCAA championships in the 5,000 meter run. Each narrowly missed qualifying for the semi-finals at the nationals at the end of the season.

Next, Stetson Arnold, Providence's number one runner, and one of the top in the country, transferred to UMass this year. However, Arnold, due to intercollegiate eligibility rules, must

Enthusiasm & hard work a '76 formula for success

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The women's field hockey team is going to need some extra spunk and enthusiasm this fall season to measure up to last year's record of 8-4-1.

According to first-year coach Judith Davidson that "psyche" is by no means in small supply: "We've really got a good group of athletes here. They're enthusiastic, hard-workers, and I know we'll be ready for our first game Thursday, the 23rd."

The season opener will be against a perennially tough Springfield College. Although the Springfield team hasn't lost a game in three years, Davidson stands nonplussed in her comments about the game.

"Even if Springfield hasn't lost a game in three years, forget it. It's just a feeling I have, but I really feel we are going to win," Davidson said. "Springfield, being the school it is, has attracted some fine athletes in the past. I feel that state schools like UMass, however are getting good players too, from the growing high school programs in the state."

With an overall season of 15 games, UMass will be seeing stiff competition; mainly against teams like Northeastern, Bridgewater, and Southern Connecticut. All these teams defeated UMass last season.

Coach Davidson will most likely carry a 14 or 15 member varsity squad. As of this writing, seven women have been selected for that team according to speed, aggressiveness, stickwork and game sense.

These seven are all returning players: Kathy Gipps — played goalie last season, Gayle Hutchinson — defense, Judy Kennedy — offense, Cheryl Meliones — played offense, a hustler, Kelly Salls — defense, Lynsie Wickman — was the second highest scorer last season and is on a comeback from a knee injury in lacrosse last spring, and Karen Zimmerman — a key defensewomen from last year.

A new rule has been incorporated into the women's season — only two substitutes per game. This means that not as many players will see action, other than the starting eleven, and also that the women who do play the entire game will have to be in top physical condition.

Judith Davidson

A coach and a catalyst

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team will begin its 1976 season on September 23 under new head coach Judith Davidson. The former JV coach was asked to take over in replacement of Carol Albert, who left after last season. Unlike Ms. Albert, who was a full-time basketball and field hockey coach, Ms. Davidson is a graduate student here at UMass who will be coaching the hockey team on a part-time basis. But although she's not a full-time coach, Ms. Davidson has found that the job takes up most of her time and thoughts.

"My main purpose here at UMass is to get my degree," the student of sports history states, "but I'm spending most of my time involved with the team in one way or another." This is due in part to the pressure that is placed upon a new coach who takes over a successful team.

Last year's team had an 8-4-1 regular season record and made it to the Northeast playoffs. Judith Davidson would like to do at least as well.

"Coaching the team will be a hard act to follow," she says. "If the team had had a poor year last year then my job would be an easier one because this season would be a rebuilding one."

If anyone is qualified to coach field hockey, Davidson is. Although she was born in New York City, she moved to Maryland at the age of thirteen and was there first introduced to sports. She didn't begin to play field hockey, however, until her sophomore year in high school in New Jersey. She has been involved in the sport ever since. After high school she attended the University of New Hampshire where she continued to play as a goalie.

Next was the Chelsea School of Physical Education in England, where Davidson worked her way up to the first team (there were six teams), within a year. That's a lot like making the varsity football team at Michigan as a freshman, because English girls begin playing hockey at a much younger age than American girls and they continue playing throughout their school years. The hockey season in England starts in September and doesn't end until April, so Davidson had plenty of time while she was there to gain experience with some of the best players and competition. After her year in England, Davidson returned to the United States to teach physical education in New York State and from there came to UMass to continue her study of sports history.

As coach of the field hockey team, Davidson, because of her background as a goalie, would like to see the team become tighter defensively. "From my position, I could see the game shaping up in front of me and I had a better view of the game overall. I'd like to use what I learned as a goalie to make subtle, all-around changes in positioning. The two biggest changes I'd like to make would be in stickwork and defensive positioning."

However, she does not see her role as one of a teacher of skills and styles of play but rather as strictly one of a coach. "As a goalie, I played a very aggressive, roving type of game. That was my style of play. But I would not try to teach another woman that type of game, if it was not her natural style."

The New England area is generally conceded second to the Philadelphia and Mid-Atlantic area in field hockey strength. At the first NCAA field hockey championships last year, Westchester College (Pa.), was the champion (with Springfield College finishing third).

Soccer

Booters try to get back on the bounce

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Two years ago the UMass soccer team finished with a record of 8-3-1, which is the best record it has ever had. Last season was another story however, as the booters were 3-9-1 on the year.

"We were a young club last year with 16 out of 23 players being new to the team," said Russ Kidd. who has taken over for Al Rufe as soccer coach.

"We should be vastly improved this year as our starting 11 is an all-veteran group," Kidd added.

Russ Kidd is in his sixth year on the athletic coaching staff at UMass and has served as assistant hockey and lacrosse coach. He took over the soccer program last November.

Kidd spent five summers at Brown studying soccer under coach Cliff Stevenson. He has taught soccer at UMass and spent a week at the USSF coaching clinic along with one year of "researching everything I could find on the game."

This season Kidd feels that UMass is facing its biggest and toughest schedule in the 46 year history of soccer at the school. The booters, who play 16 games this year, begin their season at home against highly ranked Bridgeport College on September 22.

"We don't play anybody that's easy, said Kidd. "Except for Brown, we are playing all the top teams in New England.

"We certainly are respected in New England soccer circles," Kidd stated.

The coach was pleased with the way the pre-season work has gone and said that the most encouraging thing has been the way the veteran players have improved from a year ago.

"They came back ready to play," he said.

"Our strongest point is our defense," Kidd added. "It's a veteran group that is strong, very fast and has real size."

Kidd is relying heavily on senior co-captain Mike Parsons to command the team's four man diamond fullback formation. He rates Parsons as one of the best fullbacks in New England.

"Mike Parsons does it all," said Kidd. "He's not that big, but he is very fast, heads the ball well and is a good leader."

The other members of the diamond fullback formation are juniors Ed Niemiec, who is great on heading the ball, and Larry Aronson, who Kidd said "came on like crazy last year," and sweeper Steve Macaulay, a senior.

"Macaulay is a clever player who filled a big hole for us last year," Kidd said.

The backup fullbacks are junior sweeper Danny Maher, sophomore Pat Veal, who can play anywhere in the backfield and three freshmen, Mark Vassalotti, Don Kent, and Bill Leary.

The halfbacks are returning lettermen Andy Moore and T.J. O'Brien, who has a sprained ankle and may not be ready for the opener.

"Both Moore and O'Brien played solidly last year," said Kidd. One player who Kidd says has "come on like a house-a-fire," is freshman Mark Vasington from Storrs, Connecticut. Vasington was a member of the team that won the Connecticut state high school soccer championship last year.

Senior Bob McChesney, who was second on the team in scoring last year, Raffi Donoyan, a junior who scored four goals against Maine last year and Tony Biladeau, who is back with the team after a year's absence, should provide the bulk of the team's offense.

Rounding out the front line are wings Joe Mascolo, a sophomore, senior Dave Tagliavini, inside forwards and wing Mark Abbott, a sophomore and freshman Mike Shannon.

The goaltending is excellent with junior co-captain Mark Hanks and transfer junior Mark Hodgdon both fighting for the starting job. Both have looked impressive in pre-season play so far.

"I really think we are on the right track this year," Kidd stated.

"I have to establish my credibility as a soccer coach among my peer soccer coaches and among high school soccer players of New England," Kidd stated. "The only way to do that is to build a very successful soccer program here at UMass. I feel we are only a few steps away from being the best.

"I like the game; know it pretty good and feel very confident I can coach the game and benefit the program at UMass," Kidd said.

If Kidd's conference can rub off on his team, the soccer season at UMass should be an exciting one.

The Seniors

Steadiness and solidity

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

Although it is often the surprise "finds" that make a coach smile, any college soccer team must build around a solid nucleus of veterans. The '76 Minutemen are no exception. There are transfers from as far as UFlorida and as close as the Massachusetts junior colleges. Also, the most promising group of freshmen in recent years is vying for the open positions. A group of six seniors, however, will supply the steadying force necessary for a successful season.

Coach Russ Kidd does not anticipate any one or two players who will stand out this year. "There are no stars or big money players on this team," he commented. "Most importantly, we have no guys who think that they're better than the other guys. There's just a hell of a bunch of dedicated, serious soccer players, players who can provide good leadership."

Two of the most familiar faces in Minuteman soccer will not play this year, but will provide leadership in another way. Gary McKenna and Bob Snow, starters on last year's team, will sit on the bench, often the JV bench. They are Coach Kidd's assistants.

This year's co-captains, succeeding last year's duo of McKenna and Dan Ouellette, are goalie Mark Hanks and fullback Mike Parsons. They represent the strongest and most experienced area of the team, the defense.

Hanks has seen considerable action in the goal in his three years here. He is only 5'7", but his outstanding quickness enables him to make saves that other goaltenders would miss. Another factor which makes Hanks a solid netminder is his knowledge of the game.

"Mark's knowledge of the game and of his teammate makes up for his lack of size," pointed out Snow. "Also, he really gets into the game. His concentration is superb."

Coach Kidd labeled his other captain as "good a fullback as there is in New England." Mike Parsons, from Northampton, uses his exceptional speed and quickness to great advantage as an offensive-minded fullback. "There's probably no one on the team faster than Mike on the dead sprint," said Kidd. "He has speed, great jumping ability, a strong foot, and stamina. He, like Hanks, also knows the game very well."

Another veteran fullback is Steve Macaulay. He will play sweeper back, a position requiring the ability for quick judgment. "Steve's a really smart ballplayer," explained Snow, "and as the last person before the goal, he must be alert. He's not timid, and he keeps everyone on his toes. He's a heads-up ballplayer."

Dave Tagliavini, from Southwick as is Hanks, will start at one of the wing positions. He is known for his hard work and determination. Gary McKenna describes him as "the hardest worker I've played college ball with. He's a sincere team player." Tagliavini is also a capable scorer who should get his share of goals this year.

Tony Biladeau, another senior starter from this area (Southampton), has the strength and quick feet to make him an effective inside forward. For a man his size (6'2", 190) he moves very well, but his strength enables him to get the quick goals in front of the net.

Another senior inside forward is Bob McChesney, the second leading scorer from last year's team. Bob is the type of player whom Coach Kidd described as "the guy you see on the soccer field all winter." There isn't anyone who's worked harder in preparing himself for soccer skills," Kidd continued.

This year's Minutemen soccer team will have enough newcomers to keep the fans baffled for at least a liitle while. Some of those athletes may become the "big money" players Coach Kidd is always looking for. With only six seniors on the team, the '76 Minutemen may seem inexperienced. There are, however, seniors in every position except halfback. This distribution of experience will provide the leadership needed to mold freshmen, transfers, and veterans into a cohesive unit.

Women 'spike' program— results staggering

By MICHAEL WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The 1976 edition, as well as future UMass women's volleyball teams, will benefit from a general upgrading which is taking place within the volleyball program. To begin with, there will be a permanent full-time coach for the first time ever, Dianne Thompson. She comes to the university by way of Oregon State where he position was that of assistant volleyball coach.

In addition to the coaching situation, there are other positive changes being implemented to improve the quality of the sport. An expanded schedule will not only provide more matches than ever (about 20) but also emphasize the method of tri-meets. These are meets with three teams involved in a round-robin type competition. Also of help will be the new equipment that the team will be using.

Coach Thompson welcomed 45 women to the open try-outs which began last week. After only four days, however, only about half remained. The others just plainly didn't want to pursue the sport.

"I didn't think I was that hard on them, but I guess they thought so," commented Thompson.

One thing the new coach is big on is running. She has come up against many pulled muscles in her players and feels the only way to combat this problem is more conditioning. In addition to the running and conditioning exercises, the team is working on defensive retrieving skills including diving and rolling. They haven't started working on offensive skills yet, since it still has not been determined what the actual varsity roster will look like. This should be known by next week sometime.

It appears that the five returning seniors will make the big squad. Included in this group are Patricia Bradley, Jayne Greenberg, Sue Sabia, Diane Bunker Hannula and Shelley Soules. Hopefully, a few of these women will have exceptional seasons to compensate for the loss of a few key players due to graduation. There are three other seniors with a good chance of sticking on the varsity and all the rest of the players are either freshmen or sophomores.

Of course it makes more sense to play the underclasswomen on the subvarsity but if an exceptional athlete is available, it becomes in the best interests of the team to play her on the varsity.

In any event, the varisty roster should be set by next week. Once this has been accomplished the team can get down to more intense preparations in anticipation of their season opener October 1, a tri-meet in Bridgewater, Mass. (opponents Bridgewater State and Barrington). The first home match is Saturday, October 9 at N.O.P.E. Gym.

STRENGTHS: An optomistic attitude, strong on desire and willingness to learn, look like positive characteristics of the team. Upgrading of the volleyball program will help. Intelligent new coach should provide long overdue leadership.

WEAKNESSES: Lack of height. The team averages only 5' 7". Fairly difficult schedule faces the team. A few key losses in personnel due to graduation could hurt.

Coach Thompson would like to increase fan interest in volleyball and even though she can't promise victories, she promises an inspired, hustling brand of ball by her team. Go out and see a game.

Dianne Thompson: a coach profile

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

"I want my volleyball players to be enthusiastic and always hustling," says Dianne Thompson, first year coach of the women's team.

Thompson herself, exudes energy as she talks of her future plans with team: "I'm going to give as much time and support as I can to every player that really puts herself into the team. I want women who are going to be at practice every day, working hard."

Originally from Michigan, Thompson has a long history of P.E. experience. A graduate of Manchester College in Indiana, Thompson earned her B.S. in Physical Education and then taught at a middle school in the same state. She then attended Oregon State, worked for her Masters in Education and also taught a variety of P.E. courses as a graduate assistant. (Her Masters thesis is still in progress).

Thompson comes to UMass as a two year Oregon State softball coach and as a "B" team volleyball coach. Her new position here is as Program Head for Softball and Volleyball. This includes teaching some of these courses in P.E. and coaching both varsity sports.

When asked where she stands on giving scholarships to women athletes, Thompson commented: "I think it's great to financially help an athlete who needs money, but I'm against scholarships because of the ways athletes are bought in men's sports. Not only that, but I feel that all my attentions should be on my team that's here, now. If I'm recruiting athletes, I'm probably not giving my team all I've got."

According to Thompson the collegiate volleyball scene in the west is far superior to New England. As program head for volleyball, she hopes to upgrade the program with clinics and raising interest.

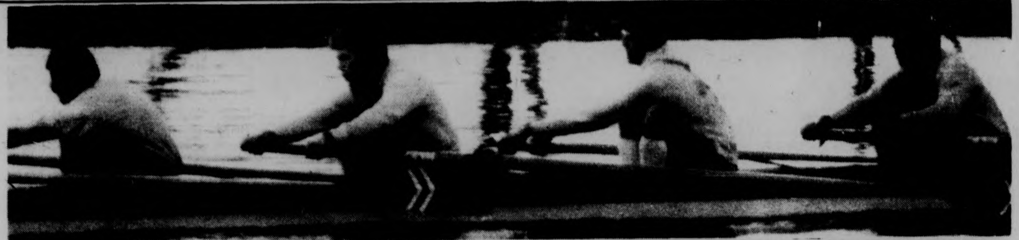
Crew



A new look as men, women join

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

There will be a new look this year concerning men's and women's crew at UMass. An effort is being made this year to combine the two crews, both from the financial standpoint and somewhat in scheduling.

For people unfamiliar with the athletic situation at UMass, not all sports on campus are recognized as varsity sports. This doesn't mean that the caliber of performance is inferior. In fact, the women and men out for crew, work just as hard, if not harder than other athletes on campus.

Instead, the men's and women's crew at Umass are recognized as a club sport. All this means is that it is solely up to the team members to raise enough money to keep the sport operating.

"Even though we are recognized as a club sport by the athletic department, don't ever try to convince our crew members that the level of competition is second rate," said UMass men's crew Bill Mahoney.

Mahoney, in his third season as UMass crew coach, is extremely optimistic about the prospects for this coming fall and spring.

"Last spring we were inexperienced and physically small. It was a disappointing season for us in that we lost three races by a combined distance of one-half a boat length," Mahoney said.

The men's crew did finish up strong last spring as it captured a silver medal at the Dad Vail meet in Philadelphia. It was a good way to finish up a frustrating season.

This year's men's crew will be led by captain Dave Burke, a senior from Burlington, Mass., and Steve Frackleton, a junior from West Roxbury. Other key contributors this year will be, senior Mike Melvin, who Mahoney describes to be in "outstanding physical shape," coxswain Mark Lyle, Mike Partridge and Frank Miconi.

"Our fall program is mostly directed at re-familiarizing team members with rowing. We put in a lot of mileage, attempting to get everybody into prime shape for the more-important races in the spring," Mahoney said.

The UMass rowers will also wrestle with a pretty adventurous fall schedule.

"Our first meet will be on Oct. 17 when we participate in the Head of the Charles meet in Boston. These fall races will be somewhat informal, but they provide us excellent competition," Mahoney pointed out.

Mahoney, who has traveled around the world in participating in crew meets, has done an excellent job in getting together with the team and raising more than enough money to keep the program operating.

"Rowing is the most challenging sport I could get involved in. It teaches one to use the fullest extent of your ability. You approach your own limits and rowing helps you develop enormous self confidence," Mahoney said.

"The UMass crew club has come a long way over the last couple of years, not only in the won-lost record but in finding and developing fine rowers," Mahoney said.

An old rule in the game that not many people understand needs definition here also: it's the obstruction rule. The obstruction rule states that no player can place her body between her opponent and the ball. This means no part of the body, including arms, legs or hips — very unlike ice hockey. In fact, because only the flat edge of the stick may be used for passing, field hockey becomes a "right-handed" game under the obstruction rule.

Davidson believes, with an obvious bias, that only the best athletes play field hockey well: "I feel that field hockey is definitely a high level sport, skill-wise. Mainly because once a foreign object (stick) is introduced, the athlete is working with something other than her body. Also, compare the size of the useable part of the stick to the ball. The area is also hard to work with. Field hockey is a 'thinking' game — it takes intelligence to play it well."

Along with the regular season games, the EAIAW Regional Tournament at Cortland and the AIAW National Tournament are scheduled for qualifying teams.

Last year, the team competed in a post-season Northeast Regional Play-offs, a non-collegiate U.S. Field Hockey Tournament. They placed third, just missing the first and second spots, and the qualification to go the Nationals.

Eve Atkinson

Swimmers find a pearl

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

Eve Atkinson, one of the many newly-hired women's coaches, is the tall, slim self-assured coach of the women's swim team.

Taking over the team from Pat Griffin, Atkinson is a definite organizer (as she quickly leafs through her swim team files, handing over at least four sheets containing information and training systems.

But then again, she is no stranger to the swimming world. Atkinson has been a member of a competitive swimming team since she was five years old.

A graduate of West Chester State College, with a B.S. in Health and P.E., Atkinson was named All-American in swimming, three of her four college years. She also competed on top level hockey and lacrosse teams at West Chester.

After graduation, Atkinson taught health and P.E. at a middle school in Pennsylvania for one year (1975-76) and also coached the women's swim team at Temple University in Philadelphia.

As a new member of the UMass P.E. department, she holds the newly-created position of aquatic director which includes administrative work for the rec and intramural programs and also the men's swim team.

Atkinson will be running two hour practices daily for the women's swim team.

"I won't cut anyone from the team," Atkinson says. "As long as there's room in the pool, I'll work with every swimmer that commits herself to practices. That includes everyone from the slowest person on the team to the fastest."

Atkinson has given a list of training systems to each winner, in the hopes of an understanding of all styles of practice. Some of these styles include: marathon — long distances used early in the season, fartlek — fast—slow swimming, interval, and repetition.

Atkinson also believes that the team belongs to the swimmers — they'll set their own goals, whether it be individual goals of lowering times or team goals.

A long time to stay afloat

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

It's almost like pre-season for the UMass women's swim team, as it heads into only its second week of practice under first-year coach, Eve Atkinson.

With the season opener two months away, the swimmers will have plenty of time to condition. Other than conditioning, the team that won't prove to be tough ones, and to taper slightly for meets that will see little action until that first meet.

Until then, the women will be training with a variety of systems including long distance, fast—slow swimming (fartlek) interval and repeats. The women will also keep daily logs of the yardage completed, basal heart rate, hours of sleep and daily meals.

Coach Atkinson expects to "swim through" the dual meets will be more of a challenge. Major tapers will be planned for the championship meets; the taper will be greater for the meet which gets the most UMass qualifiers.

No cuts have been made on the team, and according to coach Atkinson: "Anyone giving the time to work-out will be a member of the team. As long as there's room in the pool, every member of the team counts."

Rugby

The most 'rugged' of all

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Rugby Club opens its fall season this Saturday afternoon against the perenially strong Harvard Business School. Last year's "A" outing saw the Crimson overcome a 4-0 deficit to emerge victorious by a 6-4 margin.

The Harvard team features numerous South African and Australian imports to complement a bevy of seasoned veterans.

The UMass ruggers oppose this formidable contingent with a pair of New England All-Stars, outside center, captain Rick Lopes and Dan Georgiana.

Jeffery Stefani returns for his third successive year at the fullback spot. When asked to evaluate this year's outfit, the swarthy Stefani brushed off all queries by saying, "No comment, I don't talk to reporters.

Patriarchial mentor, Robert "Doc" Lawrence, is surprised with the good progress made by his relatively inexperienced troops.

"This year's unit has an excellent chance to improve upon last spring's very impressive performance. We have a bit more potential and need only to regain the spirit exemplified by the club two years ago," Lawrence said.

Lawrence also cited that depth may cause some difficulties as well as inexperience, but otherwise he feels very optimistic.

The first-side backfield is tiny — averaging 170 lbs. — but is very speedy and quick. Jay Appleman, who has departed the UMass scene, will be greatly missed in the backfield. John Glover is currently injured and may not see action in the first couple of games.

Former UMass wrestling star, Tom Callaghan (6' 2" 210 lbs.) — is a welcomed addition and his presence at wing forward bolsters a pack which could be hard pressed to gain control of the ball in scrums against such enormous front lines as that of the Boston Rugby Club.

Umass' first side forwards average but 195 lbs. Tenacious veteran Charles Sherwood, also currently injured, will provide a stabilizing influence at that position when he returns.

Lawrence, a veteran of 23 active years on the rugby scene, hopes the 80 hearty men now working out with the various A, B, and C teams can become cohesive squads by the weekend of Sept. 25-26 for the Yankee Conference Tournament.

The Yankee Conference Rugby Tournament this year will be held here at UMass, on the athletic fields west of Boyden gym, near the tennis courts.

Grueling practice session have the ruggers near a physical and mental peak. Hopefully this hard work will reward itself with a very successful season.

Intramurals

Something for everyone

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Starting the 1976 academic year with what director Ted Schmidt calls, "the largest program of its kind in New England," the UMass Intramural Program has started its fall season with more than 8,000 students involved. The program offers 16 sports for men and women while offering 13 sports in the co-recreational area. This year's program, says Ted Schmidt, is much more organized than last year's, as sports managers have been appointed for each residence hall to insure the smooth functioning of the program within their respective units. This, and the excellent facilities available to UMass students and faculty should combine to fit the needs of those who feel that athletics should not be neglected from an education.

When one speaks of intramural sports, the competitive sports immediately come to mind, but, this is not the case with the program here. The Intramural department offers a recreational activity program which opens all the facilities to University students, faculty, and staff. Some of these are: handball-squash courts, gymnasiums, pools, weight rooms, and the bowling alleys. Persons wishing to make use of these facilities should check with the intramural office in Boyden or watch the Collegian for notices to see what times that these facilities are available.

Also, the athletic department offers three club sports which are supported by the clubs and the athletic department on a 50-50 basis. These sports are: judo, rugby, and water polo. The clubs can extend their sports to a great degree as the athletic department matches whatever funds that the clubs can raise.

I spoke of the program in general with director Ted Schmidt and was informed that the intramural program is the most student-oriented program on campus. This is borne out by the fact that 60 per cent of the budget is for student salaries. The students play major roles in controlling the team and individual sports, while obtaining valuable experience in the physical education field. He went on to say that he was pleased with the large amount of student participation in the program, but was looking for more students, as there is ample room for more athletes on the team and individual sports. He invited interested students to stop in the Intramural office on the second floor of Boyden and pick up a handbook which describes the program more specifically, or to stop in and see him to discuss the sports offered.

The men's and women's activities offered are: touch football, badminton singles, track, handball, singles, paddleball singles, cross-country, volleyball, basketball, racquetball, squash, wrestling, swimming, soccer, softball, and tennis singles

The men's tennis team appears to have the talent and depth to repeat last season's second place finish in the Yankee Conference. Experience is the dominant characteristic of the team this fall as four of the six singles positions will be filled by players returning from last season. However, both veterans and newcomers to the team have shown improvement as a result of summer playing time.

In the spring season, UMass, with a 5-4 record, was runner-up to Vermont for the Yankee Conference title. While beating Vermont in regular season play, UMass succumbed to the Wildcats in the Conference championships. All four regular season losses in the spring were on the road.

Coach Bill Brown is optimistic, but remains non-commital as to the season's outcome. He considers Vermont to be the big threat on the UMass schedule.

Brown is carrying twelve players on the team this fall, but is figuring on the top six to play most of the matches.

The season will start with Adam Rosen, a freshman, playing first singles. Rosen, ranked 14th in the 18-and-under division in the East, has strong ground strokes and has plenty of height which makes him a difficult man to pass at net. As his credentials tell, he is an experienced tournament player.

In the second singles position will be sophomore Alan Green, who played first singles last year. Green has a well rounded game featuring both power and finesse. Like Rosen, Green also has plenty of tournament experience behind him.

A battle for the third spot is currently being waged between Jimmy Barnhart and Barnaby Kalan. Barnhart, a sophomore and veteran of last season's team, has a big first serve when he needs it.

Kalan returns to the tennis team after taking a year to study at Rutgers. As a senior, Kalan will finish his college tennis career in the third or fourth singles spot, depending on coach Brown's decision.

The fifth and sixth spots will be filled by sophomore Ricky Shartin and junior Steve Heyl, respectively. These two could provide unexpected strength as both are returning from last season. Heyl recently returned to the courts after being sidelined with pulled back muscles.

Doubles for UMass have been troublesome at times in the past, but then again in certain matches last year it was the doubles teams that pulled out the win. This year Brown is still undecided as to how he will play his doubles. The pairings will be Green and Barnhart, who played together last season, and Rosen and Kalan; however, there has been no word as to who will be the number one team. Brown has not yet put together the third doubles team.

The spare players are: Sriant Misra, Steve Acerbi, Dan Gallagher, David Nowak, Henry Pogurski and Tony Petus.

Women seek top season

Womens' varsity tennis is being directed by first year coach Ken Ruben. Ruben is a graduate student in Business Administration. As an under-graduate Ken played three years of UMass varsity tennis.

Coach Ruben feels he has the makings of an exciting and highly competitive women's team. When Ruben initially spoke concerning the women's prospects, he was somewhat low-key, saying, that perhaps this would be a re-building season, considering last year's losing record. Yet, as he read his list of names of returning and first year players, he became visibly enthusiastic, and then confidently predicted a winning season.

Those names included Nancy O'Neil and Cathy Sullivan, the second and third singles players, both returning from last year's team. Also in singles, watch for Karon Tsapatsaris, understandably referred to as Karon T. by Ruben.

The first and second doubles players, Karen Holt and Jeanette Flynn, are also veterans of last year's squad.

Newcomers include Jennifer Ranz, a transfer student from Skidmore, and first year players Dawn Minaai, Debby Halpern, Martha Aswizus and Carolyn Mooney.

The women will play a ten match schedule this year. The first match will be held Wednesday, September 22, at 4:00 o'clock on the Boyden lower courts. The opposition will come from a traditionally tough Smith College team.

Golf

The men: cup runneth over?

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The twice defending New England champion UMass men's golf team begins another fall campaign this week with hopes of making this one of its most satisfying seasons ever.

Although they are defending champions, the Minutemen themselves in a less than commanding position. Last semester's spring squad was led by three of the finest collegiate players in the New England area in John Lasek, Glen Sullivan, and Rick Olson. However both Lasek, and Olson have been lost due to eligibility standards, and Sullivan, who was to be a junior this year, is no longer eligible since turning pro last spring.

The news of Sullivan's turning pro was most surprising for two reasons. First, he was to have been the leader of this year's squad, and could very well have been the best collegiate player in the east. Secondly, Sullivan decided to turn pro before last semesters NCAA finals held in Albuquerque, N.M., surrendering any chance UMass may have had at finishing near the top.

Thus this falls team shapes up to be a mixture of seasoned veterans along with some lower classmen who hope their games can jell before the opening match. "We have between 20 and 30 players vying for positions this fall, and competition has been keen," said an optimistic coach Fan Gaudette.

The team will be looking for consistency from senior co-captains Bob Sanderson and Tim Diskin. Both played a part in last semester's championship team, and are anxious to fill the leadership void, due to the loss of last semesters captains, Lasek and Olson. Also returning will be Bill Locke and Tim Kurty, veterans who will hopefully shave a couple of strokes off last year's scores, and consistently turn in cards under 80.

Gaudette will also be looking for results from scrappy sophomore Jim McDermott who benefited greatly from the loss of Glen Sullivan last spring. "We brought Jim along with us to Albuquerque last spring after Glen turned pro, and I believe he gained a great deal of experience," explained Gaudette.

As usual, Gaudette has been able to recruit a fine freshman prospect by the name of Flint Lincoln. Lincoln was a Mass. schoolboy champion in high school, and will be a great addition to the squad. Somehow, without the aide of scholarship money, Gaudette, in his tenure as golf coach, has been able to come up with that one outstanding player which makes his squad a successful one.

Other than the opening quadrangular match of the season verses Providence, Bryant, and Rhode Island, the team will compete in tournament play. The Yankee Conference championship and the Yale Invitational in September, along with its own host tournament the Toski Invitational held at Hickory Ridge C.C. Then there's the New Englands, and hopefully the ECAC if all goes well. Thus the fall schedule shapes up to be one of the toughest UMass golfers have ever faced.

For women, a fresh start

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The women's golf team has a new coach, it has a big exciting seven-event schedule, and most importantly, it has confidence that the frustrations of last spring will haunt them no further. Optimism best describes the scene as the women prepare to tee it up for their third season of competition.

Jane McGahan has taken up the coaching reins from former Mantor Fan Gaudette. The young bright intuitive assistant pro from Hickory Ridge C.C. will definitely add color and enthusiasm to the program.

The new coach has set down goals and expectations that underline the intentions for this season. "What we are basically trying to do is to get our program established" said McGahan. "We don't expect to win the Nationals this year; all we hope to do is give the girls some competitive experience, and build for the future."

The squad is a very small one, featuring only eight players. All eight women are eager and ready to play some golf. Returning from last spring, a season of washouts and cancellations, will be sophomore Eileen Kramer and Elisa Romano, seniors Joanne Smith and vastly improved Meg Groden. Also returning is last year's super standout, junior Debbie McCulluch.

Joining the team this fall are freshwomen Anne Morrison, Joyce Little, and Karen McGrath.

The team is a young one, and one with little experience. As coach McGahan puts it, "Most of the girls are good golfers, and can score in the 80's. What they need most is practice and experience in competition. The goal for this year will be to give the women a chance to improve, and lower their handicaps." Coach McGahan added, that "this would be a year of building, not rebuilding."

The "building" process starts on Sept. 24th with the two-day Mt. Holyoke Invitational. On the 26th and 27th the linksterettes play their only home match of the season, the UMass Invitational.

take the year off. He will need that time to recuperate from a mild case of hepatitis.

Coach Ken O'Brien is cautiously optimistic about the 1976 UMass team. He said, "Basically we have virtually everyone returning and we are stronger and a year wiser. Our team is compromised mostly of juniors, but really sophomores with this being the second year of varsity cross country for many of them.

O'Brien, however, did say that Providence and Northeastern, the two top teams in New England last year, are just as strong with very few runners lost to graduation.

"The front-running combinations in New England are mind-boggling," O'Brien said. "Providence, with Mike O'Shea, John Treacy, and John Savoie, and Northeastern with Jon Flora, and Bruce Bickford, are all nationally outstanding runners. The team competition here in New England rates as good or better than any cross country conference across the country."

Besides Providence and Northeastern, Dartmouth, Harvard, St. Johns, Manhatten, and Syracuse will present problems to the Minutemen this season. Of the first four meets; six of the East's toughest teams, Harvard, Providence, Northeastern, St. John's, Manhatten, and Syracuse will oppose UMass.

Intense competition is the label for this year's UMass personnel. McGrail sets the pace, having travelled to five NCAA championships in three years. In three years, John has gathered All-Yankee Conference, All-New England, All-IC4A and All-American honors. McGrail represents an outstanding student athlete who never made the top seven of his high school cross country team.

Frank Carroll set freshman records in indoor and outdoor track his freshman year and did not suffer a sophomore jinx last season. Consistently the second man on last year's team, he has reached the three-mile time of 13:38.

Mike Quinn, opened up his freshman year finishing second in the IC4A junior varsity championships. In the winter, he followed with a third place finish in the Yankee Conference two-mile run and then established six freshman distance running records with a 13:39 three-mile performance.

Besides the top three of McGrail, Carroll, and Quinn, the next four positions are up for grabs, but important enough to determine the success of the team.

Seniors John Scheer and Chris Farmer head the list, with Farmer being the third man on last year's team. Farmer has been a finalist in the New England 880 and mile over the past two years.

Scheer has been overshadowed by the performances of McGrail, Quinn, and Carroll. Performances of a 4:10 mile, 9:10 two mile, and a sixth place in the Yankee Conference championships make the former Vermont State High School cross country champion a very key man this year.

Returning lettermen include Bob Neil, Cliff Staples, and Tom Wolff. Neil, being fourth man last year for much of the season along with Cliff Staples, who shattered the course record held by a freshman by 30 seconds, will be counted on heavily to continue the UMass depth.

The sleeper on this team might be Tom Wolff. As a freshman he didn't even make the freshman travel squad, but improved tremendously to battle Neil for fourth position on the varsity squad improving approximately 5-6 seconds each meet he ran in.

McGrail feels the emphasis this year will be placed more on meet performance than practice. "Last year," McGrail said, "everybody felt they were under pressure. This year we must be more relaxed but get the job done. No one will be able to rest on their laurels. The competition is going to be rough but it will be a friendly competition that fosters closeness and improvement rather than disagreement and hostility."

Endorsement sought for Northwest road

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

UMass administrators will request the October 18 Amherst Special Town Meeting to endorse the construction of a road from Route 116 to North Pleasant Street a university official said Friday.

The announcement came formally on Saturday in a release from the coordinator of community relations Gerald J. Grady.

"This is very late in the day for town officials and town meeting members to give a serious consideration for any proposal" said Richard H. Minear, UMass history professor and an opponent of the construction plans.

The release from Grady's office also stated: "The proposed road would be constructed and financed by the state Department of Public Works. Almost all of it is on university land."

The request will have to take the form of an article or articles for the town warrant to be presented at next month's town meeting. The wording or number of articles the university will submit was not available.

A spokesperson for Grady said Friday, no further information on the request will come from Grady's office until the middle of next week.

The deadline for submitting warrant articles to the town is this Friday, Sept. 24.

The proposed connector road from Rte. 116 to North Pleasant Street is the northwest section of the now defunct Northeast Bypass.

University and some Amherst town officials had hoped to build the Bypass in order to detour university commuter traffic from North Pleasant Street.

North Pleasant St. runs through the center of town and the UMass campus.

The town had given its permission to build the bypass but rescinded that permission at its town meeting last May.

"Town meeting is exactly four weeks away. I think the request is an impossible one, to give serious consideration to a major road building proposal in that short amount of time," said Minear.

He also noted "the university still has not released the traffic data it said it was collecting."

Grady said recently the University was putting figures of where cars parked on campus last spring through a computer run, and using the same program, applying these figures to this fall's car registration figures to obtain statistics on campus commuter traffic and parking.

Road construction opponents have asked for such statistics in the past in order to better decide the actual need for any planned roads.

However, Grady had said that he was unsure whether such statistics would be in presentable form by the October town meeting or not.

The proposed Northwest Road would run from Rte 116 and meet North Pleasant Street just north of the School of Education.

Most of the proposed road would be built on University-owned land with only a small portion coming under the jurisdiction of the town of Hadley.

The announcement Saturday came following indications that the University would hold off until early next year to seek town endorsement for any new construction plans.

No other warrant articles had been submitted to the Selectmen as of last Friday afternoon.

Small-scale self-sufficiency goal of Butterfield Project

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

"Butterfield is an ideal place to develop small-scale self-sufficiency at the University," said Sandy Matathia, organizer of the Butterfield Farm Project.

Last year Matathia acquired the use of a half-acre piece of University land, enlisted the aid of 10 other Butterfield residents, and obtained a grant from the Orchard Hill-Central Academic Affairs Office to get the vegetable-growing project off the ground.

The plot of land was plowed by Bernard L. Hilton, University Farm Superintendent, but the rest of the project was up to us", said Matathia.

They bought tools, seed and organic soil builder with their grant money, according to Matathia.

A core group of about five women were the main work force in the totally organic garden.

Julie Smith, one of the workers, said that they had another half-acre plot of land available, but not enough people to work on it.

She said she hopes there will be growing student support for the project and that next year they will be able to plant a full acre.

"It was a very valuable learning experience for us," said Joan Arbetter, another of the group who worked in the summer.

"It was humid and the work was hard, especially with no immediate reward in sight. That's what makes it so satisfying now, while we're harvesting."

Butterfield, a renovated dorm in Central Residence Area, operates a student run kitchen, along with the help of University-employed cook, Norman Paulin.

About 35 of the 140 Butterfield residents work in the kitchen.

They receive pays $2.20-hour and they don't have to be work-study eligible to qualify, just dorm residents, said Paulin.

Minimum number of working hours per week is about five.

"It's good to be able to get a paying job. Anywhere else on campus, jobs are next to impossible to find," said Debbie Tarr, one of the kitchen workers.

Another main advantage to living in the dorm is the general community atmosphere that prevails, said Tarr. They often have barbecues, volleyball games, and people get together to work in the garden, said Paulin.

Dorm residents must put in a minimum of two hours of volunteer work, each month, cleaning the kitchen, said Paulin.

In return they are able to dine family-style and pay for a 10-meal plan while eating 14.

Breakfasts, served from 7 a.m. to 10 a.m., are cooked to order.

Dinner, every evening at 5:45 p.m., is when the fresh produce, bought back from the farmers at a savings to the dorm, and the pride of knowing it's "home grown" come in.

Lunch, usually consisting of leftovers from the previous night, costs a little extra, said Paulin.

The rest of the food the dorm uses is purchased through the University, said Paulin.

Butterfield gives five per cent of their budget to University Food Services and in return, gets contracts for dairy products, meat, fruit, and other produce.

Matathia hopes in the future the whole of Orchard Hill can be used productively.

The orchards, abandoned for almost 10 years, used to grow apples, peaches, pears, plums, as well as a number of different berries, said Matathia.

Massachusetts currently must import 85 per cent of its food, said Matathia. There is a plan, set up by the State Food and Agriculture Commission, to stabilize the agricultural base in the state in case of a farmworkers strike in the west, or a similar catastrophy causing Massachusetts food prices, already 10 per cent above the national average, to skyrocket, according to Matathia.

Boltwood/Belchertown Project:

'Looking for a few good people'

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

The Boltwood-Belchertown Project will hold its Program Selection today in Campus Center Room 101 at 7 p.m. for interested Five-College students.

"We're looking for people who have high energy and fresh ideas who'd be willing to develop a cooperative relationship with some people living at the state school," project coordinator Gerry Morrissey said Friday.

The Boltwood-Belcherton Project, now in its seventh year, is a Five-College organization which provides persons living at the Belchertown State School with a variety of social and recreational activities.

There are 750 children, adolescents, and adults living at the state school. According to Morrissey there are 12 volunteer student programs in the Boltwood-Belchertown Project that involve all age groups at the school.

Programs range from adaptive physical activities to printing and graphic workshops. Activities are basically social, leisure, and recreational, he said.

Morrissey emphasized that student volunteers need no special skills.

"Supervisors have spent the whole summer in a paid training program. They were trained in program design and supervision of students," he said.

The state school provides supervisor salaries. Morrissey said that students need not be apprehensive about volunteering.

"People there (the state school) have had a different living experience and it's important for us to appreciate that," said Morrissey.

"We're working with people and all people have their own strengths and weaknesses," he added.

All 13 Bolwood-Belchertown supervisors will be at tonight's meeting to give presentations on their various programs.

The supervisors will be available for students to talk to in order that they may better select the program they want to volunteer for, said Morrissey.

"Most of the programs," Morrissey said, "will have a one-to-one relationship. The groups will probably range from 8 to 12 volunteers so that both the volunteer and the client can have a meaningful experience."

Morrissey said volunteers will be expected to commit three hours a week, either during the week or on a weekend.

Free transportation to and from the state school is provided by the University.

The Boltwood-Belchertown Project offers practical experience in the field of human services as well as giving students a chance to "meet new folks and develop personal relationships," said Morrissey.

The community aspect of the project also allows students to meet and share their experiences at the school with other students from the five colleges, he said.

"I can guarantee to people," he said, "that if they come to Belchertown they'll meet some very beautiful people who will be very appreciative of students volunteering there."

Morrissey said the philosophy of the state school is to "effectively provide the people at the state school with community experiences.

This is achieved "so that when they out to community placement they will have the skills to participate in community living," a major goal of the school, according to Morrissey.

"It's a rewarding experience for students," he said. They're involved in a very human process."

Sexism target of Women's Center

By DOROTHY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Women's Center will be offering a variety of courses and activities this semester "to eliminate sexism in Southwest and on the UMass campus," said Susan Snedaker, a staff coordinator at the Center.

"Sexism is a difficult barrier to overcome because it has been incorporated into our lives. It has been eliminated by law, but not in practice. The problem lies in getting sexism out of the minds of the people," said Snedaker.

The Center, which is open from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, is located in the faculty apartment on the ground floor of MacKimmie in the Southwest dormitory area.

About 10 to 12 women actively participate at the Center, and Snedaker said she received calls from several other women who are interested in helping.

She expressed the need for volunteers to help in all aspects of the Center's activities this semester.

"Volunteer help is needed in workshops, courses, and community work, such as The Rape Task Force, family planning, and The Student Health Advisory Board," said Snedaker.

The workshops will be held in the Southwest dorms, along with colloquiums on self-defense for women, sex role counseling, and assertiveness training workshops.

"Volunteers are eligible for paid staff positions after one semester of volunteer work," said Snedaker.

The Center also has three credit courses, some of which were cancelled due to under-enrollment, said Snedaker.

The Women's Center offers counseling for women with any problems by appointment. There are Third World counselors for the needs of Third World women and counselors for lesbians and lesbian couples, said Snedaker.

Snedaker became interested in the Southwest Women's Center through a close friend who was working there.

She was a resident of Central for two years and is now a commuter.

Snedaker began working at the Center on women's health issues. This past summer she worked with a group of women on the reorganization of the Center.

Men's Center opens shop

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"Men's liberation is an idea whose time has come, it's a live one and getting livelier all the time", said Frank Dorman, co-coordinator of the Southwest Men's Center.

Dorman said he saw a need for a men's center as a priority when the center started last spring.

"We got inquiries from men who wanted to know about consciousness raising, so we started in response to men who had been looking for these resources," said Richard Barrell, the center's other co-coordinator.

"Society", Barrell said, "has created the male sex role. The affect of that sex role on myself and other men inhibits our freedom of expression, takes away our feelings of value as a person and makes us feel that we have to go out and get a job to compete.

"We must never show emotion and certainly no spontaneous emotion", Barrell said.

The Center's funding comes from the Southwest Student Affairs budget, but $500 was given to the Center by the Southwest Student Assembly for the purchase of the film, "Men's Lives", said Dorman.

This film is what Dorman calls, a "trigger film."

Through interviews with men of various ages, vocations and races, it traces how society molds the thinking of men towards their roles and raises questions about the limitations of those roles. So far we have booked 19 showings of the film in all areas of the campus for the month of September," he said.

Other center activities are weekly meeting groups open to men and women on Tuesday nights starting at 7 p.m., outreach activities, 'and the questions that follow and a six member weekly group who discuss themselves as men, Barrel said.

Topics discussed in the past were: mens relationships with women, mens relationships with men, how men feel they have been oppressed by being frustrated by society and the development of emotion in men.

"We are now working to start other groups," Barrell said.

Dorman said that the center is encouraging the offering of one credit colloquiums and three credit courses on the subject of men's issues.

"Last spring, I taught three colloqs on the subject of men and masculinity. This year colloqs are being offered in Northeast and in Kennedy Tower Upper, and a three credit course is being offered by Joe Battista, the Coolidge tower co-ordinator, he said.

"This is the only men's center in the state, and if we are wrong and there are others, we would like to hear from them, "Dorman said.

When asked how the two campus women's centers get along with the men's center, Dorman said, "all of us who were involved in the founding of this place have been greatly influenced by the women's movement.

"I would say we are working to eradicate sexism in this society from the other end of the spectrum and that we have the same goals which amount to Human Liberation," Dorman said.

"The women's movement benefits men and in the long run, the men's movement will benefit women. Our activities are in concert with the women's movement," Dorman said.

The center is seeking volunteers to staff the center so more outreach work can be done.

Anyone wanting to associate themselves with the center is invited to attend the staff meeting held Mondays at noon, Barrell said.

The center is open Monday - Friday from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. and from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m., with books and articles for sale and loan, Barrell said.

The Center is located in the Kennedy tower lobby, office No. 3.

UMass sponsors horse show

By JANE LITTLEJOHN
Collegian Staff

Riders from six states competed in the First Open Horse Show this weekend at Tillson Farm in East Amherst.

The event, sponsored by The UMass Department of Veterinary Animal Sciences, was a combination of Dressage and Cross Country Training Events.

This was the first show of the season and has been in preparation since the summer.

Physical plant tree crews built the fences which were used for jumps, then were painted by UMass students.

The students virtually do all the maintenance with the horses under the supervision of Sarah Carlson, Head Instructor, and Karen Glassman, Assistant Instructor, and three student instructors.

The Dressage involved a simple course in an arena where the contestant did sitting trots, rising trots, figure eights and progressive gaits. Riders were scored on technique and poise.

Cross country is regarded as a more exciting event than Dressage due to the dangerous and exhausting course that the rider follows.

The participants have never been over the jumps before the competition.

This form of horsemanship is timed on speed, and the speed varies with the level of competition.

At an elementary level the course is shorter with medium height jumps. As one progresses in ability they encounter longer courses with more and higher jumps.

Scoring in the Dressage event is based on a positive system, where accuracy counts for more points, according to Tillson personnel.

The rider tries to achieve the opposite in the Training Event where he is ahead when receiving no points.

The judges of the affair were: Dr. Henri L.M. VanShaik from Cavendish, Vt. and Ms. Judith Maxwell of Amherst.

Ten students from UMass entered in the Dressage category while only Judy Schector, a student teaching assistant, was the only University representative in the Cross Country event.

Schector placed fourth in the Senior Training Division.

The Riding Program at Tillson's is offered to all UMass students who enroll in the course and pay a fifty dollar lab fee. There are five instructors, two hired by the University and three student instructors.

Classes range from Beginner I to Advanced which offers a niche for just about anyone.

The University owns the horses of which 35 are school horses and twelve are brood mares and young stock.

Changes are being made in Dining Commons food this semester as a result of student responses, said Arthur H. Warren, Director of University Food Services.

The hamburg patties served to the more than 10,000 students on the meal plan are now all beef and contain no additives or soy fillers, he said.

Because of complaints that the pancake syrup was too thin, the percentage of real maple syrup has been increased in the product and Cheddar cheese is now aged at least six months to provide a better texture and flavor, Warren said.

The University Food Services now use "chunk white" tuna mainly because of a recent controversy in which dolphins were killed along with the tuna canned under the formerly used "chunk light" type, Warren said.

"Chunk white" tuna is of lighter color and is the higher priced brand in supermarkets.

Whether these changes have been noticed by students is doubtful as many continue to express negative opinions.

"Dining Commons food is a step above starvation," said Jeff Sprung, a senior majoring in marketing, while an unidentified junior psychology major feels "it acts as a great laxative."

To James Shainker, a senior majoring in political science, the quality of D.C. food is bad but he feels it could be upgraded if unnecessary food waste was eliminated.

Students who had attended other colleges had the best opinions of UMass food.

"It's the best institutional food I've eaten," said Linda Lasorsa a senior psychology major who has attended two other Massachusetts state colleges.

Joe Sarkis, a senior majoring in park administration, summed up a popular feeling with "Eating at the D.C. is a lot better than cooking for yourself."

Of the students questioned only two had made written comments to the Dining Commons and neither of them had received replies to their suggestions.

The Food Services' "Comment Card" asks: "What is it we did well, or not so well?" provides space for comments and asks for one's name, phone and dormitory.

The comments are read first by the individual Dining Commons managers then are sent to the Food Service offices in the Worcester D.C., Warren said.

There they are read by dietitians and answered if a response to the suggestion is called for, he said.

A list of student comments and the number of times each recurs is made up for each week, Warren said. He examines the list, paying special attention to the comments made by more than one student.

During the week of May 13, 1976 there were six suggestions to provide better tasting coffee. The coffee has since been improved, Warren said.

The D.C. receives the most suggestions after a bad choice of a meal, one of the special meals, or a specific problem at one of the dining commons, such as running out of a certain item, he said.

Comments range from complaints on the "cold toast" to the choice of music played during mealtimes. However, many are complimentary, said Warren.

In addition to comment cards, students are asked to fill out Food Preference forms every semester, which ask for the number of times per week they would like to have certain meals.

"The Food Preference form gets unpopular meals and products off the menu," Warren said.

"It's impossible to please 100 per cent of the students, which is why we offer a variety of choices," he added.

At present there is no student board to act as a medium between the dining commons and students.

Warren said he would like to see such a board and feels it should be entirely student run.

The 14 meal plan is the most popular, Warren said. 6,500 students are on this plan which includes meals on weekends, while there are 3,000 students on the 10 meal plan and about 500 on the 19 meal plan, he said.

A popular suggestion from students is for the 10 meal plan to include meals on weekends," Warren said, "but it would involve a considerable cost increase."

For an average meal, students consume two and a half tons of meat and about a ton of potatoes, Warren said.

Last year students drank over one million quarts of white milk alone.

MassPIRG report indicates faulty labeling

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

Consumers in the state are receiving inadequate freshness and nutritional information on food labels, according to a recently released study by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG).

The six-month study showed 56 per cent of the 110,247 dairy, meat and bakery products examined for open dating either had no date, or the date provided was unreadable or unintelligible.

Open dating is the display of a date on a packaged food, determining how long the product will retain its flavor and nutritional value.

In addition, the study indicated 44 per cent of the 237 "most popular" food products, and 82 per cent of the 1,765 convenience foods examined did not include nutritional information on their labels.

This is the listing of quantitative and nutrient content contained in the product.

"Massachusetts consumers are paying the highest food prices in the nation, yet denied information which will allow them to make wise purchases of food with quality," said Susan A. Kohler, Mass PIRG project coordinator.

She said in 1971 the Massachusetts Consumers Council began urging the Department of Public Health (DPH) to provide informative food labels.

In 1973, the DPH promulgated "Uniform Packaging and Labeling Regulations," but Kohler noted due to "legal hassles" these were never enforced.

According to the Mass PIRG study, entitled, "Food Labeling in Massachusetts: What You Don't See Is What You Get," open dating practices in the state are "totally voluntary" and nutritional information is required only on products which make a nutritional claim or add certain nutrients.

The study was conducted by students from nine state colleges and universities who surveyed 16 food stores in 12 communities, included a random telephone survey of 203 shoppers from the Northampton, Easthampton and Amherst areas.

It showed 90 per cent of the shoppers questioned felt nutritional labeling would be beneficial on all food products and that 92 per cent of the shoppers stated they would use nutritional labeling, at least sometimes, if it were clear and easy to understand.

A letter has been sent by Mass PIRG to Department of Public Health Commissioner Jonathan Fielding, according to Kohler, urging him to revise the 1973 "Uniform Packaging and Labeling Regulations."

The Mass PIRG study recommends that mandatory open dating regulations be applied to all food products, except alcoholic beverages and unpackaged fresh fruits and vegetables.

It further suggests that nutritional content information on package labeling, a percentage breakdown of all characteristic ingredients and a complete listing of all ingredients in order of descending prominence be a mandatory requirement in each food product.

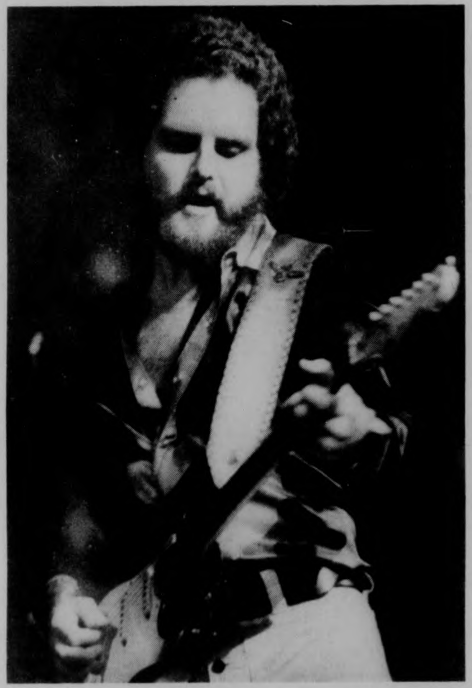
'Let there be music . . .'

Orleans at the FAC :

By ROB CARLIN



The sounds of excited voices echoed through the exterior corridors of the Fine Arts Center Thursday night as a crowd of 2000 waited for the doors of the concert hall to open for the feature performances of Orleans and Johanna Wild.

The concert was sponsored by Eastern Mountain Concerts, a student-run organization. It was, according to Bruce Wingate, director of E.M.C., "from the audience's standpoint, a good concert, but from our (E.M.C.) viewpoint, Orleans was one of the worst groups we've ever had to work with. However, the shows did go well, and were enjoyed by those attending."

Johanna Wild took the floor first and warmed up the audience with some of their original hard rock and roll pieces. Orleans followed after a short intermission and completed the performance with a variety of music ranging from mellow to soft rock and roll, including their two latest hit singles, "Dance With Me" and "Still the One."

Vincent Vafiades, E.M.C. security official, commented that "the audience was super, well-behaved, and very cooperative. I'm sure the crowd's performance will convince the Fine Arts Center and other UMass officials that similar concerts can come off well in the concert hall."

New England News in Brief

High hiker found in woods

LITTLETON, N.H. — A hiker who was found after being lost in the White Mountains for six days says his trouble began when he ate a plant which caused him to halluncinate.

Walter Foster, 42, an experienced hiker from Manchester, was found Saturday not far from the entrance to the Lafayette Campgrounds in Franconia Notch. He had been reported missing last Tuesday.

Foster, who was found by a Boy Scout hiker, was recuperating in good condition at the Littleton Hospital here.

He said yesterday he began a two-day camping trip a week ago last Thursday. But he said after spending the first night as planned atop Cannon Mountain, he decided to detour through an area he had never been before.

Foster said that's when his troubles began.

First, he said, he encountered thick brush. Then he twisted his ankle on a root. After bandaging his ankle he camped out for the night.

But that night — a week from last Friday — his problems became worse when, he said, he ate a plant that made him terribly ill. He said he began to vomit repeatedly and to hallucinate.

It was not long, he recalled, that he lost his sense of direction. He believes he wandered around in a brook for most of one day and he left his shoes and much of his equipment behind somewhere in the woods.

"I guess I was really hallucinating because by the time I got to the brook I had lost my canteen and my sense of direction," he recalled.

During his ordeal he rationed what food he had with him.

By early Saturday, Foster said, he had regained his senses and started to walk toward traffic he heard on the highway below in Franconia Notch.

He was found by Steven Wank, a Boy Scout from Newton, Mass., not far from where searchers had found Foster's motorcycle earlier in the week.

Foster suffered from exposure and had a few ebrasions. State officials say he probably would have found his way to the highway within a short time if he had not been found by the Boy Scout.

"It's that plant I ate that caused all the trouble. If it hadn't been for that, I would have been okay," he said yesterday.

Saxe jury halfway

BOSTON [UPI] — A rare weekend session brought to the halfway point the jury selection in the Susan Saxe bank robbery-murder trial.

Two more men were added during Saturday's session to the four women and two men who had been selected from hundreds of prespective jurors in the pre-trial mechanics which began last Wednesday.

The eight jurors — all but two of whom are under 30 — were chosen from 200 candidates during four days of jury selection to hear the case of the 27-year-old Brandeis University honors graduate.

Examination begins today of the prospective jurors who weren't excused for various reasons from the third 100-member pool instructed Saturday by Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin.

Prosecutor John T. Gaffney, who has used 10 of his 16 peremptory challenges, will seek to prove Ms. Saxe was an accomplice in a $26,585 bank robbery in 1970 in which Boston Patrolman Walter A. Schroeder was killed.

Five persons, including Ms. Saxe, were indicted for the crime. Ms. Saxe is accused of felony murder, a guilt by association charge that carries a life sentence.

William A. "Lefty" Gilday is serving a life sentence for actually shooting Schroeder.

Inflation on my mind

BOSTON [UPI] — The most serious problem on the minds of Massachusetts residents is inflation and the rising cost of living, although of less concern than one year ago, according to a new statewide poll published yesterday.

In the copyrighted poll in yesterday's edition of the Boston Sunday Herald Advertiser, 73 per cent of the 1,000 persons interviewed said inflation and the rising cost of living ranked as their highest concern.

A similar poll run in June 1975 indicated 83 per cent of the Commonwealth's population considering the same problem the worst. In June of 1974, 88 per cent named inflation and the living cost their prime worry.

Of increasing concern from a year ago, however, was the situation of business and industry leaving Massachusetts.

That and inflation were a priority of seriousness in the minds of 64 per cent of the state's residents.

Crime and violence in the streets, which was the second ranked concern of Bay Staters last summer, was in fourth place this year followed by the concern with the public welfare system then state taxes, according the poll.

The survey, conducted by the Becker Research Corp., also showed a full 40 per cent of the Bay State's residents considering themselves worse off this year than last year, only 16 per cent saying they were doing better.

Nurse sentenced for son's death

BOSTON [AP] — A Winthrop nurse has been sentenced to five years in Framingham prison after pleading guilty to manslaughter in connection with the drowning of her four-year-old son.

"The act of a mother causing the death of her own child is a shocking one," said Judge James C. Roy of Suffolk Superior Court before imposing the sentence Friday on Sheila Havlin.

The son, Christian Havlin, died July 9, 1975 of asphyxiation from drowning after suffering a severe beating, according to a coroner's report.

Mrs. Havlin, 32, was widowed in 1969 when her husband was murdered.

She told police she put her son in the bathtub after he complained of dizziness and left him for awhile. She said he was submerged and foaming at the mouth when she returned.

When she tried to pick him up he fell and hit his head on a bathroom scale, she said.

Later, after realizing there were inconsistencies in statements she gave police, Mrs. Havlin was quoted as saying, "I must have done it."

She has been under psychiatric care since.

Gamblin'

BOSTON [AP] — Nineteen persons faced court charges of setting up an illegal lottery today in connection with the raid of a cruise boat in the harbor, police said.

The raid Saturday night of the Bay State II also resulted in confiscation of about $6,800 and ended an operation police say they believe had been ongoing for a couple of months.

The 300 or so passengers were released on shore. Police described those arrested as employes of the boat and the alleged operators of the games of chance.

Detective Edward McHale of the Boston Police Department's vice control unit said the 19 would be arraigned today in Boston Municipal Court.

Carter: 'Tax the rich'

[UPI] — Jimmy Carter said yesterday he will raise taxes on the rich, but President Ford's running mate said Carter has "got a real blunder on his hands" for indicating he would raise taxes for half the nation's wage-earners.

Meanwhile, President Ford spent a peaceful Sunday filming a campaign commercial and AFL-CIO President George Meany reaffirmed his support for Carter in a televised interview.

Carter gave no details in his Kansas City speech about his tax reform proposals, but he blamed Republican administrations for seeking higher taxes and opposing tax reform.

"The Democratic party never burdened low and middle income people with higher taxes," Carter said. "If I'm elected I will shift the burden to the rich, big corporations and special interest groups."

To dramatize his point, Carter stacked four thick volumes on the podium beside him and said: "That's the federal tax code. Nobody can figure it out. It's a disgrace to the human race."

But GOP vice presidential nominee Bob Dole accused Carter of "double talk" and a "lack of understanding of a very basic issue" when discussing taxes.

At issue was an interview in which Carter said those families with incomes above the national median would pay more taxes and those below would pay less.

Dole said the median was about $14,000 a year but Carter really didn't know the median when he made his statements.

'He's got a real blunder on his hands'--
Sen. Robert Dole

"It's about like McGovern promising everyone $1,000 in 1972," the Kansas senator said en route to campaign appearances in Cleveland and Florida.

"He's got a real blunder on his hands.

"It's probably going to be the major topic in the first debate or should be the major topic. I think every taxpayer who has above the median income ought to tune in and maybe he'll change his position."

Ford went to church yesterday accompanied by his wife, and went to a Maryland farm to make the commercial.

His aides insisted Ford was not spending much time preparing for his first debate with Carter Thursday in Philadelphia. The aides said Ford was doing less preparation than he would for a routine news conference.

Dole's vice presidential counterpart, Sen. Walter Mondale, was campaigning Sunday in New York City, including Brooklyn's ethnic neighborhoods. He rode a horse cart, ate bagels and accused the administration of ignoring the cities.

"For eight years we've had a government in Washington who thought that you could turn your back on the cities where most Americans live and still have a vibrant America," Mondale said. "We know better. It hasn't worked."

'Diocese-at-large': No women in pulpit

MINNEAPOLIS [UPI] — Opponents of women priests in the Episcopal Church will attempt to form a non-geographical "diocese-at-large" where it will be possible to "have a church life without being exposed to women priests," a leader of the opposition movement said yesterday.

The Rev. Claire Simcox, editor of The Living Church magazine, said such a plan would create space "to be set aside, so to speak, for conscientious objectors."

"We have an internal schism," he said. "But that's preferable to an external schism."

The women's issue, despite the climactic vote last week authorizing ordination of women to the church's priesthood, won't go away.

Yesterday, a non-legislative day in the two-week long General Convention, was officially highlighted by a Eucharist service at which Archbishop of Canterbury Donald F. Coggan spoke.

Coggan's sermon was largely theological and pastoral but he did once again endorse a proposed $96 million dollar fundraising effort being proposed to the Church — an effort whose future is in doubt because of the deep divisions that have emerged over the issues of women's ordination and prayer book revision as well a reluctance on the part of urban bishops to endorse the proposal unless a substantial part of the money raised is set aside for work in cities.

In the corridors and unofficial caucuses, however, the talk remained centered on the women's issue.

Today, the House of Bishops will take up the question of revision of the 1928 Book of Common Prayer and authorization of the new Draft Proposed Book which the House of Deputies overwhelmingly approved on Saturday.

The Prayer Book issue has been a debate over updating and modernizing the Church's 400-year-old forms of worship.

It has largely been defused by establishment of a committee to study ways in which the old prayer book, considered by many to be a monument of English literature, will continue as an authorized liturgical book of the denomination after 1979 when the new book gets its second reading and, if approved, becomes the official prayer book.

But tomorrow the bishops are expected to discuss a host of proposals aimed at implementing the canonical change authorizing women priests.

Foremost on everyone's mind is the impact of the action on the 15 women priests who have been irregularly ordained.

Supporters of the 15 are discussing a proposal which would have the 15 treated something like a Roman Catholic priest who becomes an Episcopalian.

Israel's opposition party forces parliament session

JERUSALEM [UPI] — Israel's opposition party yesterday forced a special session of parliament to debate Foreign Minister Yigal Allon's proposals to surrender captured territory in a Middle East peace settlement.

The Allon plan also came up at a cabinet meeting, where the minister said he published his ideas in the influential U.S. magazine Foreign Affairs to help explain Israel's position to friends abroad.

The article came under fire in Israel because Allon did not clear it with the cabinet or with the Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin before it was published.

Political sources said Allon told the closed-door cabinet meeting he published the article to show Israel has to keep strategic areas for defense despite its willingness to return portions of the territory seized from Jordan, Egypt and Syria in the 1967 Middle East war.

He said the article was a personal statement, but insisted it did not differ from previous government decisions. Allon also said editor William O. Bundy sent him a "fervent apology" for mistakes in the map printed with the article.

The sources said Yisrael Galili, a minister without portfolio, will defend the article at Tuesday's special session, since Allon will be en route to New York for the U.N. General Assembly.

The Likud opposition bloo forced the special session by more than 30 parliament members. The Likud executive committee later called for Allon's registration.

The plan calls for Israel to give up Arab-populated sections of the occupied West Bank of Jordan to be united with part of the Gaza Strip and perhaps the eastern half of Jordan in a Palestinian state.

Israel would keep a strip of land along the Jordan River and return a thin ribbon of territory along the case-fire line with Syria on the Golan Heights.

PRETORIA: Sec. of State Henry A. Kissinger (L) and Rhodesian Premier Ian Smith (R) are seen as they arrive at the U.S. Embassy here Sunday prior to their meeting to discuss African demands for black rule in Rhodesia. Kissinger is said to have spelled out to Smith African demands for black rule and their preconditions for an end to the guerrilla war in Rhodesia. (UPI)

Kissinger wants white power to yield to black majority

PRETORIA, South Africa [AP] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger asked Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith yesterday for a pledge that Smith's rebel white regime will yield power to Rhodesia's black majority in two years.

U.S. officials said Kissinger, in four hours of talks with Smith, warned that all-out race war could erupt if the Rhodesian government does not alter its adamant opposition to majority rule.

Smith and his advisers returned to their hotel to consider Kissinger's demand. The secretary told newsmen after the meeting that he and Smith would meet again late yesterday afternoon "to receive the reaction of the Rhodesian delegation."

Kissinger would not say whether progress toward a settlement in the racial confrontation had been made during the talks. "At this stage I would have to consider it clarification," he said. "We put forward all the views and answered questions.

"I presented the joint U.S.-British views on the subject of political and economic future of Rhodesia. I presented also the views of presidents of black Africa on the essentials of a settlement in Rhodesia," Kissinger said.

Kissinger met with the presidents of Zambia and Tanzania before arriving here for talks with South African Prime Minister John Vorster. Presidents Kenneth Kaunda and Julius Nyerere said guerrilla warfare against Rhodesia will be intensified until the white regime is toppled, and that the conflict could yet engulf much of Africa.

Rhodesian and South African informants reported after the talks that Kissinger told Smith that if he accepts the U.S.-British settlement proposal, the black presidents would try to stop guerrilla activity against Rhodesia's Whites. They would also ask the United Nations to cancel the economic sanctions now in force against Rhodesia, Kissinger reportedly said.

In Washington, CIA Chief George Bush said there could be a mass slaughter in Rhodesia if Kissinger's mission fails.

Interviewed on the ABC program "Issues and Answers", Bush said intelligence reports show that "the status quo appears to be intolerable. Unless there is a political solution, there's a serious situation in which you could have a mass slaughter of the people in Rhodesia."

The joint American-British plan for Rhodesia's political and economic future is known to embody these broad elements:

—As a first step the Smith regime must accept the principle of black majority rule within a precise period. Britain has spoken of two years.

—Britain would then convene a conference, probably in Geneva, to write a constitution for the country. Participants would include Smith's representatives, whether White officials or black tribal chiefs, and delegates from the country's several black nationalist parties. The United States would have no seat at the conference but probably would have a team of experts on hand to help and advise.

—During the period of transition, the Salisbury government would be broadened to take in representatives of the black nationalist parties.

—A system of guarantees for minority groups would be written into the constitution, supplemented by a large-scale American-British program designed to insure the 270,000 white Rhodesians against loss of their assets if they choose to emigrate rather than live under black rule. However, the program's main aim would be to funnel massive investment funds into Rhodesia for the development of the country's considerable mineral resources, its agriculture and its industries.

—An international consortium would be organized with a target fund of $2 billion or more to aid Rhodesia.

Festival halted

MADRID, Spain [UPI] — Riot police moved in to break up thousands of spectators who refused to leave a mammoth outdoor music festival in Valencia that was banned because antigovernment banners were displayed, officials said yesterday.

Thousands of persons gathered for a protest demonstration later Saturday night in the center of the Mediterranean coastal city, but they were dispersed by the heavily armed police.

The national news agency Cifra, which put the crowd at 20,000, said the government official at the "Festival of the Peoples" ordered the program halted because regional flags and political banners were displayed at the site.

The Valencia region, like Catalonia, the Basque region and Galicia, has a regional nationalist tendency.

Community asked to aid African cause

To the Editor:

A meeting to discuss the plight of Blacks in South Africa will be held tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the second floor lounge of New Africa House.

The following is an open invitation from the Five College Committee for South African Liberation.

As you read this, political events in Zimbabwe [Rhodesia], Namibia and Azania [South Africa] are escalating towards a dangerous and seemingly inevitable confrontation between the forces of Black liberation and the last vestiges of colonial oppression in Africa.

In Zimbabwe, nationalist forces are increasing the frequency and severity of their blows to the illegal white supremacist regime of Ian Smith.

In Namibia [South West Africa] it appears that the illegal occupation and exploitation of that country is coming to an end. And in South Africa, thousands of young Black and colored demonstrators have taken to the streets to protest the apartheid policies of the Vorster regime. Despite a death toll which now approaches 700 [the government admits to over 300] and the arrest of some 500 "leaders", the African people are not only maintaining but intensifying the level of civil disobedience.

The world has known that eventually the long-suffering and much-oppressed people of South Africa would one day rise up against the system of their oppression. Now that day is here, and the question is, what if anything, are we to do?

As members of the Black community, we feel a particular identification with the struggle now going on in South Africa which seems so similar to our own Civil Rights struggle in the 1960s. We feel it our responsibility, at the very least, to find ways to heighten the general awareness of this struggle in the University community and to explore ways in which our community may contribute to the struggle.

While we consider this to be a particular historical responsibility of Afro-Americans, we know that other groups and organizations in the Five College area will wish to participate with us in this undertaking.

Legionnaires pick Bellevue-Stratford

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — The Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, headquarters of last July's illfated state American Legion convention, is getting a vote of confidence from Legionnaires.

The Legion's Philadelphia County Council, which had planned to hold its meeting at another Philadelphia hotel Sept. 28, has decided to move the meeting to the Bellevue to show its faith in the famous hotel.

The Bellevue has suffered a drastic drop in business as the result of the publicity generated by the "Legionnaires" disease, which has been blamed for killing 29 persons and sickening 150 others.

Most of the victims had attended the state Legion convention in late July.

Bruce H. Greenfield, president of the corporation which operates the hotel, strongly denied reports it would be shut down. He said business was getting better and "the staff morale has picked up greatly again."

"The council decided to move the meeting to the Bellevue to show its conference in the hotel and give it a boost in its time of need," said Joseph Chase, council spokesman.

Joseph V. Adams, the Legion's state commander, state Adjutant Edward T. Hoak, and state Assistant Adjutant Charles E. Newbaum have all agreed to attend the council meeting, which usually draws about 125 to 150 persons.

There are four groups of children in the Infant-Toddler Play Group: Infants and Crawlers, Beginning Walkers, Walking and Running Toddlers and "The Cooperative Twos", according to Susan D. Mackey, facilitator director.

A maximum of five parents work with the children while the other parents can partake of coffee and resource materials. Every parent is responsible for contributions to their child's group during the sessions, said Mackey.

Mackey, one of the founding members said that the Group is not a day care service.

The purpose of the Group is to provide an educationally stimulating environment not to artificially advance the development of the children, said Mackey.

The parents have an opportunity to observe the children in a non-homelike setting, and to interact with the other parents, said Mackey.

The group is funded by the Graduate Student Senate and by the Commuter Collective. Each family also pays a fee which provides for coffee for parents and snacks for the children, said Mackey.

Future workshops will cover topics including: Nutrition, Motor Development, Contraception, First Aid and Emergency Aid, and Sexuality and Young Children. Anyone in the university is welcome to attend the workshops.

HARRISBURG, PA.: During a Motorcyclists Against Unfair Legislation (MAUL) rally here yesterday, biker Ronald Newhart of Williamsport, Pa. was hit by a car. Two unidentified passers-by comfort him while waiting for an ambulance. The demonstration was held to protest helmet laws in the state; Newhart, who was wearing a helmet when struck, was admitted to a local hospital in satisfactory condition. (UPI)

Murmurs-no need to sit

NEW HAVEN [AP] — Young persons who have heart murmurs or who have had heart surgery shouldn't automatically be kept out of contact sports, says a Yale University cardiologist.

Dr. Norman S. Talner also told a Yale Medical School seminar last week on "Sports Medicine for Community Physicians" that some "innocent type" murmurs don't necessarily mean a heart ailment.

The murmur, a noise caused by blood flowing across a heart valve, could show up in a person who has a normal but very slow heart beat, he said. The slow beat could create a murmur when a large quantity of blood is forced through the arteries during strenuous activity, Talner added.

He cautioned that many of the traditional reasons still apply for prohibiting heart patients from playing contact sports.

A significant lesion in the heart, for example, should keep a youngster out of action. Also, high blood pressure would preclude contact sports.

But Talner said doctors have developed "very sensitive tools" to distinguish between different heart ailments and can advise patients what activities they are suited for.

"We may be able to allow participation in sports of those who may have rather trivial cardiac defects," he said.

One tool used by cardiologists to study heart conditions is "ultrasound." That involves passing a beam through areas of the heart and then viewing it on a video screen to provide exact analyses of possible ailments, Talner said.

Dog control position

The Town of Amherst has a full-time Animal Control Officer position, for Fiscal Year 1977 as a result of the CETA Program, and as of this week, the town will also have a new dog leash by-law. The new Animal Control Officer Stephen Levenson is the person responsible for investigating complaints and enforcing the by-law.

Under the new by-law, all dogs going beyond their home property must be on a leash, or under the direct control of the owner. In the past, a similar regulation was in effect April through October; the new by-law extends the regulation throughout the year. The by-law was passed at Town Meeting in May 1976 and went into effect after a ninety day waiting period ended.

According to Levenson, when a dog is picked up, tags are checked, and an attempt is made to contact the dog's owner. By state and local law, all dogs are required to have a collar and license.

Levenson said that the town has received numerous complaints about loose dogs, including several reports of dogs running together in packs. He added that there had been several cases of dogs biting children.

Encountering racism

Editor's note: Nasser Ega, who came to the U.S. for the first time in August from his native Kenya, East Africa, is a first year student at UMass. This essay describes his initial reactions to American society.

By NASSER EGA

NIGGER! Who me? I asked myself staring out, from the window of my uncle's VW Beetle, at the source of that remark. It was a group of white teenagers standing by a telephone booth on the street.

They must be wrong. How could they call an African a "NIGGER?? Especially an African who had just arrived from Africa 15 minutes ago. In fact it was just a couple of hundred feet from the tunnel, what's it's name, leading from the airport. It must be a case of mistaken identity! If they had known it was a guy from Africa they wouldn't have called me that. In fact quite a few of my friends back home were white!

"NIGGER! NIGGER"! It was them all right and it was directed at me. Am I really in America? Is this the place where I thought racism was wiped out? Is this Boston, the cradle of equality? Is this really New England? Is this really the East Coast, where one isn't exposed to the color of his skin?

I've found out in the short time I've been here (a month to be exact) that all that I was told about America was a myth. That myth has now been shattered.

I know where I am. I am in America where the minority are alienated from society, where there is little hope of upward social mobility for a Black person. I know where I am. I am just a few hours away from South Boston, where the color of my skin earns me somthing short of a lynching.

I know where I am. I am in Massachusetts where a small white child who refused to go to sleep is told "GO TO SLEEP OR I'LL LET THE NIGGERS EAT YOU!" I know where I stand. I stand on the soil of New England, where the Ku Klux Klan have a formidable following. This is the East Coast where the average white man says "Give them an inch and they take a mile."

Then I come to UMass thinking that college kids must be different than their parents. After all, they do seem to have a higher education than their parents and are willing to change this "sick and crazy" society.

But I didn't know what was in store for me. Ninety-five percent of the freshmen were from the state of Massachusetts. A large percentage of them came from South Boston high schools. The very high school kids who were throwing rocks and beating up Blacks just because they didn't like the idea of studying with a Black, were accepted at UMass! The very same high school kids who didn't want the Black students to have an opportunity in life by denying or trying to deny them access to better facilities. Or did they throw rocks at the busses because they feared being in the same class photograph at the end of the year with a black person or two in their midst? And mother would be ashamed to show the photograph to Aunt Mabel when she came visiting in the summer!

I don't believe that those students in South Boston could change society for the better. It would be like as King Vorster to do away with aparthied. By next year and the year after, the students who are in their junior and senior years in high schools in South Boston will enroll in UMass. I am petrified to look into the future of UMass three years from now.

My experience gathered momentum. There is this white male I know who's been having problems lately. His problem is real big. He has to share a room with a Black male. He has always been exposed to the myth of stereotypes of Black people in the same way he has been exposed to the myth of the Jews having all the money.

He is from middle class family and never had anything to do with Blacks in the aspect of having to live in the same room with a Black male. He's led the shelterd type of life most middle class white boys lead and knew the motto by heart "IF THEY SMILE AT YOU, SMILE BACK, BUT DON'T LET THE NEIGHBORS SEE YOU." And it really bugs and bothers me, he says. I wasn't psyched up for this, he told me. He told me that he had to go through some sort of orientation before he could sleep under one roof with a Black person. So that white male who felt bothered having a Black roommate is the result of one of those middle class families. He doesn't even feel prejudiced!

These sort of things just don't happen in Kenya. The white people aren't as 'stuck up' as the one over here. I mixed with them at all levels. Be it at the educational level or at a social level. They didn't seem to be aware that my color was a challenge to their self-rightousness. Or was it all a great piece of acting. Maybe because it wasn't their homeground and they had to be "nice."

As far as racists are concerned, a nigger is a nigger, be he from Harlem or from Africa. That was the one mistake I made...thinking that just because I am from Africa, racism would not touch me.

Brothers and Sisters, I am in the same boat as you. I know that you have been oppressed longer than I have been. But I joined the ranks of the oppressed after Boston. And I'm feeling the oppression of the present.

Corrects nuke article

To the Editor:

I deeply appreciate your newspaper's interest in the discourse between myself and Acting Chancellor Dean Alfange regarding the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of the federal nuclear power program and the need for my continued research into nuclear safety and hazards [Sept. 16, page 1]. May I correct a misinterpretation of my position regarding "civil disobedience" that was reported.

The article said that I would not like to see my book The Accident Hazards of Nuclear Power Plants [UMass. Press, 1976] become a rallying point for nuclear power critics. I believe I said: "no rallying point for unlawful activity" in protest of nuclear energy. The rest of the article correctly notes the lawful alternatives I advocate, namely education and lawful assembly.

May I add that the article was an excellent and otherwise accurate summary of an extremely complex discussion, which reflects your newspaper's commitment to pursue a real understanding of the nuclear safety issues.

ROTC rebuttal

To the Editor:

Paul Fishman's commentary of last Friday, "Training in Violence", leaves one with a completely false impression of the R.O.T.C. organizations on the UMass compus.

If the commentary was, as it claimed, a protest against the presence of an ROTC table on the Campus Center Concourse; why does he devote six full paragraphs to a totally unrelated event, while mentioning ROTC only four times in the entire story?

Fishman dedicates most of his commentary to the circumstances surrounding the death of Lynn Ed McClure. Pvt. McClure's death took place at a Marine Corps boot camp during his basic training. He died at the hands of his fellow recruits, while they were participating in a vicious pugil stick drill. It was nothing less than heinous murder, followed by a downplaying of the incident by the Marine Corps brass. A tragic event, and in its aftermath no serious attempt was made to serve justice; but what has the death of a Marine recruit in California to do with the ROTC on this campus? Only Army and Air Force ROTC is at UMass. There is no Marine Corps ROTC or recruiter here. In fact the Marine Coprs has no ROTC program at all.

The basic training programs of the Army and Air Force are radically different from the boot camp of the Marine Corps. The physical and mental training Army and Air Force recruits encounter is not carried to the dangerous extreme that it is in a Marine Corps boot camp. There is virtually no chance of an incident such as the death of Pvt. McClure happening in the Army or Air Force.

The ROTC does not, as Fishman says, "promote death and sanction killing". Rather, it simply seeks to provide qualified people to serve, and if need be, defend our country.

I am not an ROTC member.

Kenneth J. Akerley

To the Editor:

Paul Fishman [17 Sept] writes about the evils of ROTC and "justifies" his argument by reference to the Marine recruit who was killed in basic training this past year. There is much one might say against ROTC, but drawing in the parallel he did is erroneous; ROTC cadets go through a six-week period of intensive training the summer following their junior year which is analogous to basic training but hardly as brutal or rigorous. [After all, the service has to take care of its future Colonels, doesn't it?]

I submit that future criticisms of ROTC be less sensational and more factual. Criticize it on the basis of its more paradox, of its tendency to blur ethical boundaries in the minds of its members, or of its overly one-sided portrayal of the joys of army life. But don't accuse them of perpetrating the extremes of brutality found in Marine boot camp. [The Marines don't even have a distinct ROTC program.]

As a graduate of a four-year Army ROTC program [who has since been removed for open opposition to the Vietnam war], I had many difficult times but never could brutality be said to have taken a noticeable role in my training or the training of any other officers I heard of.

A poor example

To the Editor:

Regarding Jerry Rogers' column in Thursday's Collegian: No one is going to argue that the judicial system screams for reform. However, to present Sanza's case so onesidedly isn't going to accomplish it.

To intimate that Vincinte Sanza "... went to prison and was forgotten about, doomed to rot in a cell because he couldn't speak English..." that just ain't so. What do you suggest be done with a person who commits three murders? He killed three people.... dead.... Maybe they couldn't speak English.

By the way, how did his victims die? If he "accidently" shot one and the other two died of sympathy pains, then yes, fifty years is excessive. I doubt if it happened quite that way.

Well Jerry, I have one more thought, why don't you latch onto a story and sensationalize it a little to increase readership. Or have you thought of that already?

Kissinger and Vietnam

Editor's Note: The following is the second in a series of weekly columns discussing the policy and public influence of Henry Kissinger.

Kissinger is probably best known for his diplomatic efforts in Vietnam, including his nearly one-man negotiations with North Vietnam that "brought an end to the war."

Kissinger's first real contact with Vietnam in any official sense came in 1965, when he was appointed consultant to the State Department under South Vietnam Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. Kissinger was not at the time an expert on Asian politics by any means, but he soon formulated views on the situation that would ultimately have a profound effect on Vietnam and the public's perception of it.

The traditional American attitude toward Vietnam is perhaps best summarized by a quote from Lodge in the early 1960's:

> My general view is that the United States is trying to bring this medieval country into the 20th century and that we have made considerable progress in military and economic ways but to gain victory we must also bring them into the 20th century politically.

This overt reference to aligning Vietnam with the United States both politically and economically lends much support to the claim that America's interests in Southeast Asia were basically imperialist ones. Kissinger's importance in this scheme was not in changing the actual substance of American policy, but in changing (or creating) the public image of the war.

As early as 1966 the philosophy of "peace with honor" — or at least "honor" — had become an integral part of Kissinger's outlook on Vietnam. In a guest column for Look magazine, Kissinger expressed his view that the war was as much psychological (diplomatically) as it was political, and he even went so far as to say that, "We are no longer fighting in Vietnam only for the Vietnamese; we are also fighting for ourselves and for international stability."

Throughout the war Kissinger, and somewhat later Nixon, maintained this picture of the Vietnam struggle as a crucial test of American power to influence or guide the state of the world. Vietnam was a potpourri of Cold War containment, American world supremacy, patriotic honor, and underlying economic interests.

The parallel between the United States' role in Vietnam and the spirit of German Nazism is one seldom drawn, but an interesting and enlightening one nonetheless. It is notable that both World War II and Vietnam served as economic stimuli for the countries involved — a good case has been made for the theory that the U.S. would not have pulled out of Vietnam were it not for the fact that the war had simply become too inflationary.

It is also important to see the way in which leaders of both countries rationalized involvement in the war and molded public opinion (consciously or subconsciously) to these theories. In Germany and in the United States, the general feeling was that the wars existed as much to uphold national honor as anything else.

Of course, Nazi Germany was an extreme case with an extreme outcome. But it is frightening to think that many American dissenters were treated with the same sort of secret police tactics as were German dissenters. It is also disturbing that a large number of Americans were persuaded by the nationalistic "propaganda" of Kissinger and his underlings.

To be fair, it cannot successfully be argued that Kissinger's real interests in leading negotiations with North Vietnam were to mislead the public about our role in the war. Rather, Kissinger was probably sincerely interested in peace — as long as the costs were not too great. The image of the war Kissinger brought home and supported doubtlessly reflected both his perception of the situation and the political pragmatism that marks so much of his diplomacy. If the American public were not basically supportive of his stand, resolving the problem would have been close to impossible. Kissinger has always sought stability, be it international, domestic, or in his studies at Harvard as an undergraduate.

Combatting depression

It's the middle of September already and classes have been going on for a few weeks now. Summer is fading into a bunch of jumbled and mixed up memories in the face of oncoming studying and exams. Everyone has come back from vacations ready to work and to make this the best semester ever. In addition to all that work, though, I'm sure everyone was looking forward to happy reunions with old friends and to meeting new people.

As the semester progresses and mid-terms approach, people tend to step out of these easy-going summer ways and attitudes and into much difficulty and confusion; the amount of homework that has snow-balled into accumulation becomes terrifying and appalling; UMass will have ceased to be "Party Town USA" and will have taken of the role of official "Pain in the Neck"; it's about this time that we tend to want to run home to mummy just to get away from it all.

Right about this time is when the university starts seeming cold, impersonal, and awe-inspiring. Large classes, uninterested professors, and a general lackadaisical air can ruin an otherwise good day and great mood.

Many people on this campus, those new this fall and also the old-timers, will probably feel very alone and depressed at one time or another. Used to having close personal relationships with friends and family during the summer, we are suddenly reduced to one or two short letters every other week, or one three minute phone call each month. Plus, all our friends and people around us are so busy taking care of "Number One" that they don't really have time for much else.

Just realizing that one is virtually alone, that no one has time for you, is a mindbending experience for some people. It's very disheartening to feel suddenly cut off from home and at the same time to feel like you're not really part of the university community. Plus, with the added burden of studying, cramming for tests, and also social pressure, many students become lonely, despondent, pessimistic, and are generally always tense and tight.

Sure, we generally say to upset friends that "it's not as bad as all that." Well for us it isn't, but for the person going through it, being constantly upset and depressed is something very real. O.K., granted the things that someone is upset about may be blown up way out over proportion, and exaggerated, but to our friend with this problem, things don't seem so. To them the problem is very real and in proportion; they see nothing illogical about their misery.

The sad thing is, there are many people going around on campus in a constant state of depression, loneliness, and advanced cases of the blues, simply because they believe that no one around them cares about what happens to them. They just can't get used to the hard-nosed attitudes of people today.

There is something that we all can and definitely should do for all our friends and neighbors. Let's all try being friendly and sympathetic for once towards the people we come in contact with. Don't let compassion be a thing of the past and sympathy be something that's only found in the dictionary. Problems, just like beauty, are in the eye of the beholder, not an impartial third party, so we should try to be understanding. It often takes only a kind word and a little bit of good old-fashioned TLC to erase the blues.

It doesn't take much to be thoughtful and especially concerned about others, so let's all make the effort, and put ourselves out. If one of your friends goes into what was once called a "blue funk" be considerate of their feelings; remember that old command "do unto others as you would have them do unto you." That old adage still holds, so just remember that one day you might be in the same position as your upset friend. Then, maybe you'll wish that you had shown some consideration for others so that they would in turn respect your feelings as well. It works both ways.

The other side of the coin

By THOMAS MAJOR

Jimmy, Jimmy Jimmy everywhere. Open the Collegian and there he is, taking up half the editorial section. Pick up a magazine and there he is again, smiling of course. Turn on a radio or television and there he is.....if it wasn't for the existence of the Blue Wall, it could drive one to drink.

The campaign has begun, and that means that our skulls are about to be blasted by what author Richard Condon aptly called the "overcommunication industry." And Carter's The One.

It is now obvious that Jimmy Carter is so firmly planted in the public consciousness that he himself will become the major issue of the campaign. The Republican National Convention was also under the Carter spell, with the main speakers busy spending more time attacking Carter and the "Democrat Party" than defending their meager (a polite word for it) record in Washington. This is partially due to the dull image of Ford, but the main reason is Jimmy Carter himself.

The sudden bombardment of publicity was a boon to Carter during the primaries. His opponent, Mo Udall, estimated the publicity a front runner gets as worth $250,000 a week, and this free media attention was invaluable to Carter's fight for public recognition.

But now the other side of the coin is showing itself. While Carter can get free media coverage, he cannot to any great extent manupulate this coverage to prevent overexposure. If the media continues to drench Carter with publicity, the country will tire of him and stick with Ford, whose image is blander.

This isn't any fault of Carter. The most appealing, amiable, attractive personality would become saccharine and boring if it was on the cover of Time Magazine week after week. And if Carter can't stop this overexposure, the drive behind his campaign will fade.

There are signs that this is happening. In breaking with tradition and not starting his campaign in Detroit's Cadillac Square, Carter failed to take advantage of the boost that this rally has consistently given Democratic candidates in the past.

Because he has a relatively small amount of money, Carter cannot present a manufactured antidote to the over-attention of the media. He cannot present enough commercials and advertisements to counter the flood of news coverage that is slowly drowning his campaign. In 1968, and 1972, Richard Nixon proved that given enough money, a candidate can bypass the national press and make a direct appeal to the voters over the reporter's heads. But, restricted by the new campaign contribution laws, Carter can't get enough money to do the same thing in 1976.

Carter is rapidly running out of time to change the type and style of reporting that will eventually determine whether he can hold onto his soft and far-flung support until Election Day.

A remembrance of Agent 355

RESTON, Va. [UPI] — Cloak-and-dagger colleagues of another age paused recently to remember Agent 355 — whoever she was.

Hers was among the stories bandied about by 200 retired intelligence agents who met at an unusual convention in a country inn near here, and it gripped the imagination.

John O. Marsh, a White House counsel, told the story at the wind-up convention banquet Friday night after delivering a personal message of appreciation from President Ford to the former faceless members of the CIA, Defense Intelligence Agency and intelligence branches of the FBI and armed services.

Marsh told how Benedict Arnold, the American general, became a spy for the British in 1780 during the Revolutionary War and betrayed the defenses of West Point, N.Y.

Gen. George Washington at the time had his own espionage group, the Culper Spy Ring, operating in Manhattan to provide information on movements of the British fleet and land forces.

"The security of this major operation was so effective that it was not until the 1930's that the names of the two chief operatives were firmly identified," said Marsh.

"One of the mysteries is the identity to this day of Agent 355.

"We do know this much about her. She came from a well-to-do, socially connected New York family. She undoubtedly moved in circles that provided opportunities to meet with senior officials of the British Army including Major Andre who acted as chief of British intelligence."

Maj. John Andre was caught in disguise by three Continental soldiers. Hidden in his sock, they found papers, signed by Arnold, betraying West Point. Andre was found guilty of espionage and hanged at Tappan, N.Y., Oct. 2, 1780. Arnold escaped to New York and later went to England where he died.

Back to Marsh's account of Agent 355:

"She fell in love with another member of the Culper Ring, Robert Townsend, and became his common-law wife.

"There is reason to believe she obtained information of Arnold's treason at West Point. Arnold was of the view he had been compromised by an American agent with access to British intelligence. Shortly after Arnold's escape to New York City, Agent 355 was arrested and died aboard the British prison ship, the Jersey.

"However, she bore Townsend a son on the Jersey. Her son became a member of the New York Legislature. Only he and his father, maybe one or two others, ever knew the identity of his mother.

Federal land in question

TETON VILLAGE, Wyo. [UPI] — Some Western governors who want more say in the administration of federal lands may be waiting in ambush Monday for Interior Secretary Thomas Kleppe at their annual meeting.

Nevada Gov. Mike O'Callaghan, chairman of the Western Governors' Conference, says today may be the hottest session of the three-day meeting because of the unrest among the governors.

"There will be a demand by some of the governors that the states have more of a voice in decision making about the federal lands in their states," he said Friday at Carson City.

The Interior Department is a major force in most Western states, not only in the ownership of vast amounts of land, but in the regulation of water, wildlife and other resources.

Kleppe and two of his administrators, Curt Berklund, director of the Bureau of Land Management, and Gilbert Stamm, head of the Bureau of Reclamation, will meet today with the governors.

Before the meeting, three of five governors said they felt the federal government was encroaching too much on states in regulating the development of energy resources.

"I think states constantly having to be on their guard not to abdicate unwittingly their rights and responsibilities to a federal government and an unresponsive federal bureaucracy which are all too willing to step in wherever they detect a void," said Idaho Gov. Cecil D. Andrus, who is also chairman of the National Governors' Conference.

An increasing federal presence in energy development also was seen by New Mexico Gov. Jerry Apodaca, who said he saw both positive and negative effects.

"For the most part, the effect has been negative in the Western coal, oil and gas producing states," he said.

"The regulations on oil and gas have been confusing and those on coal development have caused many great delays."

Art directory accepts listings

The Arts Directory, a unique publication that lists artists, performers, craftspeople, writers and a wealth of western Massachusetts arts information, is still accepting listings for the upcoming issue.

Listings range in size from two inches to one half page ads and the cost for listing is minimal. The deadline has been extended through Sept. 30.

The purpose is to create a low cost, continuing vehicle to publicize the wealth of art talent in western Massachusetts. Performers and artists already listed in the Arts Directory have found work in dozens of festivals, fairs, schools, stores, and in the programs of service, municipal, and arts organizations.

The Directory is published by the Arts Extension Service (AES) of the Division of Continuing Education at UM. AES has located over 2000 artists in the western Massachusetts area and serves over 80 western Massachusetts organizations on a continuing basis.

The Arts Directory is designed to inform over 2000 sources in a buying and booking position about the artists of western Massachusetts.

Full Information is available from AES at 545-2013, Division of Continuing Education, Hills House North, UMass, Amherst.

Environmentalists challenge forest clearcutting issue

[Pacific News Service]

September 13 — In an 11th-hour rush, Congress is pushing through legislation that would institutionalize the controversial timber industry practice of clearcutting — cutting all timber in a given area. The result, say environmental critics, may be the permanent transformation of the appearance and management of the nation's 187 million acres of National Forests.

Underlying the clearcutting legislation, though rarely acknowledged, is the question of who will control the 90 million acres of "commercial" public forests — the public or the timber industry.

Conservationists opposed to both the Senate and House clearcutting proposals acknowledge that whichever version is approved this month, the industry will already have won the cutting edge. For both versions would give new, broader decision-making authority to the U.S. Forest Service, a close ally of the industry.

The clearcutting issue, which has smoldered for 15 years, blazed into a full roar in August 1975 when the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a decision to ban clearcutting in West Virginia's Monongahela National Forest. The ruling resulted from a suit brought by environmental groups charging that the U.S. Forest Service — which regulates public timber sales — had failed to abide by the Forest Service Organic Act of 1897, which stipulates that only dead or mature timber in National Forests can be commercially cut.

That decision, and subsequent rulings in Alaska and Texas, struck at the heart of the timber industry's dominant method of harvesting lumber — the clearcut.

Unlike selective cutting, which takes only mature growth, clearcutting fells virtually all the usable timber in a wide swath of land. Remaining plants are uprooted by mammoth bulldozers that push them into piles for burning.

The clearcut land is then replanted with pine seedlings grown by modern high-technology methods to produce more and cheaper wood fiber per acre.

Though the practice is relatively new, clearcutting already accounts for nearly two-thirds of the timber harvest in National Forests and even more on private lands.

The recent string of successful court challenges to clearcutting has been hailed as a major victory by environmentalists. Groups such as the Izaak Walton League and the Sierra Club have long argued that clearcutting, by exposing forest topsoil to the sun, rain and wind, upsets the delicate balance of micro-organisms and results in water runoff that depletes the soil of nutrients and minerals essential for subsequent growth.

Geology professor Bob Curry of the University of Montana, a leading center of forestry research, adds that "Through repeated cropping of trees (as in tree farming), repeated misuse of the forest and soil resources, we can lose, utterly lose, the productivity of the land."

Clearcutting is also charged with degrading water quality by clogging rivers and creeks with debris and upsetting the stable forest floor that filters water runoff. Fish and wildlife consequently lose their homes.

Aside from the ecological objections, critics of clearcutting point out that it leaves hugh ugly patches of denuded land. And the naturally variegated forests are soon replaced by perfectly uniform, single-species "tree farms".

The $2.4 billion a year timber industry responds that clearcutting and tree farming — or "modern scientific forestry" — are the only ways to maintain continued economic growth and to meet the public demand for lumber and wood products.

Since 1971, when the President's Council on Environmental Quality first condemned clearcutting, the powerful timber lobby has successfully opposed all administrative or legislative efforts to restrict the practice.

In a multi-million dollar campaign to sell clearcutting to the public, the National Forest Products Assoc. — the industry's chief lobby — warned that bans on clearcutting would result in shortages and skyrocketing prices for all wood products, as well as massive unemployment in the nation's fourth largest employe industry.

A recent brochure put out by the National Forest Products Assoc. urged the public to write their congressmen "while you've still got the paper to write on".

To press the argument for continued growth, the industry produces voluminous statistics to show that demand for wood products has doubled since World War II and will double again by 2000.

If clearcutting were banned nationwide, they argue, the effect on the nation's economy would be the equivalent of the Arab oil embargo. Softwood timber production, they maintain, would be cut by up to 60 per cent.

In these forecasts of doom, the industry has a staunch support in the U.S. Forest Service, the federal agency responsible for controlling the National Forests and selling the timber. Underscoring the close relation between the industry and the agency, the Fourth Circuit Court stated in last year's Monongahela decision that the Forest Service had changed "from custodian to production agency."

Though the service is charged with representing the public interest in forest management, National Forest timber is regularly sold to private companies at prices well below the going rates on privately owned land.

The debate now coming to a head in Congress is not over whether clearcutting should continue, but whether it should be regulated.

The Senate bill, sponsored by Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.), would leave all decisions on forest management up the the U.S. Forest Service and the secretary of agriculture. Critics contend that judging from the past performance of the Forest Service, decisions on clearcutting would in fact be left up to the industry.

However, the Humphrey bill, which easily passed the Senate, contains a "sustained yield" provision under which the Forest Service could sell only the amount of timber in a given forest equal to the amount of new timber the forest could produce. This section, in effect, requires the Service and the industry to make good the promise that clearcutting and tree farming will produce a greater yield harvest after harvest — a promise critics believe won't hold water.

The Senate bill also contains language emphasizing the need for multiple uses of the National Forests and limits on clearcutting sites.

Environmentalists such as Gordon Robinson, forestry consultant for the Sierra Club, initially opposed the Humphrey bill, saying it "would do for resource management what the Tonkin Gulf Resolution did for foreign policy" — remove all legislative or judicial safeguards.

But the specter of the even less restrictive House version of the bill, sponsored by Steven Symms (R., Ida.) and John Melcher (D., Mont.), has made the Humphrey bill at least palatable to most environmentalists, who now view it as "better than nothing".

What's Happening

French studies at Angers

UMass is offering a spring semester of French studies at Angers, capital of Anjou in central-west France. The program is not restricted to French majors; students from other disciplines and from other campuses are also eligible. The program offers up to 15 UMass semester credits.

Angers is located on the Maine River, in the famous Loire Valley region noted for the excellence of its French, the beauty of its chateaux, and the loveliness of the countryside. As well as numerous artistic monuments, Angers has an incomparable collection of fourteenth-century tapestries. The program includes excursions to selected sites of historical, esthetic, and touristic interest.

Students are lodged in rooming houses or with families; meals can be had an inexpensive government-subsidized restaurants. Students are placed in French courses according to their preparation and interests, after taking a placement test. There are six levels of classes emphasizing language, conversation, and translation. More advanced students may select among courses in French history, civilization and literature. Courses are taught by professors from the French University system; the program director (from UMass) will offer a course in French literature.

The program fee is $375 for residents of Massachusetts who are at UMass or at other public institutions of the Commonwealth. Students from private or out-of-state colleges and universities pay a program fee of $775. (The program reserves the right to increase the fee if necessary — perhaps by $25 — because of inflation or changes in the international value of the dollar.) The program fee includes tuition, textbooks, a weekly meal, and specified group excursions. Not included in the program fee are room and board, miscellaneous personal expenses, personal and international travel.

It is estimated that a room and meals will cost about $150 a month. The program Director will assist in arranging for inexpensive transatlantic travel (which may be $350 round trip). Inclusive costs would be approximately the same as for a semester at the Amherst campus of the University.

The deadline for submitting completed applications with a non-refundable deposit of $100 (returned if the applicant is not accepted) is December 1. Checks should be made out to the University of Massachusetts. Enrollment is limited; early application is recommended.

Application forms and further information are available from: Professor S.S. Weiner, French Studies at Angers Program, Department of French and Italian, Herter Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, 01002.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Monday, September 20 — Born today you are one of those highly methodical persons who cannot tolerate disorganization in anything. Extremely sensitive to any sign of stress in others, you are inclined to spoil what might be a very large "plus" in your personal relationships by putting the blame for any stress you discern where it seldom belongs -- on the chaotic approach others take toward their own work and play. That stress could be the result of outside influences or could arise from sources quite beyond an individual's control never seems to occur to you; thus your initial sensitivity is, in the long run, negated.

One of those workers capable of inspiring others to top performances, you are much sought after as a partner in anything that calls for joint enterprise. You bring to whatever you do a special kind of energy and determination that spells success for projects in which you become involved, even before your involvement has begun. Those who work with you may have to become accustomed to your somewhat imperious ways -- but the benefits will be worth the effort.

Always on the lookout for new methods to improve production, you are willing to take a chance on anyone with original ideas about creating successful action out of unpromising material. A planner by nature, you never begin any enterprise without first carrying out a serious and relatively deep investigation into possibilities for gain or loss. What you want least as you carry out your plans are surprises, for you are not one who easily meets the challenge of the unexpected.

Tuesday, September 21

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Considerable opposition to your desire to employ new methods of operation may make this a difficult day for you. Stick to your guns.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — An effort at reconciliation with a friend of long ago could have pleasant results today. Don't attempt to move too quickly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — An overly sensitive view of your present situation on the employment scene could cause considerable loss at this time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make this one of those constructive days during which you complete plans for more than one forthcoming project.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Insure your own security and that of loved ones through the judicious application of newly acquired knowledge to long-held beliefs.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You should be successful at this time -- but only if you know how to advertise yourself and the results of your labor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The strong support that your present projects receive from those who can help you complete them successfully should spur you on to increased productivity.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — The exploitation of another's talent for your own advantage may gain you more trouble than benefits. Have a care for honorable means.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You may have to make a gargantuan effort in order to do so, but you can get out of your rut today if you try.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Put your life on a more exciting track. Don't be afraid to try your wings where new and lucrative projects are concerned.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Specific talents are needed for specific phases of present projects on the home front. Study children's abilities, then employ them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Consider making a move that will bring you closer to your principle place of activity. Study another's position in this regard.

Phillies suffer setback again; while Mets trip up Pirates

Compiled from Wires

Jerry Morales' home run and the seven-hit pitching of Ray Burris carried the Chicago Cubs to a 1-0 victory yesterday over the faltering Philadelphia Phillies.

Morales crashed his 16th homer to lead off the second inning off loser Jim Lonberg, 16-10, while Burris notched his 14th victory against 13 losses.

It was Burris' first victory over the Phillies this season, but he has a 6-1 career record against them.

Bosox drop Tigers again

DETROIT [UPI] — Dwight Evans led Boston with two doubles and a triple in four at-bats as the Red Sox defeated the Detroit Tigers 6-1 Sunday for their fifth straight win.

The Red Sox collected a dozen hits as they achieved their longest winning streak of the year. Rookie Steve Dillard slammed his first major league home run, a three-run blast off starter Dave Roberts in the third inning.

Rick Wise hurled a six-hitter to boost his record to 13-10 while Roberts slipped to a 14-16 record.

Houk earns new contract

DETROIT [UPI] — The Detroit Tigers gave manager Ralph Houk, who has guided them to last place finishes the last two years, an unprecedented vote of confidence Sunday with a unique contract that is self-renewing each year.

The club also announced third base coach Joe Schultz would not be rehired, but no reason was given. Evansville manager Fred Hatfield, a former major league player who spent four seasons with the Tigers, is being moved up to join the incumbent coaches.

Houk, 57, was at the end of a three-year contract and was given a new pact that the club described as "open ended."

Grogan fires bombs: Sinks Miami, 30-14

FOXBORO, Mass. [AP] — Steve Grogan passed for three touchdowns and scored once himself on a brilliant run Sunday in leading the New England Patriots to a 30-14 victory over the Miami Dolphins in a National Football League upset.

Grogan, a second year pro from Kansas State, enjoyed his finest game as he passed to Andy Johnson for touchdowns on plays covering 15 and 29 yards and hit Russ Francis on a short bullet into the end zone for another six points.

Flashing his collegiate running form for the first time, the 6-foot-4 Grogan also wrecked Miami defenses with his running, carrying for 76 yards, including 15 for New England's go-ahead touchdown late in the first half.

The oft-criticized New England defense turned in a magnificent effort. Miami managed only one first down, that on a penalty, for 26 minutes before Bob Griese rallied his charges for the Dolphins' first touchdown.

Griese put Miami in front briefly with a five-yard pass to Andre Tillman at 13:12 of the second period, but the Patriots came right back as Grogan rolled right, cut inside behind blocks, angled toward the sidelines, straight-armed a would-be tackler and stumbled into the end zone for a touchdown with 11 seconds left in the half.

John Smith kicked a field goal for New England at the outset of the fourth period before Norm Bulaich scored on a short plunge for the Dolphins. The Patriots then nailed down the decision as Grogan directed an 80-yard march which he climaxed by rifling a pass to Francis in the end zone.

Ivy League shines in season openers

Brown survived a wild gamble that backfired, Harvard and Dartmouth got off to easy starts and Massachusetts and New Hampshire turned in impressive performances Saturday in highlights on the New England college football scene.

With the Ivy League getting off to an unusually early start Brown defeated Yale 14-6, defending champion Harvard belted Columbia 34-10, and Dartmouth rolled over Penn 20-0.

Consolation kudos went to Boston University, Maine, Holy Cross, Connecticut and Northeastern.

In the Yankee Conference, mighty New Hampshire defeated Boston University 13-0 as the Terriers rolled up 306 yards without scoring, and Massachusetts whipped Maine 24-3 after the Black Bears had pulled into a 3-3 second half tie with their first points against the Minutemen since 1969.

At West Point, N.Y., Holy Cross appeared to have new coach Neil Wheelwright's first victory wrapped up. The Crusaders led 24-6 with 10:46 remaining, but Army rallied and pulled out a 26-24 victory on a last minute pass.

Connecticut also took on a toughie at home, built a 3-0 lead and then faded in a 21-3 loss to Navy. Northeastern, edge in its opener, took another heartbreaking loss as Rhode Island rallied in the fourth period for a 15-14 decision.

Golfers to defend Yankee title

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

Any doubts about the quality of this semesters UMass mens golf team were laid to rest last Thursday at Point Judith C.C. in Kingston R.I. Paced by the scoring of sophomore Jim McDermott (71), and senior co-captain Tim Diskin (72), and showing little evidence of the inexperience which was to have haunted it, the Minutemen hung on for victory over a talented U.R.I. team. UMass' 6 of 7 medal play, total of 463, was sufficient for a two stroke victory over runner up U.R.I., and far outdistanced both Providence (490), and Bryant (491) Colleges. "I was very pleased with our performance, especially since we won away from home," said coach Fan Gaudette.

Gaudette had nothing but plaudits for the two low scoring members of his squad. "Jimmy McDermott just had a great round, and Tim Diskin has worked real hard, and his performance proved it," said Gaudette. Although not the lowest score of the day, freshman Ron Laverdiere certainly had the most gratifying round. Laverdiere playing in his first match of UMass started erratically, and was five over par after the first four holes of competition. However, the freshman then settled down, and played par golf for the remainder of the day, finishing with 76. "He had a great round , for a freshman to show that much composure is just outstanding," said Gaudette.

Co-captain Bob Sandersons (77), freshman Rick Duggan (83), and sophomore Mark Powers (84) contributed to the final total for the Minutemen. Senior Tim Kurty's disappointing (85) was not included in the team score.

Today the team travels to the familiar north course at Stowe Acres C.C., in defense of its Yankee Conference championship title. The match features the debut of highly touted freshman Keith Lincoln who is expected to step right in, as one of the teams top five golfers. "I'm not sure about the final two positions yet, but I might carry the two Duggan brothers, Rick, and Mark since Stowe is their home course, and they might be more familiar with it than the other players," said Gaudette. The five players who will definitely compete are Sanderson, Diskin, McDermott, Lincoln, and Laverdiere. Should Gaudette carry the two Duggan brothers, it would mean a team consisting of four freshman, leaving opponents something to think about for the next few years.

NFL weekend roundup

Compiled from wires

A flocked field goal attempt by Minnesota defensive back Nate Allen and an end zone interception by Los Angeles linebacker Rick Kay in overtime yesterday thwarted scoring chances as the Rams and the Vikings fought to a 10-10 tie.

The Rams' Jim Bertelsen plunged for a one-yard touchdown with 1:55 left in regulation to tie the game 10-10 and neither team was able to score in overtime.

Bert Jones passed for 301 yards and threw three touchdown passes to Roger Carr yesterday to lead the Baltimore Colts to a 28-27 victory over the Cincinnati Bengals, who played most of the second half without starting quarterback Ken Anderson.

Mike Boryla passed for one touchdown and plunged for another yesterday and the Philadelphia Eagles capitalized on two costly New York fumbles to defeat the Giants 20-7 and give coach Dick Vermeil his first NFL victory.

The Pittsburgh defense, ineffective in the first half, paved the way for a field goal and two touchdowns in the third quarter with a blocked punt and two fumble recoveries yesterday to bring the Steelers from a 14-0 deficit to a 31-14 home opening victory over the Cleveland Browns.

Scott Laidlaw ran for two second period touchdowns and Roger Staubach passed for 239 yards yesterday to give the Dallas Cowboys a 24-6 win over the New Orleans Saints.

Sputtering gridders ramble past Maine

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

Two things were apparent in Saturday's 24-3 win over Maine. One, that Maine is an improved football team. And two, despite, being 2-0, UMass has yet to play sixty minutes of solid football.

"We played in spurts," said coach Dick MacPherson after the game. "We looked like a football team for ten minutes."

Those ten minutes were enough to do in Maine though as the Minutemen went from a 3-3 tie to a 17-3 advantage.

Billy Coleman scored the first touchdown of the game when he broke a 16 yard blast, breaking the tackle of Maine safety Peter Cook. Coleman's TD at 8:35 of the third period capped a four play, 66-yard drive, and with Dave Croasdale's conversion, UMass led 10-3. The highlight of the drive was a 42 yard pass from Brian McNally to tight end Kevin Cummings to the Maine 15 yard line. The pass to the tight end worked well for the Minutemen all afternoon as Cummings and Moses Williams were often open beneath the Maine linbackers.

Defense next came up with the big play. Vic Jefferies, playing in place of the injured Todd Holt, picked off a Jack Crosgrove pass at the UMass 15 yard line.

It took the Minutemen two plays to score its second touchdown. First, Billy Coleman ran for 10 yards off the veer. Then Rich Jessamy broke off a 75 yard run, going through a big hole on the right side of the line. Croasdale's conversion attempt was good and the score stood 17-3 UMass at 5:05.

Except for a Keith Lang bull up the middle from ten yards out with 45 seconds left in the game, there was no more scoring in the second half. After Jessamy's score, the game turned into a contest of errors. UMass had one interception and two fumbles and the Black Bears had one fumble and failed to get first downs on two fourth down attempts.

In comparison, the first half was fairly error-free as there were only one fumble and one interception between the two teams. Croasdale hit a 27-yard field goal for the only tally of the half, coming on the last play of the half.

"We needed those points badly," said MacPherson. "It helped us tremendously."

UMass needed the points because while the Minutemen were inside the 20 yard line of Maine four times, they only came up with a field goal. One drive ended on the three yard line when UMass was unsuccessful on a fake field goal attempt, another ended with Brian McNally being intercepted in the end zone, and the third failed when Croasdale's field goal attempt was wide to the right from 35 yards.

Bill Coleman scores on 16-yard run.

"We moved the ball well," said quarterback McNally. "We didn't put the ball in the end zone as much as we should have. It wasn't a question so much of timing, more mental carelessness. We can't afford mistakes."

One place where mental errors was evident was on the special teams. "The special teams broke down," MacPherson said. In the second half, the Black Bears got good field position on medium length returns. Ron Harris also had a touchdown on a punt return called back because of a clip on the play early in the first period.

While the Minutemen were mentally careless sometimes, physically they took control in the second half as UMass backs ran for 195 yards in that half and 306 total in the game. Maine rushed for 164 yards overall.

UMass also outgained the Black Bears in the air, but not by much as the Minutemen got 174 yards and Maine 138. The Minutemen only got four more first downs than their host, 20-14.

Rushing is where the Minutemen took it to the Black Bears with Rich Jessamy leading the way with 124 yards and Billy Coleman slashing for 114.

Maine did break UMass' strangle hold on its offense as it finally tallied after 22 consecutive scoreless periods with a Jack Leggett field goal from 39 yards out in the third quarter, tieing the game at 3-3. UMass kept one streak intact though. Maine hasn't beaten them in the last eleven tries. And that's what counts.

ON THE LINE... Todd Holt got the game ball. Holt was hurt in the second quarter when he ran Maine receiver Mark DeGregorio out of bounds. The knee that was operated on last May was the one that is hurt... The most interesting play was when Maine quarterback Jack Crosgrove hit wide receiver Stan LaPointe behind him, then LaPointe threw the ball 44 yards to tight end Mike Hodgson... half back Rudy DiPietro was the work horse on the ground for Maine as he rushed 23 times for 76 yards.

Netmen explode; shutout BU, 9-0

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

'There's not place like home.' Yes, it was Dorothy's famous quote that came to mind as the men's tennis team whitewashed B.U. 9-0, Saturday on the Boydon courts.

As expected, coach Bill Brown was pleased with his team's performance. "I was happy with the way everyone played. They played the way they should...I wasn't disappointed with anyone today."

Brown's feelings were more than justified for UMass did not lose a single set throughout the match. However, Brown had his worries when his number two man, Alan (Bambi) Green, was down 0-3 at the outset of his match against B.U.'s Skip Howe. "His concentration was down," Brown said, "and it's tough to pull it back together after a start like that." Green apparently doubled his concentration and won six out of the next seven games to take the first set 6-4.

When asked about his slow start, Green could only credit his opponent. "He (Howe) didn't miss a shot at the start." Green went on to win the match by taking the second set 6-0.

None of the Minutemen singles players seemed to be in danger of having to play a third set, especially Adam Rosen, the team's number one singles player.

Rosen won convincingly over Peter Ehrlich of B.U., 6-0, 6-1. Rosen's strong serve and volly game drove Ehrlich to occasional screams of frustration. Rosen, coming to net after most of his first serves, often turned Ehrlich's would-be passing shots into winning vollies. As his confidence increased with his score, Rosen would intermittedly go to net after his second serve. Because of his great reach, Rosen has an advantage in pulling off such a risky maneuver.

Team captain Barnaby Kalan won his third singles match 6-4, 6-3, over Glen Stylides. Jimmy Barnhart was looking strong as ever in his 6-2, 6-3, win over Steve Wright. In the fifth singles Ricky Sharton beat Carlos Delcorral 6-3, 6-3, and Steve Heyl admitted to full recovery from pulled back muscles after winning 6-1, 6-1 over B.U.'s Harold Hirshan.

Although UMass netmen clinched the match after winning the first five singles matches, they went on to play, and won, the three doubles matches. Oddly enough, some of the most exciting tennis of the match was played in the anticlimactic doubles.

Because the match had already been won, Coach Brown played substitutes Dan Galleger and Dave Nowak in the third doubles spot instead of the regular team of Sharton and Heyl. Galleger and Nowak played a long, tough first set against Glen Stylides and Gene Barton. The two Minutemen finally won the set, 7-6, in a tie-breaker. They went on to win the second set 6-1.

The point of the day, however, came in the Green-Barnhart match against Howe and Wright of B.U. While trying to lob over their opponents at net, Green and Barnhart came up short and had to face several ferocious overheads by Wright. Acting as human backboards, the UMass duo did anything to keep the ball in play; even a couple of impossible 'wood' shots kept the UMass players in the point, (the impossibility of the Women harriers race to strong win

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team had the opposition seeing as well as turning several shades of the color red as the Minutewomen harriers ran away with the championship of the first annual Lowell Invitational Meet held Saturday.

The women completely embarrassed the field, compiling a total score of 24 points which bested Williams' 57 and Brandeis' 78.

Running to the rhythm of "Shake Your Booty", the women shook their heels at the field of 33 runners as they captured second, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh positions to sew up the meet.

Johara Chapman of UMass finished 14 seconds after Amherst's individual champ, Marina Buckley, to grab second spot. Her time of 18:22 was exceptional — considering the fact that she had a bad ankle sprain a few days before the race.

Michelle Cutsforth of Williams was the only other runner to break up the UMass phalanx, as she finished third. Following her was a group of UMass runners who stuck together throughout the race. The fourth through seventh positions of Sue Swartz, Julie Lafreniere, Maggie Crowley and Jane Welzel were the deciding factors in the meet. Only three seconds separated Swartz and Welzel.

Swartz ran very well after being slowed by a calf injury earlier in the week. Crowley made an impressive debut, while Lafreniere and Welzel picked up where they left off last season.

A spread of 25 seconds covered the next four UMass runners. Debbie Farmer ran her way to 11th place. Barbara Callanan ran well in her first college race and finished 12th. Diane Perry and Anne Bradshaw turned in at 14th and 16th places, respectively. Freshwoman Monica Scott ran steadily and had a good first outing in 21st spot.

The weather at the meet site, the Lowell-Dracut State Forest, was cool but sticky. The footing on the 2.8 mile course was rough and muddy in spots, but generally was satisfactory to the runners. The prospects for a highly competitive meet were good, since it matched the three top teams in New England last year; UMass, Brandeis, and Williams. Coach Ken O'Brien was thus understandably reluctant to make any kind of pre-meet prediction.

At the gun, Buckley immediately went to the front, followed by Alda Cossi of Smith. The pack began to string out from the start, with the UMass women already bunching at the front. At the 1.2 mile mark, Buckley led, Cossi had dropped off the pace, and the meet was all but won as UMass had five of the top six runners, and nine of the first 13.

At the 2.3 mark, Buckley held a 20 yard advantage over Chapman, which she held to the finish. Swartz came past in third but was passed by Cutsworth in the last half mile to set up the final order of finish.

After the race Buckley was seen with an ice pack on her shin as "a precautionary measure", and said, "I didn't know what to expect, I just had to play it by ear and see how everyone was doing." "I'm very, very happy," she added.

Coach O'Brien was visibly happy following the meet. "The closeness of the team, and of course of the top seven shows good team strength," he said. "The fact that it's the first race and we ran fairly conservatively and recovered quickly shows that we are ahead of last year."

O'Brien concluded "with the tough footing, hill running, and woods, this meet gave us a perfect evaluation of where we stand, and the results were really pleasing."

So, the UMass women have served notice that they are the team to reckon with in New England, and, it's pretty safe to say that by the season's end, Marina Buckley won't be able to say she's "unfamiliar with the UMass kids and how they run."

It was practically all UMass as the women harriers served notice to New England, capturing the Lowell Invitation Meet. (Staff photo by Stuart Eyman)

Slate seeks SGA input

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

An estimated thirty to forty undergraduate student senate candidates will run under the banner of the "Independent Student Coalition (ISC) in the senate elections next week.

Steven Goldberg, a student senator and former chairperson of the Legal Services Governing Board, announced the formation of the ISC last night on the WMUA program "Focus."

In a press conference with campus media representatives, Goldberg said that the ISC was being formed to better facilitate student input into the student senate.

Goldberg declined to name specific candidates who will run on the ISC slate. He said that a complete slate of candidate would be announced Wednesday, which is the final day to fill nomination papers for senate seats. Student Senate elections will be held next Monday and Tuesday.

Goldberg said that there "is not a functional student senate right now." He added that this results in an inability for senators to define what students needs are.

"At this point," he said "the administration does not know what the student needs are because of the ineffectiveness of the senate. The purpose of the coalition is to define those needs and let the administration know that students are behind the senate."

Goldberg also released last night excerpts from the ISC platform that will be announced in full later this week. The platform states a desire to discern more knowledge about where the $1.1 million Student Activity Tax Fun (SATF) is spent. The fund is used to fund various student groups across the campus.

The platform also states that the coalition will work as an information network to help disperse knowledge.

Goldberg also declined to name those who were behind the formation of the ISC, but it was learned last night that SGA co-presidents Paul Cronin and Jay Martus will announce in a Wednesday press conference their support of the ISC.

Goldberg also announced that he will meet with a group of Third World students on Wednesday to discuss the ICS. He also said that he plans to meet with women students about the new political group.

Goldberg said that lack of student involvement in the student senate spurred the formation of the ISC. There currently are only about 60 filled seats in the senate, which normally seats 120 senators.

The intention of the ISC said Goldberg, is not to replace the student union which has been in the offing for two years as representatives of the students.

Goldberg said that he would "like to see a more comprehensive plan for a union."

He added, however, that though he had no philosophical qualms with a student union," it was an idea whose time just never came. It did not get into the mainstream of student thought."

Goldberg said that the trust of the ISC was to get more students involved in the student senate. He said that the current senate "has no powers." He expressed the hope that more students than the roughly 2000 who voted in Student Government Association last years elections would turn out next week.

The prepared statement read by Goldberg stated "the basic requirement to run on the slate is a willingness on the part of the student senators to go back to their constituents and inform them on the way in which their SATF is spent."

The statement continued, "...the student monies should be spent on student services, not professional staff salaries and burgeoning bureaucracies."

Goldberg estimated that there currently are about 30 staff positions that are paid for through the SATF, but he did not specify what, if any, position would be cut out if the slate is elected next week.

The excerpts from the platform also state that energies of students should be better channeled and aimed towards specific problem areas.

The ISC is not intended to be a political party as such, according to Goldberg. He said that he did not believe that the ISC would have any "opponents" in the Senate.

Goldberg denied that the ISC was a power party intended to gain control of the student senate. He stressed that the purpose is it try to involve more students in the student government.

In his prepared statement, he said, "the goal of the ISC is not to attack fellow students, nor is it to attack the administration. Our goal is to advance student life at the University of Massachusetts."

Goldberg said that more specific ISC proposals would be forthcoming this week.

Bypass may not make town meeting

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Due to a slip in procedure the Amherst Chamber of Commerce may not submit a proposal concerning the construction of a section of the defunct Northeast Bypass at next month's Amherst Special Town Meeting.

"It turns out we need to get 100 signatures of registered voters by Friday. I just found out this afternoon," Chamber of Commerce President James Lumley said yesterday.

The 100 signatures are necessary for a sponsor to get its article on the town warrant. Lumley said this is a change in policy that they are not used to.

The group's board of directors hopes to submit an article encouraging the construction of a North Pleasant Street-East Pleasant Street connector for discussion purposes at the October 18 meeting, according to Lumley.

That road, together with the university administration's proposed road between North Pleasant Street and Rte. 116, equal much of the northern section of the Northeast Bypass rejected at last Spring's Amherst Town Meeting.

However, Lumley said yesterday the article the Chamber of Commerce hoped to submit may not get on the town warrant after all.

Lumley said, "We may be caught in a very difficult problem."

It will be difficult to gather the signatures between today and the Friday deadline for warrant article submission, Lumley said. The Chamber of Commerce is volunteer with the exception of one part-time employee he added.

The Chamber has not lobbyed on behalf of the article. Lumley said although the Board of Directors decided to submit the article, the Chamber of Commerce as a whole is not yet advocating the road construction, although it might in the future.

Right now the issue is being brought to the town meeting by the Chamber's Board of Directors only as "something to consider," he said.

Lumley said a poll of the 150 Chamber of Commerce members to determine if they are opposed or in favor to the construction of a North Pleasant Street-East Pleasant Street connector is planned for before the October meeting.

The 12 member Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors decided to bring the issue before the October town meeting at its own monthly meeting on September 7, according to Lumley.

He said that although UMass Coordinator of Community Relations Gerald Grady spoke before the meeting, it was to discuss the University's part in Amherst's Community Day planned for this fall.

"I don't believe it (the North Pleasant Street-East Pleasant Street connector) was discussed while he was there," he said.

Grady will represent the UMass administration at the October town meeting when the university asks for Amherst's endorsement of its road construction plans.

"Gerald Grady doesn't need to convince us of this thing," he said.

Lumley said he is personally very much in favor of the proposed road, and believes most of the Chamber of Commerce members, on examination of the issue, would be too.

"We're concerned with the North Amherst shopper," he said, who might use the University proposed North Pleasant Street-Rte. 116 road if it were built "and shoot down to Hadley" instead of Amherst.

Even if the university proposed road was not built, he said he still thought the North Pleasant Street-East Pleasant Street connector would be a good idea to relieve the congested North Pleasant Street of traffic.

Interview with Dwight Allen

Dwight W. Allen resigned the office of Dean of the School of Education in January, 1975, in the wake of a scandal involving missing funds. Although Allen was not involved, he resigned on the rationale that his continued term would cause more controversy and hurt his effectiveness as an administrator.

During Allen's term as dean of the school of ed, he won a national reputation for innovativeness and creativity. Since then, the school has come under sharp criticism for many of the programs initiated by Allen.

After his resignation, Allen took a year's sabbatical in Africa. Allen has now returned to the School of Ed as a teacher.

Here are some of his thoughts upon returning to UMass.

Q. Shortly after your resignation, the Daily Hampshire Gazette ran a story saying that you felt that the scandal came at a bad time, and that you felt the future of the School of Ed to be uncertain. How do you feel about that now?

A. The school has gone through a very difficult two years, and much of that difficulty was undeserved. What happened was, you had one professor who engaged in illegal activities. No one defends that; but when only one professor is involved — that's thin when you look at what the whole school went through as a consequence. That is the unfortunate part.

Look at the history. It started out as a potential financial scandal, then everything was piled on top of it. Then the press says, 'Oh, by the way, the school is a degree mill. Academics were put in an undeserved bad light.

When it all got sorted out two years later, there were three major academic committees, and they all agreed that the basic academic structure of the School of Ed was sound.

Then again, I don't want anyone to think that the school structure was ideal. It wasn't. But we were struggling with basic educational issues and in that process we made, and probably would have continued to make, many mistakes. But as I said, our academic policies were sound, but tearing the school apart was the scandal investigation. Fortunately, I was not involved in any of that.

Q. So you felt that the COP program, where the money was taken from, was basically a sound program.

A. I think you have to discriminate between the program and the manager of that program. In terms of the program; when you take more than 200 people, mostly middle-aged, mostly Black — who do not have a college education, and give them that education — and have a higher percentage of them graduate on time than the average entering freshman at UMass — that's success.

The Federal government made a bad mistake not to build onto the COP program at UMass.

Q. Before the scandal happened, there was a tremendous air of creativity around the School of Ed. It was one of the prides of the campus. But now that you're back, and you've walked the corridors and talked to students and faculty, can you see that much of that creative spirit is gone, that people have changed?

A. There are still a number of people on campus who carry that excitement, that enthusiasm. Not as much, I think that is true, you're right, much of that spirit is gone. But nothing has changed. I can see almost nothing that can't be done in terms of what we were doing before.

Q. Is it the students then, are they the ones who have changed?

A. There are four kinds of students. First, there are the creative shapers and movers who move the school along; a very small percentage who, by the way, can be very positive or negative toward what they are doing. Second, you've got the student who is kind of a frontrunner. Show them the edge and they'll reach it, but they won't go beyond. They want to be where the action is.

> The school has gone through a very difficult two years, and much of that difficulty was undeserved...
> you had one professor who engaged in illegal activities- that's thin when you look at what the whole school went through as a consequence.

Then there is the third group of students who want to be told what to do, and you tell them and they are happy. Then there is the fourth group of students who have never really figured things out. This fourth group is often as open ended as the first. Once they find themselves, they become very productive — more than the second or third group.

In the past, we have had the first and fourth group dominant in the School of Ed. But now there are a lot of the third group in the school.

Q. And the faculty?

A. You have many faculty members just hanging around here for the wrong reasons; tenure, the lack of jobs, the recession. Some of these hangers-on are good and some are bad. You've got to live with that.

Q. How about the role of the School of Ed in terms of the University?

A. Some people have often criticized the University for going its own way — away from the University; but I think that it has been the opposite of that. The record will show that the Ed School has had a profound effect on the University — flexible curriculum and student input on policy decisions are a few examples. We have always had two students on the policy board as full voting members.

Q. There are still some people, though, who blame the School of Ed for the malaise on campus. They say the scandal ruined the reputation of the school in general.

A. That has to be put into perspective. To look at the University as a whole, you must first look at what the country has gone through. I've traveled a lot, and campuses everywhere are sharing that malaise. A student without the perspective would tend to exacerbate his own woes on something else. Remember, we have gone through Vietnam, Watergate, and a recession recently — that's a good kick. The thing that makes me sad is, I think we had the kind of spirit going in the school where if we hadn't gone through our own private kick, that instead of contributing to that malaise, and I think that it is fair to say we did contributed, I think we could have helped fight that sickly feeling.

Q. What can be done now, though? What can be pinpointed as the major problem in the University?

A. If I had to pinpoint one thing that is wrong at the University, it would have to be the quality of human life. If I were to take up a crusade, that's what I would crusade for.

Q. You are referring to the lifestyle that evolves in Southwest, for example, and the amount of alcohol consumed in the Blue Wall?

A. One of the things I think is unfortunate, in the seven years I was here was that the University went from a position of being totally responsible for the lives of students, to a position of taking only responsibility for the academic end of it. On one hand that's a complement to students, and on the other, you take your average entering freshman who has had a sheltered life, and you just put him out there in a new lifestyle where there is liberty, if not license, and it is very tough for them to adjust.

Q. But what can a University do today?

A. First of all, you are talking to an incurable optimist. I don't feel at all negative about what can be done. For example, I think that it would be very feasible to set up lifestyles in dorms. I would be a very simple process, you say, 'here are the rules.' A student can have a choice between what rules he would rather live by. Have someone interviewing freshmen saying, 'Here you are, what do you want from life?'' I think that the University is out to lunch on the quality of life. Bold action is needed.

Q. Finally, and this is an interview in itself, where should the university head now in terms of goals?

A. Outside. to the outside community.

Q. You agree, then, with the statement that Dick Gregory made here last year — that the true measure of a University is the quality of life in a 15-mile radius?

A. Fifteen hundred miles. We have a good faculty, good students, but the wrong concept. The potential is there but unless people feel that they are doing something real — it's nowhere. Education should be something active. For a university to be training teachers for classrooms that are obsolete, that's absurd. The university has to be the seed for society. That is what we have to work toward. Education should be a vital and active part of the community. Something very, very real.

New Grad Senators accepted

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

The credentials of newly elected senators were accepted last night by the Graduate Student Senate who then elected from them members to the Graduate Senate Finance Committee.

Elected to the Finance Committee were Stan Andermann, Ken Ross, Gary Reisner and Alan McArdle. The committee is responsible for the review and recommendation of any funding requests that come before the Graudate Senate, according to senate president Michael Federow.

The new senators found an immediate call on their duties as the senate officers, upon review of the minutes of the summer meetings, asked for approval by the senate of their past actions.

The senate officers are president Michael Federow, vice-president Tim Austin, treasurer Dan Fisher and secretary Barbara Stack who act with the power of the senate during the summer break, returning early in the fall to the senate for approval of their decisions.

Stack asked the new senators to inform graduate students in their departments of the committee positions available to them.

"In many cases committees have gone for a year or more without any graduate student representation,' said Stack.

Senators were provided with a list of 32 committees which seat graduate students, and were asked to post the list so as to make it readily available to graduate students in their departments.

Michael Pill, a graduate student member of the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) addressed the senate, outlining the watchdog function of the BOG in scrutinizing administrative actions for any conflict with students interests.

Pill said the path of control of the Campus Center building and its operating regulations lead away from student-influenced groups to the less - accountable - to - students - interests boards.

The $20 million Campus Center building which will continue to be paid for from a tax levied on students will end up owned by the state, said Pill.

Federow reminded the senators of the tuition and rents increases approved by the Trustees last spring.

"We didn't stop the tuition hikes, but we did lower the amount of the increase. We didn't stop the rent increases, but we did help lower the increase."

Women profs underpaid, says study

By BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

The Women's Caucus of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) today released a study showing that women faculty members are underpayed compared to male faculty members at UMass and nationally.

The study, entitled Sex Discrimination in Faculty Salaries at the University of Massachusetts, was released as a step toward eliminating "inequities within the context of the faculty unionization effort."

The report is largely based on data from a 1975 Economics Dissertation compiled by Emily Hoffman, a former UMass student.

The average woman full professor at UMass earns $3,015 less than her male counterpart, according to the report.

The caucus report also compares the MSP Hoffman survey with surveys taken both nationally and locally by the American Association of University of Professors (AAUP) which show that AAUP underrated the problem.

Joseph S. Larsen, AAUP President responded to the differences last night by saying he did not know of the Hoffman report and looks forward to reading it.

MSP is currently competing with AAUP for the right to represent faculty in collective bargaining.

"Equal treatment between the sexes is a high AAUP priority, and AAUP has pioneered this nationally," Larsen said.

According to the Hoffman report, within rank (professor through lecturer) pay differences between men and women is 8.6 per cent at UMass compared to 6.6 per cent in the UMass AAUP report and 4.8 per cent according to the AAUP national report.

However, the report said sex discrimination charges could be "blunted" on the basis that men have amassed more seniority than women and thus receive higher pay.

The report encourages faculty members to examine the Hoffman paper themselves for details concerning promotion rates and sex discrimination on campus. The report is entitled "An Economic Study of the University of Mass-Amherst Faculty Salary Differences," and is available in the University Library.

The caucus will be holding a meeting on Tuesday, Sept. 28 at 4 p.m. Further information can be obtained by calling Fay Zipkowitz (5-2765) or Lisa Selkirk (5-0889).

Oppenheim work on display at SU gallery

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

"You can always look at objects and see something differently than others," said internationally renowned artist Dennis Oppenheim who was at the UMass Student Union Gallery last night to present an illustrated lecture of his work from 1967 to the present.

Oppenheim gained fame in the late 1960's for his work in an Earthworks show at Cornell University. He is considered to be refreshing and stimulating in use of various sculptural techniques.

He began the evening with a closed-circuit television piece. The material was mainly visual and did not play much with emotions. In it, the viewers' eyes were fixed on what a man was holding in his hands and what he was doing with that object.

A slide show had the audience 'reaching for the sky'. Oppenheim's voice was explaining the blank, sometimes colored, spaces to the audience. However, the sky kept popping up and was often referred to, creating the proper affect. The artist is provocative and imaginative, and the slide show sparked the same qualities in the viewers.

Oppenheim later explained details and ideas concerning many of his works.

People's sensitivities are different, which makes sense to even the most non-cultured, he said.

Oppenheim's later works has set up situations involving the use of many props, including talking effigies and mechanical media. Earlier, his concerns for landscape transferred to his own physique, shown in a series of Bodyworks.

If you wish to search for your own meaning to all his works, you may see his display at the Student Union Gallery through Oct. 2.

Rape awareness goal of task force

By NOREEN PRINCIPE
Collegian Staff

Statistically there is one rape a month at UMass necessitating the need for "increased community awareness on the problem of rape," co-ordinators of the Rape Task Force said to a group of 40 people last night.

"Rape is a difficult area for statistics," said Sergeant Mary Dumas of the UMass Department of Public Safety.

In one week last semester five rapes were reported, she said. The Task Force has counselled 20 women since April.

This proves that the statistics saying there is only one rape a month aren't always valid, she said.

There is also a larger question of what exactly constitutes rape, she said, pointing out that not all rapes involve "people jumping out of the bushes." A woman could be raped by a casual acquaintance or even on a date, she added.

"That's when alcohol enters the picture," said Evelyn Dustin, an alcohol awareness counselor with the University Health Services.

Dumas stressed the need for women to report all rapes even if they know the person involved.

"Part of self defense is in the reporting of the crime," she said.

The Rape Task Force has been operating since October, 1974 and is a co-operative of students and staff including the Health Services, Campus Police and Everywomen's Center.

The task force has been instrumental in providing better lighting on campus, training of dormitory resident assistants on rape counselling and distributing information on women's self defense and assertiveness training.

There are currently 15 members of the force including two or three men, said Ruth Fessenden, acting convener of the force. Most are representatives of larger organizations, she said.

The force has no budget and relies on contributions to print the educational material. Because it is not entirely student run it does not qualify as a Recognized Student Organization.

The existing educational and counselling programs were outlined at the meeting and interested persons were urged to become involved in these areas by task force members.

The educational program provides written material in the form of pamphlets, handouts and audio visual material. People in the program are available to present information on rape to dormitories or interested groups, said Barbara Estabrook, a Health Educator at the University Health Services.

People are needed to work as Counselor-Advocates said Ressenden.

Counselor-Advocates provide counselling and support to rape victims, give legal advice, often accompany them to court and give follow-up counselling, she said.

They are required to attend an eight week training session. There are presently three Counselor-Advocates operating out of University Health Services.

The next meeting of the Rape Task Force will be Wednesday, September 29 at 8 a.m. at the United Christian Foundation in Cottage B located behind Worcester Dining Commons.

Triples avoided this year

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

For those of us unfortunate not to be seniors, housing is a topic of bitterness among students. But it could be worse because this year there are no triples.

Last fall's cramped conditions weren't because too many new students were accepted. About as many were taken last fall as in past years.

According to Lynda Wierenga, Resident Hall Assignment Coordinator, the over-flow was because more students returned to school after deciding to take some time off to work. The lack of jobs persuaded many to return. The registrar was notified of this after accepting freshpersons and transfers."

Wierenga said the University was not the only college faced with this problem. Instead of taking the 18,500 students it now had 19,500 — one thousand too many were admitted. For this reason the dorms had to be filled to a capacity of 102 per cent said Wierenga.

Knowing of the coming problem a month in advance this August, Wierenga said, the in-coming seniors were asked ahead of time if they would please look for off-campus housing.

The week before and during school, exemption applications were reviewed immediately. If one had a place to stay and qualified, students were let off said Wierenga.

This year's lack of tripling was because enrollment was cut, said Wierenga. The addition of F's to the grading system also played a role. According to Bruce Cochrone, Assistant Director of Residential Resource, this was the direct cause of 3,000 students leaving the university. But of this number, 1,500 to 2,000 redeemed themselves and were re-admitted, Cochrone said.

Wierenga said that no matter what, there would be no tripling this semester. If needed, certain rooms in the dorms would have been converted into student rooms for those who paid their bills late because of laziness, she said. Those who didn't pay on time because financial aid money was sent late, were put into their original dorms.

To triple up this semester would have been unfair to those who had paid their bills on time, said Wierenga.

"Last year there were too many people for this arrangement to have worked," she added.

Those students who paid their bills late and came to school without a place to stay, were put up in the Campus Center Hotel while the Housing Office looked for dorm space said Wierenga.

The students don't pay for this service, she added.

Don Witkoski, manager of the Campus Center Hotel said, "This year has seen the least amount of students (100) put up for the least amount of time (7-10 days) in the past six years."

In the past students have been known to stay up to three weeks without the Housing Office finding them a room said Witkoski. He said her personal belief is that it's the students fault for not having a dorm space when they don't pay their bill on time.

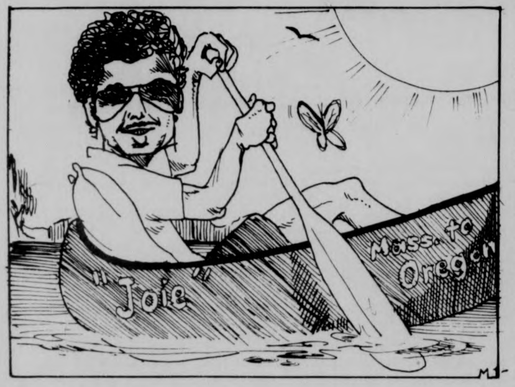
Racism encountered-not just in South



By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

In the "Deep South" of the old confederacy, you almost expect to see racism, but in the Union states of Kentucky and Illinois, I saw much more blatent bigotry than when I was stationed in Alabama.

In Paduca, Ky., we pulled into a public landing to refresh our supplies. Dragging "Joie" high up the cobblestone banks, we grabbed our cameras, our only portable valuables, and set off towards downtown.

A conspicuously plain sedan with a spotlight on the door pulled up to us. The plainclothesperson driving advised us against leaving our craft unattended. "You've already had one spectator and I doubt all you gear'll be there when you get back."

He was referring to a small black boy that we'd exchanged waves with as we landed. He drove Stan to town and I sat on "Joie's" bow, writing my log and chatting with our "spectator", a fourth grader named Timothy. I find it hard to believe a skinny little kid is considered a threat to society just because he's "one of those damn little niggers".

We spent the night in the shadow of Fort Massac, where George Rogers Clark rested his troops during his conquest of the Northwest Territory. Local fishermen talked with us about fishing, farming, and trouble with "those damn niggers".

Fighting a headwind the next day, we pulled into Mound City to see the Indian Burial Mounds that gave the city the name. We searched the town (it only has one real street) only to find out that the Army Corps of Engineers had to relocate the graves when they built the flood control levees. The Shawnees had laid their braves to rest with a view of the river.

Police seek tower bottle-thrower

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

Police received a report Friday night that bottles were being thrown from a window on the north side of Washington Tower. The bottles did not hit anyone and the case is under investigation.

Police said they have suspects and if persons are identified they will be charged with assault with a dangerous weapon. The Director of Public Safety said they will be immediately dismissed from the University.

Arrests

Early Saturday morning police arrested J.M. Daly, 18, of 410 Baker dormitory, David W. Bakstran, 21, of 53 Baldwin Ave., Framingham, and one juvenile on the southwest side of the infirmary.

Daly and Bakstran were charged with larceny under $100. The two chairs stolen from Brooks dormitory in their possession were recovered by police.

The juvenile was arrested for delinquency for attempting to interfere with the arrest and three other persons were placed into protective custody for drunkenness after attempting to interfere with the arrests.

Dale A. Johnson, 21, of 323 Greenough dorm was arrested on a default warrant for parking violations. He was arrested on Saturday at Finast supermarket in Hadley by police.

Assault and Battery

Police received a report of assault and battery Friday afternoon at New Africa House. Following an investigation the complainant was taken to Northampton district court to sign a complaint.

Samuel E. Penn, 23, of 25 Riverglade apartments, Amherst, turned himself in at the police station Friday afternoon. He was placed under arrest and furnished $100 bail. Penn was arraigned in court Saturday morning and pleaded not guilty. He had alledgedly confronted the complainant in Mills House and police were called after a skuffle took place.

Police received a report Saturday afternoon from the Advocate Program, a juvenile program on campus, that two juveniles had escaped from the custody of advocates. One of the juveniles was picked up by police at the Rt. 116 bypass and the other was found at the Student Union by an advocate. Police released the juveniles into the advocates custody.

Protective Custody

Five persons were placed into protective custody by police for drunkenness in the lobby of Coolidge dorm Friday morning. The persons refused to leave on request of the student security guard and tried to force their way upstairs.

One person was placed into protective custody for drunkenness on the Campus Center concourse level early Friday morning for attempting to solicit a fight with a Blue Wall bartender.

Three persons were placed into protective custody for drunkenness early Saturday morning in the parking lot between Prince House and Crampton House. The persons refused to leave the area and were causing a disturbance, according to police.

Bicycles Taken

A bicycle valued at $130 was reported stolen from the bike rack in front of the library Thursday night. The bike was chained to the rack and both bike and chain were taken.

A call from the Ludlow Police department led to the recovery of a bicycle, registered in the operation identification program at UMass, Saturday morning. Ludlow police stopped a motor vehicle there and written statements were made by two persons which stated they did steal the bicycle. The owner of the bicycle, a student at Greenough dorm, was notified that police had the bicycle. He said he had lent the bike to a friend. Criminal complaints will be brought against the two persons by the police department with possibly a third person involved.

A Raleigh 10-speed bicycle, valued at $120, was stolen Saturday night from a bike rack west of Brett dorm. The cable which held the bike to the rack had been cut. The bike was not registered in the identification program.

Thefts

A purse valued at $100 was stolen from the steps of Tobin Hall Thursday night when the owner left the purse unattended.

A meal ticket, identification card, and $13 in cash were stolen Friday afternoon from an unlocked room in Brown dorm where the owner was taking a nap.

Four centers request funds

By ROSE CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Four centers in Central Area requested allocations from the area government's budget at the first official meeting of the Central Area Government last night, motions which were tabled until next week's meeting.

Fifteen persons heard rationals from the Women's Center, the Third World Center, the Racism-Sexism Awareness Center, and the Craft Shop for their requests for various sums of money for their organizations.

All the centers were given $200 each until the motions are reconsidered next week.

The area govenment currently has a budget of $16,350 to last until June 30. This money is divided, with half going to the centers in Central and half to general activities. There was a request to change this policy to 60 per cent and 40 per cent respectively, when the budget fell short of the amount requested by the various centers.

However, it was decided to keep the percentages the same.

Co-ordinators Linda Fuller and Paul Russo of the Women's Center said they needed $1950 to help the center "really start to get into its programs".

The organization, in its second year of existence, plans to hold workshops, show films, run a library and have a discussion place in Baker House.

"We're trying to make a comfortable place for area women to come. We're just trying to get going now, as soon as we can get the monetary support," said Louise Sapp, one of last year's coordinators.

Several government members commended the usefulness of the Craft Shop, yet the supervisor, Mark Richardson, said he Has gone for weeks without being paid by Central.

Richardson requested a budget of $3200 for the shop.

He said he puts in 20 hours per week working with the silver, leather, wood, and dark room materials in the shop, and has had to take out two loans to pay bills.

The Racism-Sexism Awareness group asked Janice Perry, president of the area government, to hold $1000 for them until next week when a new coordinator would be chosen.

The Third World Center's request for funds was disputed because of overspending by the center last year, and the proportion of students in Central would would actually use the center.

Nkru, Mah, of Butterfield dormitory, said the budgetary overspending last year of $1900 was due to a mix-up between him and the Recognized Student Organizations.

He acknowledged that he was responsible for overdrawing unwittingly, but said he felt that the center should not be penalized for his mistakes.

Mah said, "There are two different cultural needs."

Econ journal for students to use 'common' language

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

Students from the Five-College area interesed in contributing ideas and articles to a monthly economic journal are invited to meet Wed. at 7 p.m. in Thompson Hall.

Aiming to address economic issues "simply and practically", the journal will consist of several articles "that make sense," according to Pat Baker, an economics major at UMass.

"Students cannot understand the complex, technological language used by many economists," she said. "We'll try to transcend the writers that can't express themselves in common terms."

By using the journal as "a useful tool of communication," Baker added that she torsees it as an economic guide for students. Varied topics explaining the stock market budgets and financial aid systems within the five college and alternative economic resources such as co-ops will be examined, she said.

Ideas on Third World economics and women in economics will also be encouraged, according to Baker.

She said she began organizing the journal last spring when the response to a Collegian survey showed the interest of several students.

Hoping for the first issue to be published in early October, Baker estimated that exact monthly journal will cost approximately $100. She said plans for financing the project have not yet been finalized.

Railroad Society on the right track

By LAWRENCE HIRSHBERG
Collegian Staff

Are you a railfan? Do you model trains? If you have any interest at all in the world of railroading, then the Amherst Railway Society is for you.

The Society is a group of men, women and children interested in all phases of railroading. The society has members interested in model railroading, live steam models, trolleys and the railroad industry. Some members are active railroad employees and railroad retirees. The group has been in existence for over twenty years and has approximately 100 to 125 members, according to Robert Buck, General Manager of the society.

The group's program consists mainly of monthly meetings and occasional trips, often by rail, to various sites of railraod interest. The meetings are held on the third Tuesday of each month in the auditorium of Engineering East, at 8 p.m.

Activities at meetings include travel logs, slides, railroad industry speakers, and various other railroad expert speakers.

The most popular program has been a series of slide shows with accompanying lectures entitled "Short Line Ramble". At tonight's meeting, Gary Carlson will present "Short Line Ramble No. 5".

The show will deal with the Providence and Worcester Railroad (RR), the Seaview RR, formerly the Quonset Pt. Naval Base RR, the Fore River RR, the Clarendon and Pittsford RR, the Greenwich and Johnsonville RR, and the Claremont and Concord RR.

Past speakers have included William Stockdale, of Putnam, Connecticut, a man who travelled around the world by train; and John W. Barriger, a past Boston and Maine president.

Barriger is called by Buck the "Dean of American Railroad Executives." He has been credited with the revival of an ailing Missouri-Kansas-Texas Railroad and the saving of the financially troubled Monon Road of Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The Society has also had programs on railway labor, traction and shortlines.

Dukakis and aides aim at prison reform

BOSTON [UPI] — Dukakis administration officials and legislative leaders are expected to decide this week whether action can be delayed until the next legislative session on a growing crisis in the state prison system.

According to administration aides, legislative leaders have indicated they would prefer to delay any action on the controversial issue of finding new sites for prisons until the next year.

In fact, according to Deputy Administration Commissioner David Flynn, a preliminary agreement had been worked out late last week to delay action providing the legislature would treat the issue as a priority item next year.

But late last week, Corrections Commissioner Frank A. Hall told administration officials and legislators he no longer believed the matter could wait until January.

Hall met several times last week with Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, to discuss the overcrowding problem.

Kelly acknowledged the proposal to delay further action until next year has been under discussion. Aides to Hall, however, declined to discuss the matter.

At issue is where new prison facilities are to be located in the state. Thus far, several proposals have been forwarded only to meet intense local opposition and subsequent legislative defeat.

'Severe penalties' wanted for striking N.H. teachers

MANCHESTER, N.H. [UPI] — City officials asked a Superior Court judge yesterday to issue a contempt citation against striking teachers after they disobeyed a court order to return to school.

Mayor Charles Stanton said the city would not resume negotiations "until all teachers have returned as the law requires." He asked the court to order "severe penalties" against the Manchester Education Association, whose members voted Sept. 7 to strike rather than work without a contract.

Judge Richard Dunfey ruled in Hillsborough County Superior Court last Thursday the teachers were violating a 1975 state law which allows collective bargaining for public employes but prohibits strikes by them. He ordered them to return to school yesterday morning.

Most teachers, however, defied the order and manned picket lines yesterday at 30 public schools which serve 18,000 students in New Hampshire's largest city. City officials said 175 teachers and 34 school administrators out of 950 MEA members reported to school.

Stanton ordered uniformed police on duty at all schools to aid teachers wanting to cross picket lines. He said there would be no school Tuesday "due to the continued illegal picketing."

The city and the MEA exchanged charges about changing contract offers.

MEA spokesman Pat Kerns said after the teachers voted Sunday night to stay out of school, the city reduced a previous offer of 2.9 per cent beginning in January, instead offering 1.8 per cent in January with a raise to 2.9 per cent in April.

Kerns said a federal mediator broke off negotiations at midnight Sunday night because a settlement was not possible "with such an attitude."

Stanton said Sunday afternoon the MEA "actually increased their unrealistic demands by nearly $150 from a prior offer."

He criticized the MEA for not accepting the city's offer to work under the old contract while negotiations continued. Teachers had bargained for six months when they decided not to work without a contract. They originally sought a raise of about $1,300 a year, then reduced their demand to $600. The city says, and the MEA denies, it would take a tax increase to pay for such a raise.

MEA President Al Lesmerises said the MEA had learned the city put 40 policemen on overtime at $60 per day "to work against teachers in this crisis.

Voters to get say on blue law issue

BOSTON [UPI]— The Massachusetts Senate, on a voice vote yesterday enacted and sent to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis a bill calling for a non-binding referendum on repeal of blue laws which prohibit stores from opening on Sundays.

Dukakis is expected to sign the measure into law in time for the question to be printed on the November ballot.

The way toward final enactment was paved earlier when the House on a 178-33 roll call voted not to reconsider its enactment of the bill several weeks ago.

Reconsideration was sought by Rep. Thomas Lopes, D-New Bedford, who opposes blue law repeal. Lopes said if the question appears on the ballot, it will be approved "overwhelmingly" since it will not cost taxpayers any money.

"This is fundamental issue," Lopes said. "The strength of our people is founded on their moral character. If housewives go shopping on Sunday instead of going to church this will lead to greater deterioration of our society."

Lopes said repealing the Sunday blue laws will not mean more business for Massachusetts merchants.

Lopes said it was "arrogant" and "unethical" for Secretary of State Paul Guzzi to include the blue question in his voter information question on referenda questions before the bill was enacted and signed into law.

Support for the bill was voiced by law makers from communities bordering New Hampshire where stores are open on Sunday.

Rep. Nicholas Buglione, D-Methuen, said "We have to keep Massachusetts money in Massachusetts. Repeal of the blue laws would help business in my area."

Rep. William Robinson, R-Melrose, supported the referendum. He said the "only question is whether the folks back home should be heard on the issue.

On another matter, the House killed a Senate passed bill which would increase the salary of the state commissioner of rehabilitation from $20,000 to $30,000. The vote was 129-35.

The House on a voice vote passed and sent to the Senate a bill amending the state's divorce laws by reducing the waiting period following a final divorce decree from six months to 30 days.

Brooke backs new system of price control

BOSTON [AP] — U.S. Sen. Edward W. Brooke argued yesterday for a new system of electricity pricing that would discourage use when demand is highest. He conceded it will not be easy to sell the idea to the public.

Testifying before the Public Utilities Commission, the senator endorsed so-called peak load pricing, under which electricity rates would be highest during the times when demand is greatest.

Such pricing, he said, "offers us the best hope of simultaneously addressing our two biggest problems: energy conservation and residential utility prices."

However, Brooke said the social implications of such a change are broad.

"Changing the lifestyles working hours and monthly residential costs for millions of Massachusetts citizens is a chancy enterprise," he said.

"It will be impossible, or difficult at best, to tell working single heads of families or elderly people how to reprogram their energy use between 10 p.m. and 7 a.m.," he said.

Brooke's testimony began the commission's third hearing on peak-load pricing.

The Republican senator said there was no doubt that system would be effective.

Not only would it save fuel for utility companies, it also would reduce the demand for new generating plants, he said.

"Forty per cent dependence on foreign oil in the nation and perhaps 65 per cent here in New England is no longer just a crisis," he said. "It is a full-blown disaster.

"There is no question that correctly applied, load management techniques hold out the promise of reduced consumption in the short run." And in the long run, he said, it would cut energy demand.

However, he warned the commission would have "a serious public relations problem" explaining any new system.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford said yesterday he is in favor of offering tax relief to middle-income Americans instead of boosting their tax burdens as "others" have suggested.

Ford told a White House Rose Garden gathering of farm credit officials that "others call for additional taxes on middle-income" earners. "But I believe we should go in the opposite direction. We should give them tax relief."

Democrat Jimmy Carter was quoted during the weekend as saying he favored heavier taxes for those over the median income level. Carter later said he meant only heavier taxes for the rich.

Ford said the way to cut taxes was to "hold the line" on federal spending. "I don't think we need a lot of new spending programs."

Without naming Carter, the President condemned calls for new spending programs, saying that would only add to the taxpayer's burden.

Carter discusses adultery during Playboy interview

CHICAGO [UPI] — Jimmy Carter told Playboy magazine he has looked on a lot of women with lust and therefore "committed adultery in my heart many times." But he said God has forgiven him.

"This is something that God recognizes I will do — and I have done it — and God forgives me for it," Carter was quoted as saying in a copyrighted Playboy interview for the magazine's November issue.

Asked if he felt he had reassured people who might think he would be rigid and unbending if elected president, Carter delivered a long monologue on his religious beliefs and his concept of morality.

In one portion of his explanation, Carter said: "I try not to commit a deliberate sin," Carter said. "I recognize that I'm going to do it anyhow, because I'm human and I'm tempted. And Christ set some impossible standards for us. Christ said, 'I tell you that anyone who looks on a woman with lust has in his heart already committed adultery.'

"I've looked on a lot of women with lust. I'm committed adultery in my heart many times. This is something that God recognizes I will do — and I have done it — and God forgives me for it. But that doesn't mean that I condemn someone who not only looks on a woman with lust but who leaves his wife and shacks up with somebody out of wedlock.

"Christ says, don't consider yourself better than someone else because one guy screws a whole bunch of women while the other guy is loyal to his wife. The guy who's loyal to his wife ought not to be condescending or proud because of the relative degree of sinfulness."

Carter, a former governor of Georgia, said his marriage to his wife Rosalynn has been successful because he loves her "more than when I married her," because she's "fully equal to me in every way in our relationship" and because "we also share a religious faith."

Carter sought to dispel any uneasiness people might have about his religion.

UAW workers and Ford Co. meet formally

DETROIT [UPI] — The United Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co., encouraged by four days of "probing" sessions by their top bargainers, met yesterday in the first formal negotiations since a strike by 170,000 auto workers began six days ago.

The "main table" session attended by UAW President Leonard Woodcock and Ford Labor Vice President Sidney McKenna began shortly before 3 p.m. Woodcock had only a brief comment for newsmen as he entered Ford's World Headquarters in suburban Dearborn shortly before noon.

Observers said they would be able to gauge how long the strike might continue by the length of the first session and the comments made after the meeting by the negotiators.

Should the talks continue at the slow place that marked the final days before the strike began at 11:59 p.m. last Tuesday, observers said the dispute might last longer than the three or four weeks most had thought when it started.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Kennedy gets ticket

BARNSTABLE, Mass. [UPI] — Mrs. Ethel Kennedy was fined $31.25 yesterday for ripping up a parking ticket in front of the police officer who put it on her car.

The widow of the late U.S. Sen. Robert F. Kennedy did not appear in Barnstable District Court but was represented by Boston attorney John N. Fulham who paid the fine imposed by Judge John P. Curley Jr.

The parking ticket allegedly mutilated by Mrs. Kennedy was placed on her car in a "no parking" zone the afternoon of Sept. 3 in nearby Hyannisport by summer patrolman John H. Ebel.

Ebel said he told his superiors that Mrs. Kennedy approached him soon after he issued the ticket to protest his action. He said that when he refused to take the tag back, Mrs. Kennedy ripped it up and threw the pieces at his feet.

Bill to X-out fraud

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Senate passed a bill yesterday creating a federal agency to battle fraud and abuse in the Medicare and Medicaid programs.

The bill, approved without debate or dissent, now goes to the House.

The measure would establish in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare a division to direct investigation of allegations of abuse in the health program.

The new unit could assist the states in their investigations. The bill would increase the penalties for fraud in Medicaid and Medicare, raising the maximum to five years in prison and a $25,000 fine.

McCarthy wants 'in'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Former Sen. Eugene McCarthy's lawyer asked the Circuit Court of Appeals here yesterday to declare the televised Ford-Carter debates unconstitutional unless McCarthy is included as an independent presidential candidate.

U.S. District Judge Aubrey H. Robinson Jr. dismissed McCarthy's suit in his court Friday and suggested he take the case immediately to the appeals court, which Robinson said would give him a speedy ruling.

The Federal Communications Commission turned down equal time demands of former Georgia Gov. Lester Maddox, presidential candidate of the American Independent Party, and Peter Camejo of the Socialist Workers Party.

Weapon conversion

The rising costs and threatened shortfall of enriched uranium — a major hurdle faced by the U.S. nuclear power industry — could be partially overcome by converting stockpiled atomic warheads into fuel rods, according to Harold M. Agnew, director of the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory.

Though the exact size of the U.S. nuclear weapons stockpile is a closely guarded secret, informed estimates have put it as high as 30,000 warheads of various sizes and types. According to the Energy Research and Development Administration, the weapons stockpile consists of 26 types of nuclear weapons associated with 33 different weapons systems, such as missiles, bombs and land mines.

In a recent speech, Agnew claimed that by dismantling obsolete weapons and reducing the unnecessarily large stockpile the nation could gain thousands of kilograms of extremely high-grade enriched uranium and plutonium for use as nuclear fuel. "If one weapons system presently in the stockpile were reduced in number by 50 per cent," he estimated, "we could obtain enough enriched uranium to fuel about 25 1000-megawatt (medium size) electrical nuclear reactors." He added that such a reduction of the particular weapons system "would not be significant as far as our military position is concerned."

Agnew claimed such a conversion of weapons to megawatts would enable the nation by "buy time" on the controversial question of how to develop new nuclear fuel enrichment plants.

Wise to breast-feed?

The toxic pesticide DDT, which has been widely used on American tobacco crops, is finding its way from cigarettes into mothers' milk — and hence into the diet of breast-fed infants. Researchers at Lehigh University in Pennsylvania have found that breast-fed infants of smoking mothers are receiving nearly 50 per cent more DDT in their milk than the Food and Dgug Administration permits in cow's milk. They estimate that "moderate" smokers — one pack a day — are inhaling approximately twice the amount of DDT normally ingested with food by non-smokers.

The voters' chance

Initiatives to halt the rush toward nuclear power will appear on the November ballots in six states, and public opinion polls indicate good chances for passage in at least half of them. Initiatives in Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Montana and Arizona prescribe strict safety, liability and waste disposal standards, while the measure in Missouri makes it illegal for electrical utilities to raise their rates solely to raise the capital to build nuclear plants. Most of the initiatives would require state legislatures to approve solutions to all safety concerns before any new nuclear power plant could be built, although none of the measures would affect operations of existing plants.

A recent public opinion poll in Washington showed that state's initiative leading by two to one — the same margin by which a similar measure failed in California in June. Polls in Oregon and Colorado have also indicated success for the anti-nuclear forces, helped by a strong endorsement in Oregon by Jimmy Carter. However, opponents of the initiatives, led by utility companies and their corporate allies, are expected to spend millions of dollars to defeat the measures, just as they did in California. Portland (Ore.) General Electric has vowed to spend "as much money as it takes to defeat the initiative."

At least six other states are expected to have similar initiatives on the ballot in 1977.

Water causes death?

Contaminated drinking water may be the world's leading cause of death, claiming more than 25,000 lives every day, according to a survey reported by The Elements, a journal of world resources.

Among the leading water-borne diseases are filariasis, which causes blindness and affects some 250 million, and malaria, which still strikes 100 million people a year, killing one million. The problem is particularly acute in rural areas of the Third World, where 90 per cent of the people use contaminated water all the time.

The survey, which focused on eight developing countries, found that 90 per cent of all child deaths could have been avoided by clean drinking water, sewage disposal and hygenic sanitation. Worldwide, the survey found that up to 70 per cent of the population is exposed to diseased drinking water.

Save the elephant

Elephant poaching in Africa has reached such proportions that conservationists fear the African elephant may be extinct within five years. According to the United Nations Environment Program, the recent surge in poaching stems from tight controls on currency exports from some African countries, where there is now a thriving black market for ivory at prices as high as $45 a pound. Speculators who export the ivory to foreign markets are willing to sell at a loss simply to get their capital out of Africa. Though elephant hunting is forbidden or restricted in many parts of Africa, the laws are often overlooked. Among the worst offenders, Kenya's President Jomo Kenyatta is reported to have directed large scale slaughters to enlarge his personal fortune.

Major overhaul outlined for environmental agency

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, which runs air and water pollution control projects, will undergo a major shakeup next month, it was learned yesterday.

The reorganization, outlined in a memo distributed Friday to agency employes by Commissioner David Standley, calls for decentralization of most of the department's functions, including the granting of environmental permits.

The overhaul also includes several major personnel changes including reassignment of Gilbert T. Joly, now director of the statewide Division of Air Quality Control, to head the Central Massachusetts Air Pollution District, one of four new districts created.

Joly will be replaced by Anthony Cortese, now employed by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in Washington. Cortese will assume his new position Nov. 1.

During October, Joly will function in a dual capacity, according to the memo.

Sources in DEQE say Cortese technically will be "on loan" to the state from EPA, which will continue to pay half his salary, under an intergovernmental personnel program.

Some DEQE employes expressed concern that Cortese's financial ties to EPA might place him in conflict with his role as administrator of state air pollution programs which must be approved by EPA.

Standley and Environmental Affairs Secretary Evelyn Murphy were unavailable for comment on the possible conflict.

In addition to the Central Air Pollution District, which includes Worcester and Fitchburg, the reorganization calls for a combined Northeast and Metropolitan Boston District, a Southeastern District, encompassing Cape Cod, the Islands and Bristol and Plymouth Counties, and a Western District, which takes in the Berkshires and the Connecticut Valley.

Paul T. Anderson, now director of the Division of General Environmental Control, which is abolished under the reorganization, will be named to head the Southeast Region.

The Western Region will be headed by Angelo Iantosca, now a district sanitary engineer in that region.

Standley said the regional district chiefs "will have some of the toughest, most critical jobs in the department." He said the regional executives "will be the department in most respects in their regions."

★ Housing easier

Although this is the best handling of the problem, one student who faced waiting for dorm space is still bitter over the experience. Scott A. Barrett, a sophomore, paid his bill late but called the university on the matter. It was said that if he came on Aug. 31, the Housing Office would give him a room. Arriving on the arranged date, no dorm space was given to him nor a place to spend the night.

Wierenga said he left the line without telling anyone or he would have been given a room in the Campus Center Hotel along with the rest. The next day the Housing Office still didn't have a place for him, or a week from them. He waited it out until Sept. 9 and then decided to move off-campus.

Barrett said he admitted that he probably would have received a room at this time but was so disgusted that he just wanted to leave. Barrett is now filing an exemption, using this as an excuse.

Even if he should win his case the majority of money coming to him would be lost said Wierenga.

The policy, said Wierenga, is that each week in the academic year a student is responsible for a room in a dorm. The student forfeits that per cent of the dorm fees. Within six weeks, it amounts to a pittance, said Wierenga.

For those students who aren't seniors and wish to life off-campus, the tripling situation of the past fall is still talked about in bitterness. They said they believe this was just one way the University used to try to pay back more quickly part of the debt to Southwest.

Both Paul Cronin, Student Government, Co-President Bruce Cochrine and Ashoke Ganguli, Financial Analyst working for Residential Resource Management, said this was not the case. All said that a one-third refund was given to each room member. But all do agree that the university cannot afford to let very many students move off-campus.

Cronin said he feels that to allow students to move off-campus is "really insanity because of the lack of rent control laws and the few places available." He said he feels that those with little money would be forced out by the students would could make up the cost by grouping together.

All agreed that those who move off-campus would force the bill higher for the students who must remain. Ganguli said the debt

Kissinger dismisses threats of race war

LUSAKA, Zambia [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, reporting "considerable progress" in his campaign to bring black majority rule to Rhodesia and turn aside the threat of race war, yesterday gave President Kenneth Kaunda details of his plan for peace and waited for black Africa's approval.

Members of the Kissinger party said Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith, in a "painful" meeting with Kissinger, reversed his position on the crucial issue of bringing a black majority government to power within 18 months to two years.

They said Smith was expected to relinquish leadership of the white-minority regime. In Salisbury, Smith said his talks Sunday with Kissinger "produced concrete results which could lead to a settlement in the near future."

Kissinger said earlier he expected the Rhodesian government would come to a "favorable conclusion" by the end of the week.

A Rhodesian government spokesman said Smith would discuss his meeting with Kissinger at a cabinet meeting Tuesday and at a parliamentary caucus of his Rhodesian Front party Wednesday, then address his nation Friday night.

The secretary, who looked weary at the decisive phase of his lengthy African trip, got no definite reply from Kaunda on the plan to bring Rhodesia's overwhelming black majority to power.

The Zambian president, a leader of the black African states who have threatened to expand the guerrilla war against Rhodesia, said he would wait to talk with the other "front-line" nations.

U.S. officials and the British Foreign Office in London have confirmed the general outlines of the Rhodesia peace plan. It calls for a constitutional conference, possibly within two months, to draw up plans for a new government with voting rights for every Rhodesian. Blacks in the former British colony outnumber whites by more than 22 to 1, but few can vote.

ISPARTA, Turkey: A section of fuselage lies on a mountainside where a Turkish airliner crashed yesterday, only 30 miles from its destination, killing all 155 persons aboard. The flight was heading for the resort town of Antalya. Authorities speculate engine trouble may have caused the crash, since weather conditions were good in the area. (UPI)

Presidential ceremonies delay as intense fighting resumes

BEIRUT, Lebanon [UPI] — Rival Christian groups battled for territory yesterday and Moslem-Christian battles intensified throughout Lebanon, clouding plans for President-elect Elias Sarkis to be sworn into office Thursday.

"It looks like a grim week," a Western diplomat said. "We may not even get a short-term truce to allow Sarkis to take office."

The escalation ended a three-day lull and underscored the failure of Sarkis' truce talks with Palestinian guerrilla chief Yasser Arafat and Syrian Deputy Defense Minister Naji Jamil.

The talks broke up Sunday with 'no results," in Jamil's words, although another mini-summit was scheduled for Friday.

The explosion of Christian rivalries came amid new fighting on all the country's "traditional" warfronts.

More than 100 troops from a rightist army faction loyal to outgoing President Suleiman Franjieh fought militiamen of the more moderate Christian Phalangist party around an army barracks near the Christian "capital" of Jounieh.

The battle of machineguns and rocket-propelled grenades blocked the main coastal highway and killed more than 12 persons, reports from the Christian sector said.

Fighting also was reported between Phalangists and rival gunmen around a pro-Franjieh radio station in Amsheet, 25 miles north of the capital.

Combat escalated in the rugged central mountains and the "green line" separating Beirut's Christian and Moslem sectors. Leftists and Palestinians apparently tried to take advantage of the Christians' internal confusion and attacked at several points, rightist reports said.

Parliamentary officials met to determine whether Sarkis could act as president without taking a formal oath of office before parliament. With legislators scattered in both Moslem and Christian territory and outside the country, it could be difficult to assemble parliament in a single safe place.

Sarkis reportedly favored a parliament session at the National Museum in the "green line" buffer zone patrolled by Arab League troops, but the area has been the scene of continued fighting for two weeks.

Experts work on finding jet's secrets

TOKYO [UPI] — American and Japanese experts yesterday removed self-destruct devices installed in a Soviet MiG25 jet to keep its secrets out of the hands of the West.

Removal of the self-destruct mechanism will allow the technicians to dismantle the interceptor plane, one of the fastest jets in the world, and unlock its technical secrets. The automatic demolition equipment apparently did not destroy the swept-wing, twin-engine craft because it was flown to Japan by a defecting Soviet air force pilot who was familiar with the MiG25's intricacies.

"We still don't know exactly how many such devices are built in," a defense agency spokesman said. "We hear at least two have been removed and work is under way to take another one out."

Japanese military sources said more than two explosive devices were attached to electronic equipment in the nose of the Russian jet. The sources gave no other details.

The MiG25, which can fly at more than three times the speed of sound, was brought to Hakodate Airport on Japan's northernmost main island of Hokkaido by Soviet pilot Viktor I. Belenko two weeks ago. He has since been granted asylum in the United States.

About 120 technicians, including 11 Americans, took part in the dismantling operation, the defense spokesman said.

Agency officials said they hope to complete the work in one week and fly the parts in a U.S. Air Force C5A Galaxy transport to the Hyakuri air base, 55 miles northeast of Tokyo, for close inspection.

The MiG25 has been in a makeshift hangar by a runway at Hakodate since it made a surprise landing Sept. 6. The Japanese government plans to return the interceptor-reconnaissance craft to the Soviets eventually.

Martial law endures

MANILA, The Philippines [UPI] — Martial law in the Philippines, billed in September 1972 as a temporary crisis measure, moves quietly into its fifth year today.

This month four years ago, President Ferdinand Marcos — citing conspiracies on both the right and left — jailed an estimated 18,000 people including his top political opponent, Benigno Aquino Jr.

Marcos also imposed a nationwide curfew, closed down newspapers, placed a ban on foreign travel and rounded up half-a-million firearms.

Overnight the former American colony changed from one of the most freewheeling democracies in Asia into an orderly and somewhat subdued dictatorship. Gone were the colorful elections, gang wars, heated congressional debates and outspoken press.

Abroad, mostly in the United States, exiles set up opposition groups. In the far south of the archipelago, distrustful Moslems for a while decided to fight back with guns. But in the north resistance was minimal.

Ruling alone and by decree, Marcos — a former World War II hero and a tough politician even by Philippine standards — set out to consolidate his position and turn the country, in his words, into a "new society" through revolution from the top.

The new stability attracted foreign investors and corporations.

On the diplomatic front, relations were established with China, the Soviet Union and Vietnam. Many links of tradition and treaty with the United States ended. Talks opened for a new treaty giving the Philippines control of U.S. military bases on the islands.

Dog awaits master

MOSCOW [UPI] — A German shepherd dog has been watching planes arrive at Vnukovo airport every day for the past two years, in rain, sunshine or snow. The lonely creature waits and hopes her master will return to take her home, airport employes said.

The dog's owner, who left on a trip to his home in northern Russia, had to leave her behind because he had no health certificate for the animal, the newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda said yesterday.

The homesick dog runs out on the airport tarmac every time an IL18 four-engine airliner — the plane her master departed on — arrives at the airport.

Airport employes have kept the dog alive with scraps of food, but she refuses to be petted, the newspaper said.

The dog's plight came to light when an Aeroflot pilot noticed the dog was on the runway to greet him every time he landed at Vnukovo.

The captain went to the newspaper after airport employes disclaimed ownership of the animal. Then someone remembered the departing passenger who could not take aboard his beloved pet.

Komsomolskaya Pravda, the newspaper of the Young Communist League, said it had been deluged with calls about the dog. One editor said he was hopeful dog and master would be reunited soon.

On our tour of Mound City, we noticed several burned-out buildings in the center of "town". Like the bombed structures we'd see later that day in Cairo, they are reminders of the race riots that rocked the country in the late 1960's.

We fought a headwind all the way into Cairo. Despite the many tow boats trading barges around Cairo (a large string of barges from the Mississippi must be split among two or three tow boats to navigate the Ohio), the town is not a bustling trade center, a la St. Louis. The major "industry" in Cairo is from the marine service yard that serves the town. Only 6,000 people actually live in Cairo and the number is shrinking.

We docked between the shore and a service barge at the Marine Service Company. Since the town is too small for a YMCA, we walked 19 blocks to the local police station to try and hustle a shower.

After deciding we weren't dangerous lunatics, the major concern of Cairo's finest was if our gear was safe from "those damn little nigger kids — they'll steal anything..." The shock of having a steady stream of racial slurs spat into normal conversation was finally dying, but the worse blow was yet to come.

The sargent sent us across the street to the old police station to get a shower, due to a malfunction in the new building's facilities. Carl Dotson, delicate, white headed, man of at least 75 years let us into the building. He was the janitor for the new "municipal building" that housed the City Hall, Police and Fire Depar[illegible] also lived in the old station, [illegible] his salary.

After our shower, [illegible] invited us out to dinner at a local bar and grill. Carl was a surprise. Instead of a local, lifelong janitor we had figured him out to be, he had enjoyed a long and prosperous career before coming to Cairo four years ago and taking a janitor's position for the fringe benefits of free rent.

Carl had been a concert pianist with several orchestras including the London Symphony and the Philadelphia Philharmonic. He also spent years performing on the posh hotel circuit throughout the country and 25 years teaching music in a Missouri college.

I was thunderstruck by the difference in Carl's past and his present job. But the strange change in jobs was only a warm-up for the unexpected sermon on "niggers" Carl delivered. I'd never seen such bigotry in a supposedly educated and cultured man.

"None of these damn niggers want to work", said Carl. "They're all on welfare. Dirty, lazy bastards every one. If you give 'em a job, they expect to just lay back and collect the check. God help you if you ask them to do any work." He went on at length, spouting inanities on the same line with the absolute faith that he was right. I couldn't believe it.

We later learned from a Missouri TV cameraman that Carl's beliefs are almost universal among whites in the Cairo area. During the race trouble in recent years, it was Cairo's white population that stoned reporters and cut camera cables, not the 45 — 65 per cent black residents. "The whites," said the cameraman, "want to keep the status quo of keeping the blacks on the bottom."

We left Cairo proper the next day, after shopping and some writing. Stan came up with an alarming bit of news in Cairo — he didn't have enough cash to carry us to Jefferson City Mo., where the HELP loan to pay for may internship was supposed to meet us. The original plan was for him to carry me to Jefferson City and I'd reimburse him. He had exactly $10. Consequently, the $50 I had sent to Cairo for my touring, film, etc. was commandeered for food. He also announced that I owe him $1,000 for half the community equipment. I had agreed in Springfield to pay him for half the tent, cooking gear, etc., based on his receipts. He expected me to turn over $1,000 in Jefferson City, without a receipt, just trusting him that we had $2,000 worth of shelter, pots, paddles and life jackets. Since there was no sense arguing about it in Cairo, with the money many weeks away, I just said we'd work it out. But the issue wouldn't close as easily as mon capitaine had it figured out. Only a damn fool hands a blind $1,000 to someone he's only known for four months.

service payments each year run $3.2 million and that it costs $3.5-4.0 million for the up-keep of the residential areas each year. This money comes from the students.

Ganguli said the university can allow three to six per cent off-campus without running into a deficit.

The process can be long and drawn out as one student who applied three times before he was granted his request can testify. 2,500 students this semester have filed exemption applications for next semester, said Wierenga. Of these, 700 are commuters who live with thier parents and must file out of requirement, she added.

The remaining students wishing to live off-campus, said Wierenga, ought to have letters from sponsors who would help their case, besides a mandatory personal leader.

Screening of applications is done by a committee comprised of one head of residence, one professional who has nothing to do with housing and three students. It's a random selection made up of volunteers said Wierenga. If they decide to turn down the request, an appeal can be made as soon as possible, she added.

Wierenga said on the subject of exemption, "because the trustees have set up Housing Residency Requirements, it leaves the Housing Office free to help the individual student who legitimately cannot cope with the dorms instead of numbers. "We do not operate on a set quota," Wierenga said, "all exemption applications are processed on an individual basis. Ideally, we would like to interview everybody personally. This would benefit, in particular those students who find it hard to express themselves in writing." However, Wierenga said, because of the staff required to interview individually, it is not feasible at this time. The student who has problems with effectively presenting his or her case in writing is advised to provide documentation form, faculty advisors, head of residence, etc. to substantiate their case, Wierenga added.

The ultimate losers

By RANDY GINZIG

Daniel Schorr's refusal to obey a Congressional subpoena in the face of a possible contempt of court citation and possible jail sentence is an important personal decision that has heavier implications than meets the eye.

Schorr, a C.B.S. correspondent, had leaked a story of a secret Congressional report and the report was printed almost verbatim in the New York Village Voice last February. The House Ethics Committee, in turn, subpoenaed Schorr to produce all his notes and information on the Pike Committee Investigation on U.S. Intelligence Operations, a critical study on the operations and efficiency of the C.I.A. and other Federal Intelligence bodies. Although the Pike Committee had voted that making the report public would not be harmful to national security, Congress disagreed and voted 246 to 124 to keep the report secret.

The House Ethics Committee had spent $150,000 unsuccessfully trying to track down Schorr's source. The fact that the Committee could not detect the source themselves points to the ineptness of the investigation. If the Committee believes that a member or employee of The House of Representatives is responsible for the leak of "secret" information (which incidentally had been published as bits and pieces by various other media), it should focus its investigation there, not on the journalist who was just doing his job by having "news" printed.

There are many questions involved here, most important being the protection of the Free Press, guaranteed by the First Amendment. The function of the Free Press has always been to inform and act as a balancing power between those who possess power and those who are affected by those powers. Thus there has always been an adversary relationship between the press and the politician, since publicity is essential for success in politics, and since it is the function of the journalist to objectively describe those actions and motives. This often leads to rifts between newsmakers and newswriters.

"National Security Secret" is a term that was applied to the Nixon Administration's numerous espionage activities. It was persistent journalism that managed to bring those activities to light. Yet there is an abundance of other classified material that has only brought to the public's attention due to leaks, such as the I.T.T. Scandal, dealings in Chile, and reports on political assassinations, to name a few. This shows that more often than not, material which is deemed secret for national security is actually kept secret in order to save those involved a great deal of embarrassment.

Many people, including some prominant colleagues of Schorr's, question the right to publish material deemed secret by Congress. Yet what is to be the criteria by which such a decision is reached, especially when it is only those in power making the decision? Those in power wish to stay in power.

To bring the plot home, that same House Ethics Committee on Thursday decided to close an investigation into allegations that Gulf Oil Corporation distributed over $5 million in illegal contributions to over two dozen senators. Although this issue could be investigated more fully, it is being played down and avoided by both the press and the government.

The implications behind these allegations are staggering — they claim that almost half our senators are criminals. It's no wonder the Ethics committee decided to close this investigation so suddenly, especially since three of the six senators on the Committee stand accused.

At this point, most Americans have become so cynical about politics that they wouldn't be surprised if these allegations are true, and wouldn't care even if they were. But the fact that there is a free press that is able to bring this information to light is vital. It keeps those in power on their toes and sometimes even manages to cause a public revelation or two, as evidenced by the persistent journalism that helped unravel the Watergate scandal.

Thus the importance of maintaining a Free Press cannot be underestimated, and with that freedom the right to keep source's identities confidential. As Daniel Schorr said in his opening statement to the Congressional Committee: "To betray a confidential source would mean to dry up many future sources for future reporters ... I submit to you that the ultimate losers would be the American people and their free institutions."

Emotional tirade

To the Editor:

The commentary in Friday's Collegian by Paul Fishman concerning Army ROTC is probably the worst piece of "journalism" that I have seen in all my time at UMass.

Without getting into the pros and cons of ROTC I would like to discuss purely the journalistic method of the commentary.

Mr. Fishman begins by talking about the Army, but then blithely switches the subject to the Marine Corps for the rest of the commentary only returning to ROTC to damn it in the last paragraph. He seems to equate Marine enlisted training with Army officer training. Had he shown enough interest to check out the facts before writing his commentary he would have realized that the two training systems are based on totally different needs and concepts.

I object most strongly to his statement that ROTC promotes violence and sanctions killing. I have yet to be shown any proof of the accusation.

I am a junior Classics major here at UMASS and I consider myself very liberal. I too, was sickened by the death of the young Marine Lynn McClure, and the actions that led to it are anathema to me. I take it as a personal insult that Mr. Fishman feels that I, as a member of ROTC, would participate in such an action.

It saddens me that the Collegian would allow such commentary to go unchecked. Criticism is healthy, but an emotional tirade using non-relevant material presented in the manner of this article is unhealthy to all society.

Good music and good time

To the Editor:

On the evening of September 16 Johanna Wild and Orleans performed two shows to a large audience in the Fine Art Center. A special thanks should be expressed to the well-behaved crowd.

After the last show we walked about the auditorium in search of empty beer, and liquor bottles, and crushed cigarette butts on the carpet. To our happiness, the auditorium looked as if any other show had just been produced as a minimal amount of debris was found. The UMass police officers who worked the concert will agree that no major security problems arose concerning the crowd.

This was the first concert of its type [outside of Aztec Two-Step, last semester] to be held in the Fine Art Center. It now stands as a solid precedent in arguing in favor of similar shows to be held in the FAC. We hope that the Fine Art Center staff and other UMass officials are convinced that we students can act in an orderly manner while enjoying such shows in the FAC Auditorium. We encourage other groups as well as Eastern Mountain Concerts to continue to reserve the Fine Art Center Auditorium for the promotion of good music and a good time.

An apology

To the Editor:

To All Members of the UMass Community:

I would like to extend my sincere apologies on behalf of myself and my fellow announcers, Judy Van Handle and Charles Holmes, for the interruption which prevented the entire last quarter of this Saturday's football game from being aired on WMUA. We presently believe that the telephone company was at fault: If they were, rest assured the bill will not be paid.

Abortion issue

To the Editor:

In my opinion the American people, particularly Catholics, have been misled on the abortion issue in the 1976 presidential campaign. Contrary to the belief of most voters, the candidates have in effect taken similar positions on the issue.

Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter has been strongly criticized for his stand on the abortion issue. He claims to be morally opposed to abortion, but opposes a Constitutional amendment making it illegal to obtain one.

At its August convention, the Republican party adopted a platform plank calling for an anti-abortion Constitutional amendment. The party then initiated an effort to use the plank to attract the votes of traditionally Democratic Catholics who feel strongly on the issue.

Although President Ford is ostensibly the anti-abortion candidate, during his tenure in office he has proposed no such amendment. Were he sincere in his firm opposition to abortion, in two years he would certainly have done so.

Furthermore, if Ford "stands on his record," as he has maintained throughout the campaign that he will, we can assume he will not propose the amendment in the future.

The President has in effect chosen the position of Mr. Carter, in that he is opposed to abortion, but won't propose an anti-abortion Constitutional amendment. The Republican platform plank is a deception.

Catholic voters must not be misled into voting for President Ford on the abortion controversy. They should base their decisions on the other issues.

Humor and The Movement

Ga'morning, she mumbles as she rolls out of bed. If this is Tuesday, I must be here, no, I mean... if I'm here, it must be Tuesday. Right?

Good, I have something very important to talk with you about. Something very, very important, now let me see if I can remember what it was.... OK. I want to talk about humor.

You see, on this campus there exist groups of very loud people who have these points they'd like you to hear and act on. And believe me, they really believe that what they are selling is the TRUTH. I encourage this brave behavior to no end. But....

In getting so involved in their various causes, they have lost their sense of humor, if it ever existed. And, ya know, it's extremely hard to believe in and follow someone who cannot laugh, especially at themselves.

Now listen, I don't want to name names, because to most of you that isn't going to mean anything anyway. This means I have to be awfully vague and I apologize for that. It kind of takes away some of my strength of point, however, because I have no safe examples.

Now we get to the funny part: You understand that these people are so serious about their causes and themselves, that my saying they have no sense of humor is grounds for the lifetime-enemy-list and that kind of blanket alienation in no way is going to help their causes.

How good is it, do you suppose, for them to take every detail seriously? It's like a feminist attempting to spit out 'craftspersonship' to make a deliberate point in general conversation and simply getting stuck there. Language becomes a barrier and not a communications source. A definite result of a lack of humor.

For a bunch of humanistically oriented people, this behavior is not very human. It is, in fact, extremely puritan and extremely irritating to those of us who sympathize with the various causes but like to have a good time as well.

Friendship and Unity are mighty big words. And to fully believe in them as an ideal, you have to live your life with the 'people' as the people live it. Changes come about because the internal structure demands it and not by any rigid external force. To alienate potential activists by such total seriousness is bordering on the absurd and is, actually, kind of funny. Except nobody is laughing.

There isn't any humor in sexism, racism, war and powerlessness. But humor in a world that houses such disasters is a unifying force, a sane force — a necessity. Moderation, I think, in all things, is the greater part of valor.

The selling of ROTC

By CHARLES BAGLI

It's kind of like "The Invasion of the Body Snatchers"; suddenly they're everywhere.

For the past few weeks UMass, as many campuses, has been bombarded with beautiful, glossy posters in every dorm; two ads a day in the Collegian; and a multi-media production complete with rocky mountain high music.

What I'm referring to is not the Jimmy Carter Bandwagon, or the 1976 Beatles Convention or even a Reverend Sun Myung Moon Festival of the Spaced. It's ROTC. That is: Reserve Office Training Program. And all the hoopla is part of an advertising program to sell us ROTC, recruit officers, and win support for the ruling class' future rich man's wars.

Recruiters are everywhere — in the high schools and colleges, at the unemployment offices, on the streetcorners and on TV, trying to take advantage of unemployment and other economic attacks on the people by offering us another "choice" McDonald's and jail.

At the same time, the GI Bill and other vets benefits are being cut back or eliminated. And the cost of education is soaring making it harder and harder for people to get an education. Into this situation steps ROTC trying to suck in students with offers of financial aid and jobs after graduation. But it's taking millions of dollars in advertising to get anyone interested because people are just not lining up, in fact ROTC programs in numbers of students remain low and the dropout rate, fairly high.

Some students that do get into ROTC programs will tell you "I'm just in it for the money, hell, I couldn't go to school without it." That may be so but it ain't looking at the whole picture. Uncle Sam will get his pound of flesh. He'll soon have you fighting in Angola, North Korea, the Middle East or wherever, all to protect his class and his position.

The defense budget is bursting at the seams — $100.1 billion, a sum that is, for the average person, hard to comprehend. Although the cuts in education, health, food stamps, and even a recent veto of a national daycare plan for working parents, point to one overwhelming fact. The US ruling class is actively pushing and building for another war.

Behind all the "concern" displayed by the presidential candidates about national defense is the hard fact that the U.S. and the Soviet Union are in a neck and neck battle to see who will control the world's markets and resources. Since the defeat in Vietnam, the U.S. capitalists have been losing their grip on the world, while the rulers of the Soviet Union, capitalists themselves, are putting the moves on one country after another. Extending the hand of "friendship and socialism" the USSR, no longer a socialist country, is holding the club of exploitation and economic domination behind their backs, ready to bring it down on any country that gets out of line.

The question of national defense and whether the U.S. is No. 1 or No. 2 in the world militarily has taken up a good deal of time in the media lately, especially with all the electioneering going on. Time after time we're reminded that the Soviet Union is armed to the teeth and growing more "superior" every day. But number one or two, it's clear that both superpowers are dedicated to ripping off whatever they can from other countries around the world. And in the U.S. there's a good reason why the rulers want to whip up enthusiasm for war, get young people into the New Action Army and such students into ROTC.

War has always been a prime mover of the US economy. Factories crank up production, politicians promise more jobs and better days ahead, workers bust their backs and send their children off to war, and the profits soar — right into the pockets of the rich. They get the big bucks and the people get the shaft. All because they have to expand their markets, their resources, their potential workers in other countries; it's that or collapse.

It is because ROTC and other recruiting programs fit integrally into this that we oppose them either on the campuses, high schools or unemployment offices. During the Vietnam war ROTC provided 45 per cent of all Army officers on active duty; 65 per cent first lieutenants and 85 per cent of the second lieutenants.

Opposition to ROTC now, as in the 1960's, can have an effect and serve as a warning to our rulers that we'll be damned if we sit by and see our brothers and sisters be used up in another war for profit. If the rich of the U.S. and the USSR want another war, let them carve each other up. The people of both countries will be better off without them. ROTC OFF CAMPUS.

McCarthy the spoiler

By PAUL BRADLEY

The progress of the Presidential campaign towards that inevitable first Tuesday in November gives one pause to think: what the hell is Eugene McCarthy up to?

It is unclear whether he is out to elect Jerry Ford, or just trying to once again jump into the limelight amongst his still ardent supporters. But one thing is clear: despite his qualifications, which are probably as good or better than either Ford or Jimmy Carter, Eugene McCarthy will not be elected President. The best he can hope for is to be a monkey wrench in the whole process.

For better or worse, the average voter in this country will vote for one of two major candidates for President. There will, of course, be more than two candidates listed on the ballot, but voters will continue to hear about the two major ones, because they are being financed with tax money to the tune of more than $21 million.

McCarthy, Lester Maddox, who is the American Independent candidate, and a whole slew of others will not get a dime from the Federal Government, who in their wisdom decided there are only two real political parties in the country. In a campaign that is almost totally dependent on slick advertising, problems for underfinanced candidates are almost insurmountable.

Unlike Maddox, McCarthy is not affiliated with any party, simply listed as an independent candidate. He will be on the ballot in about 40 states, having to go through a complicated petition procedure even to have his name listed.

But McCarthy has, if nothing else — and there is little else — been determined. He sued in state court right here in Massachusetts to have his name on the ballot after Secretary of State Paul Guzzi had ruled that he did not gather enough certified signatures.

Many young people will not forget McCarthy. He was the one, after, who for all intents and purposes forced Lyndon Johnson out of the race in 1968. His support was dramatically undercut by Robert Kennedy, and Hubert Humphrey finally got the nomination, more or less by default. His nomination was a disaster for the Democratic Party and the country, allowing Mr. Nixon to get elected.

Following 1968, McCarthy, who felt he had been shortchanged, went into a prolonged pouting period. He left the Democratic party and gave up his Minnesota senate seat.

But it was McCarthy's candidacy, more than anything else, that got the anti-Vietnam wheels in motion. He should be remembered for that — although it often is overlooked.

His candidacy, however, will do nothing more than confirm his status as the nation's numero uno crybaby. It is disappointing, to be sure, that the American people are left with such a non-choice as Ford and Carter. Not to sound fatalistic, but that is exactly the choice we are left with, no matter how many candidates are listed on the ballot.

Oddly enough, the advertising that McCarthy has done has been pointedly aimed at Jimmy Carter, with barely a mention of Ford. One would think that a former Democrat would like to see a Democrat elected, but McCarthy disavows all of that.

Political theorists said at the outset that McCarthy would damage Carter, especially among left leaning Democrats. Like on cue, and true to those words, McCarthy has come out against Carter, even more than Robert Dole in some respects, and Gerry Ford must be pleased with his former colleague in the House. If McCarthy can swing anything near eight per cent of the votes, Gerry Ford will without a doubt be president for four more years.

African racial unrest concern of assembly

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. [UPI] – Concern about southern Africa's racial unrest dominated the behind-the-scenes preparations of diplomats from 144 countries who gathered Monday on the eve of the 31st annual session of the General Assembly.

Although more than 60 foreign ministers planned to participate in the Assembly's general debate on U.N. policy starting next Monday, little of substance, barring outbreak of international violence, was expected to develop until after the U.S. presidential election Nov. 2.

Diplomats said they were waiting to learn the results of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's campaign for negotiations on Rhodesia's racial dispute before commenting on chances for its success.

Foreign Minister Gaston Thorn of Luxembourg, president of last year's Assembly, was scheduled to open the session Tuesday afternoon with a minute for silent prayer or meditation, as decreed by U.N. custom.

Ambassador Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe of Sri Lanka formerly Ceylon, a Third World leader who also is president of the sputtering U.N. Law of the Sea Conference, was slated to become the 1976 president without opposition.

High on the 125-item agenda were the election of a secretary general and the question of international terrorism. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim has not announced his plans, but there is no public opposition to him, and he was expected to be elected in December to a second five year term.

Alaska granted right to give cancer drug

JUNEAU, Alaska [AP] – A new state law gave doctors in Alaska the legal authority Monday to prescribe the alleged cancer drug laetrile, but provisions in other statutes bar them from providing the controversial medication.

Because of the legal conflicts, many leaders in the medical profession said they are unconcerned about chances the precedent-setting law will turn Alaska into a "Tijuana of the North" for laetrile treatments.

Passage of the law by the 1976 legislature was hailed by such laetrile supporters as the Cancer Information Crusade as a major victory in the fight to legalize the drug in America.

But the state attorney general's office said in a legal memorandum issued on the eve of the effective date of the new statute that it is against both state and federal law for doctors or anyone else in Alaska to sell or distribute laetrile.

"Although possession by a physician or user in itself is not prohibited, the sale or distribution of laetrile in Alaska by any person, including a physician, is illegal," said the memorandum written by Asst. Atty. Gen. Joseph K. Donohue. "The doctors can prescribe it but they can't provide it."

Contrary to the position of most of the medical establishment against use of laetrile, thousands of American cancer patients have traveled to Europe and such Mexican cities as Tijuana for treatment with the drug, an extract of apricot pits rich in cyanide.

"Despite the appearance of "wild hope in some and utter disgust in others," following passage of the law, Donohue said the act "merely affects the physician's use of laetrile in two very limited ways."

The statute prohibits hospitals from interfering in a physican-patient relationship by forbidding the use of laetrile when prescribed or administered by a doctor and requested by a patient unless the drug is found to be harmful by the state Medical Board.

It also bars the Medical Board from taking disciplinary action against a physician for prescribing or administering laetrile to a patient who has asked for it, again unless it is found harmful.

But the legal memo said the new law does not "immunize doctors from the strict constructions" of other state and federal laws.

Laetrile, the memo said, has not been approved by the Federal Drug Administration and thus cannot be legally transported into Alaska.

In addition, the memo said dispensing laetrile by either doctors or pharmacies in Alaska would be in violation of the state's own Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act which bars the sale, delivery or giving away of new drugs which have not been approved by the FDA.

Yale Russian professor resigns under pressure

NEW HAVEN [AP] — A Yale University Russian professor has resigned under pressure from his colleagues because of his work for the Nazis during World War II in the German-occupied Soviet Union.

Vladimir Sokolov-Samarin, a lecturer in Russian literature, resigned this summer after other members of the department learned of Samarin's writings from a Soviet magazine, the Yale Daily News reported Monday.

In an interview in Russian with a News reporter, Samarin admitted writing anti-Semitic editorials in 1943 for "Rech," a pro-Nazi newspaper published in the occupied Soviet town of Oriol.

But Samarin, who has taught at Yale for 17 years, said anti-Bolshevism, not anti-Semitism, was his overriding sentiment.

"I would say to the censor, 'we have to write against Bolshevism,' and the censor would say, 'yes, against Bolshevism and Jews.' I was under the control of the censor," Samarin said.

He added he did not know at the time that Jews were being exterminated by the Germans. "If I had known they were being killed I never would have written those things," he said.

His work was disclosed in April by a Soviet journal, "Sovietish Heimland." Samarin said the article about him was part of a Soviet effort, led by the KGB Secret police, to discredit him because he is a leading anti-Communist and critic of the Soviet government.

He also said the author of the article, Arkadii Sachnin, is a colonel in the KGB.

Robert Jackson, chairman of Slavic languages and literature at Yale, described Samarin's writing as "Goebbels-like." Copies of the journal were given to Jackson in May but no official action was taken against Samarin.

However, four of the six professors in the department wrote to Samarin: "The writing reveals to us beyond any reasonable doubt that you were engaged not only in anti-Communist but also pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic activities under the German occupation."

In one editorial, Samarin wrote that every time he heard a Jewish name he imagined "a large yellow rat with a protruding mug," Sachnin said. At other times he advocated violence against "kikes" and praised the German leadership.

One of the four, Prof. Edward Stankiewicz, said the letter was written to pressure Samarin into resigning.

"We don't feel the department should be attacked for harboring an ex-fascist and an anti-Semite," he said.

Samarin, who has been in poor health, said he resigned when he began feeling the intended pressure from the other members of the department.

"When such pressure occurs, there is nothing to do but resign. It would have been unpleasant for me, unpleasant for the university. I love the university but ... "

Samarin will continue to draw his pay from Yale through July 1977 and also will get a pension from a national teachers' organization, the News said. Samarin, who intended to resign anyway within two years, said he also plans to write his memoirs.

The 63-year-old professor said that in recent years he has become an avid pro-Zionist because he believes it is the best way to fight communism.

Samarin in recent years contributed frequently to a New York-based Russian language newspaper which supports Zionist causes. That paper, "Novoe Russkoe Slovo," has refused to publish his work since the disclosure, the News said.

Samarin said he aided the Germans because they were anti-Communist.

"The enemy of my enemy is my friend. I know no nationalities, only Communist and anti-Communist."

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Tuesday, September 21 — Born today, you are basically one who loves family, hearth and home. You enjoy working for the benefit of the first and the improvement of the others; in fact, work that leads to gain of a material nature only interests you not at all. Order, grace, charm: these bring you great joy, and when found within your domestic circle, add to your pride in your own personal surroundings. You generally enjoy a position of authority in those surroundings -- but you can not be considered "bossy" in your own home; rather, you lead with a soft voice and a velvet touch.

You enjoy working for the good of the community as a whole -- so long as you can yourself hold a position of leadership. You have no wish to work without profit or recognition, though either can come in the form of praise or other pleasurable intangibles. Unfortunately, much that you do of a volunteer nature goes unsung and unrewarded. Willing to make an undiminished effort to attain whatever goals you set for yourself, you are nevertheless careful to get your proper rest and to set aside for yourself periods of recreation that make for more productive periods of work in their wake.

Intellectually inclined, you prefer those activities that require the mind to be engaged to those that would exercise the physical self alone.

Wednesday, September 22

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take care not to let yourself be sidetracked from your chief interests. Gains are made late in the day if you are persistent.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Activities that stretch the mind as well as the body will afford you enormous self-satisfaction. Follow your whim in the afternoon.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Adverse conditions may make it necessary for you to change your plans early in the day. Do so with imagination and all should come clear.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Improve productivity through the improvement of relationships between and among co-workers. Listen patiently to complaints.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A technical question requires a technical answer. If you have no information to give out yourself, find someone who does.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — There is little to gain through pretending that you are prepared for a new phase of your present work if you really are not. You may be courting disaster.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — This is an excellent time for developing latent talents. Work toward new goals recently recognized as part of your ultimate aim.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If you feel uninspired by another's presence, seek out new company. You can be urged to total victory by the right companion.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Self-fulfillment happens gradually but definitely throughout the day. Make it a point to share happiness with loved ones today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — If you are happy with the results you obtain from present efforts, you should continue along the same lines. Otherwise, you may wish to change your method of operation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — An increase in popularity makes it possible for you to persuade others to your views. Take advantage of your own position in the community.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A surprise communication from an insititution of higher learning may make a considerable difference in your outlook.

Introspective glances today could uncover hidden secrets

By KIT WALKER

Today and tomorow are very busy days for the planets. The whole focus seems to be on sifting out the final grains of wheat in the sign of Virgo, to prepare for the weighing and measuring of Libra.

The moon is finishing up in Leo this morning — she enters the Sun's 12th house at 11:10, a time when the review of the past month begins. At 1:15 she enters Virgo and at 3:16 she forms a square to the now retrograde Jupiter in Gemini. Soon after that, Mercury, also retrograde, will form a creative quintile with the dreamy Neptune in Sagittarius.

What all this seems to indicate is that if we turn our minds in, and reflect upon the past month, we will be able to clear up some of our confusion and prepare for the new birth of relationship, at the new moon on Thursday. We may have already had some very strong hunches about our relationships, but the retrograde Mercury is going back to Virgo to make us take another good look at ourselves. The retrograde Jupiter will reenter Taurus next month, and we will once again have to deal with our sense of give and take, and learn more about sharing our gifts. They won't do us or anyone any good if we hoard them all to ourselves.

But now Jupiter is still in Gemini, and since he's turned around, we may feel a certain schizoid indecisiveness about what to shoot for. It's time to turn our arrows inward because, once we discover the Life within, we'll have something to share as Jupiter returns to Taurus.

Tonight is a very creative time for those of us who are tuned-in to our inner ear. If we sit real still tonight we should get some insight into the creative powers of our minds. It could be a night for non-verbal communication or ESP and we may hear some strong messages from nowhere about new things to come.

Between 9:30 and 10:00 p.m. four planetary aspects happen, all involving Uranus, who symbolized our intuitive powers. He is currently in the sign of Scorpio, which symbolizes hidden meaning. The retrograde Mercury will conjunct the Sun at 9:36 p.m., and they will both be a "decile" from Uranus. A "decile" is one tenth the circle, and with the power of ten comes the perfection of the return to one at a higher level. At 9:55 the moon will form a sextile with Uranus, which should set the whole configuration in motion. It could be a good time to uncover some secrets about ourselves. We may find that by telling someone our precious secrets we'll get a better perspective of what to do. Uranus is the truth, and Scorpio is the secret. Why do we try to keep the obvious a secret? If we take a good look into our deepest feelings it may seem absurd to have to hide them.

But we may be very undecided about how we feel now. Jupiter retrograde in Gemini may have opened up a whole new train of schizoid confusing thought, and we may find the only thing left is to enjoy being who we are. Maybe we should give up trying to get anywhere or anything. Because once we give that up, we'll find that we're right here, and there's plenty to be done. Then our lives will take care of themselves and things will take on their proper perspective. But as long as we blow things out of proportion, we'll end up with popped balloons.

A's, Royals looking for sweep

KANSAS CITY [UPI] — The Oakland A's need a sweep of their upcoming three-game series at Kansas City to keep themselves in contention for the American League West Championship. The Kansas City Royals need a sweep for the sake of their pride.

"It would mean a lot for the organization and the future of this ball club if we just sweep them," said Royals' designated hitter Hal McRae, whose team has a six-game lead on Oakland with 12 games left in the season. "We'd like to sweep them so we can win the pennant for ourselves instead of having someone else do it for us."

If the Royals sweep Oakland in the upcoming series, Kansas City's magic number for the AL West title will be one. After the Royals go to Texas for a three-game series this weekend they will be in Oakland for three more games before closing the regular season at home Oct. 1-3 against Minnesota.

"Psychologically it is important for us to beat Oakland and win this thing for ourselves," said McRae, whose team has won seven of 12 games against the A's this year. "We don't want to sit around and let someone else do our work."

The Royals, looking for their first division title, come into the series in good shape. After winning only one of 10 games, they have responded with eight wins in their last 12 games and four victories in a row.

Meanwhile, Oakland, five-time AL West champion, has split its last six games.

"My main concern was that we would not be flat when Oakland came in here and we have avoided that," McRae said. "We have to have an edge because we have played our worst ball in the past month or so and they have played their best and we're still six games up, the pressure is definitely on them."

Oakland, which moved to the West Coast from Kansas City in 1968, comes into the game knowing even a sweep would leave it three games out of first place and with only slight hopes of overtaking the Royals, a 1969 expansion team.

"Of course we have to sweep them," said Oakland third baseman Joe Rudi, "but we can't go in there thinking that way. We have to concentrate everything on the first game and if we win that one, then go on to the next. This is a funny game and anything can happen."

But the A's — other than always optimistic manager Chuck Tanner — are realistic enough to know they are in trouble.

"We haven't played all that well against them," said outfielder Sal Bando. "Of course, we could, but it's going to be pretty tough to do."

Tanner figures the second game of a Sunday doubleheader against Texas, which the A's won 13-3, may have brought his team out of its recent doldrums.

"That kind of hitting (14 hits) is exactly what the doctor ordered," Tanner said.

Bell, Dorsett earn runningback kudos

NEW YORK [UPI] — Ricky Bell of Southern California and Tony Dorsett of Pittsburgh, two of the leading candidates for this year's Heisman trophy, turned in superb performances for the second straight week Saturday to earn spots on United Press International's backfield of the week.

Bell carried 32 times for 193 yards and scored four touchdowns, three of them in the first half, to carry USC to a 53-0 rout of Oregon. Dorsett, who also earned backfield honors last week for his performance against Notre Dame, carried for 113 yards and three TDS in Pitt's 42-14 romp past Georgia Tech.

Bell ran 67 yards for a TD on the third play of the game and added scoring runs of eight, two and 12 yards. Dorsett scored on bursts of six, five and 10 yards.

Joining Dorsett and Bell in the backfield of the week are Rice, quarterback Tommy Kramer and Texas fullback Earl Campbell.

Kramer hit 28 of 43 passes for 319 yards and four TDs and scored a fifth on a one-yard run in Rice's 43-22 triumph over Utah. Campbell, playing with a sore leg, carried 32 times for a career-high 208 yards, including an 83-yard to dash, that helped lift Texas to a 17-14 victory over North Texas State.

Honorable mention at quarterback went to Buddy Hardeman, who threw four TD passes to spark Iowa State to a 41-6 rout of Air Force; Matt Robinson, whose three TD passes carried Georgia to a 41-0 victory over Clemson; and Douglas Williams, who had four TD passes for gambling in a 31-30 loss to Temple.

Six players earned honorable mention at running back.

Michigan's Harlan Huckleby had 160 yards in 15 carries as the Wolverines crushed Stanford 51-0 and Ohio State's Jeff Logan gained 160 yards in 25 carries to help Ohio State edge Penn State 12-7. George Woodard bulled for 177 yards and two TDs in Texas A&M's 34-14 victory over Kansas State and James Coleman had 152 yards and two TDs as Illinois upset Missouri 31-6.

Reserve Tony Nathan carried 10 times for 101 yards in Alabama's 56-3 rout of Southern Methodist and Andre Herrera carried 35 times for 201 yards in Southern Illinois' 27-15 win over Drake.

Ali back after one-day rest

KIAMESHA LAKE, N.Y. [UPI] — Under the watchful eye of Angelo Dundee, Muhammad Ali returned to the gym Monday after a one-day rest and opened the final week of his pre-fight preparations for Ken Norton with a 15-round workout.

The title bout is set for Sept. 28 at Yankee Stadium and the champion knows that better than anyone in camp.

"He's starting to feel his oats," Dundee said.

"Muhammad will be all concentration from here on in," Dundee continued. "He's got but one thing in mind now, to destroy Norton. That's the battle cry from now to next Tuesday when the opening bell sounds. Destroy Norton."

The champion skipped his usual ringside public press conference with the capacity crowd of more than 500. After his final round in the speed bag, he donned his robe and headed straight for his room.

Scuba program adds new look as preparation begins for fall

The University of Massachusetts Scuba Program, a part of the General Physical Education Program, has a new look this fall. Bob Sparks, coordinator for the program, has added a sport diving course, an assistant instructor's workshop, a diver rescue clinic and an intersession January term trip to Florida in addition to the standard basic certification course curriculum. The new offerings will be instructed by UMass Scuba instructors Tony Butkus, Bruce Antognoni and Bob Foote. All courses are sanctioned by the National Association of Underwater Instructors and lead to NAUI certification.

The Sport Diving Course and the Assistant Instructor's Workshop are both by arrangement and both lead to two university credits. An organizational meeting for the sport course will be held in Rm 7 Curry Hicks, Tuesday Sept. 21 at 5:30 p.m. A similar meeting for the instructor's workshop will be held in the same room at 5:00 p.m. the same day. Interested students should attend or get in touch with Bob Sparks, Rm 7 Curry Hicks, tel. 545-0178. Announcements for the Diver Rescue Clinic and the Key Largo, Florida Sport Diving Course will be forthcoming. The Florida trip, like the fall sport course, will give two university credits.

UMass Scuba Program is an excellent opportunity to learn to dive and to develop diving proficiency for other fields such as underwater archaeology, marine biology, etc. The four basic certification courses being offered by the program introduce the student to diving physics and physiology, marine environment, underwater navigation, underwater skills and safe usage of Scuba, diver rescue training and dive planning. Class time comprises 44 hours which includes one weekend at Gloucester, Mass. for three ocean dives. Successful completion of the course gives the student certification (as well as two university credits) which permits usage of commercial dive shops and dive facilities. The courses are demanding but realistic. They are highly recommended for marine science majors.

The sport course is a natural continuation of the basic course and serves to further the student along in knowledge and dive experience. It is also a good review for the seasoned diver who is out of touch with developments in the diving community. The sport diving curriculum emphasizes open water dives (night and day; lake and ocean), diver rescue, underwater navigation, diving physiology and dive planning, and it offers training in marine environment, specimen gathering, underwater photography and a variety of other topics which may be selected by the specific class. Requirements are that the students be a certified diver and have complete scuba equipment.

The Assistant Instructor's Workshop is a NAUI IQC (Instructor's Qualification Course) and leads to certification as a NAUI Assistant Instructor, a necessary prelude to becoming a full instructor in the NAUI organization. Requirements are that the student be a certified diver with one year's experience and over 24 hours of open water daive time. Two UMass credits may be obtained for the internship phase of the workshop which consists of assisting in one of the basic certification courses.

The diver rescue clinic is a weekend course, open to both student and certified divers. It comprises intensive training in diver first aid and in techniques of diver rescue, and it leads to certification in cardio pulmonary resuscitation through the American Heart Association.

The most salient feature of the new fall schedule is the intersession sport diving course in Key Largo, Florida. It comprises seven days of instruction and diving in the warm, blue waters of the Carribean. Enrollment is limited and the cost is a low $145, so this is something to keep in mind for January. It is a fine way to visit the Florida Keys, dive and earn credit during intersession.

Pats eye sellouts after Dolphin upset

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Visions of five sellouts have been dancing in the mind of owner Bill Sullivan since his New England Patriots stunned the Miami Dolphins Sunday at Schaefer Stadium.

"What the win means to us is inconceivable," Sullivan said after the Patriots had clubbed the Dolphins 30-14. "We were close to a sellout for the Oakland game (Oct. 3) before we beat the Dolphins. Now we're assured of it and if we can do well against the Steelers next week (at Pittsburth) then we could have sellouts the rest of the way."

Sullivan was thinking about attendance because the Patriots have struggled at the gate so far this season. After averaging 59,455 fans to their 61,279-seat stadium over the first five years of operation, the Patriots have averaged 44,784 to their first two home games of 1976.

The Patriots management had a premonition of an attendance slump when season ticket orders came in slowly and cancellations by long time ticketholders increased markedly last winter.

Some irate fans included notes saying that at $10 per ticket, the Patriots were not worth the investment. Many cited the Patriots' 3-11 mark in 1975 and a trade that sent star quarterback Jim Plunkett to San Francisco as reasons for not renewing their tickets.

But it took just one half of good football — the Patriots led Miami 13-7 after two periods — for the ticket sales to pick up.

"We opened our advance sales window at halftime and there was quite an increase in sales," said ticket seller John Thompson. "And we had our advance men busy for three-quarters of an hour after the game. We also have had a lot of window traffic and telephone calls for tickets Monday morning."

Winning may not be everything, but it is the best ticket salesman.

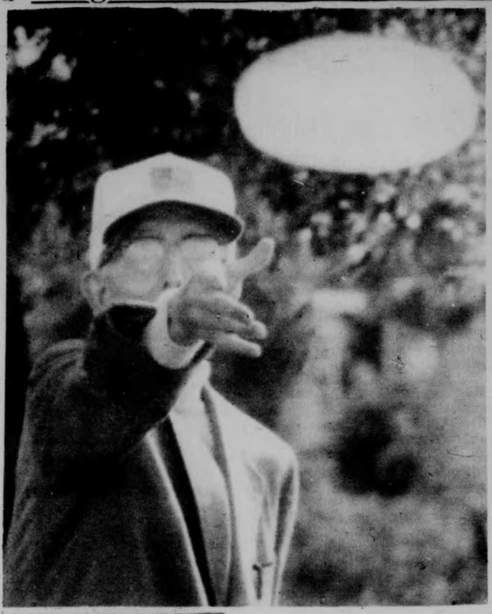
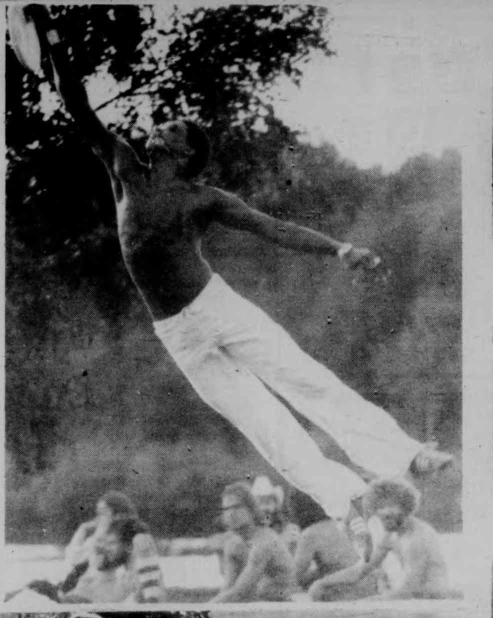
Seahawks claim foul

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Coach George Allen Monday dismissed as "sour grapes" claims by the Seattle Seahawks that the Washington Redskins were taking "cheap shots" at Rookie Quarterback Jim Zorn during their 31-7 victory over the expansion team.

"If they had won the game," Allen said, "there wouldn't have been any comment. I think it's a little bit of sour grapes."

Seattle coach Jack Patera, a former assistant to Allen at Los Angeles, and Zorn both contended that Washington defenders had been guilty of "cheap shot" hits in Sunday's game.





Sunday afternoon... Cambridge, Mass... The Charles River... Kids... Parents... Grandparents... Students.. SUNSHINE... dogs... beer... music... and... ah... FRISBEES!!!

All of these combined to form one of the most different and enjoyable days of the semester for the crowd of approximately 1500 that travelled to the Charles for the Great Cambridge Frisbee Throw.

The main event of the afternoon featured the attempts of two frisbee masters, John Kirkland and Dave Johnson to 'toss' a frisbee across the Charles River a distance of about 412 feet. As the crowd of several hundred waited on the banks, the first throw fell short by less than a foot. However, that was as close as either of the two would come, as Kirkland Johnson combined for 20 throws, only two of which came "Close to the Edge."

The remainder of the afternoon entailed distance throwing competition divided into three groups; children under 12, women, and men. A special competition for dogs was also held.

There were no real losers on this day however, as most headed home in the bumper traffic with smiles on their faces and frisbees in their hands...and hearts.

Mets' third base coach Eddie Yost greets center fielder Lee Mazzilli after the rookie blasted a two-run home run in the ninth inning yesterday to beat the Pirates 5-4, dropping them 4½ games behind Philadelphia. (UPI)

Met rookie cracks 9th inning homer to top Bucs, 5-4

NEW YORK [UPI] — Rookie Lee Mazzilli crashed a two-run, two-out homer in the bottom of the ninth inning Monday to lead the New York Mets to a 5-4 victory over Pittsburgh and deal the Pirates' pennant hopes a severe setback.

Mazzilli's homer, his second since being recalled from Memphis in the Texas League, followed John Milner's two-out pinch-hit single off reliever Kent Tekulve, who suffered his second loss in seven decisions, and dropped the Pirates 4½ games behind the idle Philadelphia Phillies with 13 games left to play.

Pittsburgh had battled back from a three-run deficit to take the lead in the eighth inning on Willie Stargell's 19th homer of the season.

The Mets had taken a 3-0 lead in the third inning of five singles, with Felix Millan, Joe Torre and Dave Kingman each driving in runs.

The Pirates, however, refused to quit and battled back, scoring a run in the fifth inning on a triple by Frank Taveras and Rennie Stennett's double. They tied the score in the seventh when Richie Hebner singled and pinch-hitter Bob Robertson doubled his home. Taveras' singled home pinch-runner Miguel Dilone.

Bob Apodaca pitched 1 2-3 innings of scoreless relief to raise his record to 3-7.

Ski association notes events

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. — The Eastern Ski Association (ESA), largest of the nine divisions for the United States Ski Association (USSA), has announced the major elements of its schedule of sanctioned events for the 1976-77 season.

Serving nearly 40,000 members throughout the East, ESA is the sole sanctioning body of amateur ski competition from Canada to West Virginia and from Ohio to the Atlantic. ESA provides nordic, alpine, and freestyle programs for skiers of all ages and abilities. Young skiers who succeed in ESA competition go on to compete in national events and may become members of the U.S. Ski Team, representing this country in international competition and the Winter Olympics.

In addition to providing these competition programs, setting rules, training judges, and keeping track of the thousands of ski competitors, ESA offers its members a broad-based recreational skiing opportunity. ESA runs cross country and alpine citizen racing series, wherein thousands of weekend skiers enjoy the thrills of competition without suffering the rigors of a full-time training schedule.

ESA sponsors educational programs for young skiers and adult skiers just setting out to enjoy the healthy winter sport. ESA also runs an amateur instructors programs, which trains amateur skiers in teaching techniques and ski theory, then qualifies them as instructors for others.

The relatively high costs of getting started in skiing are of concern to many potential participants, and ESA offers substantial savings through its far-ranging discount programs.

ESA members realize cash benefits through use of ESA discount lift ticket sales, discounts on lodging at ski areas, charter flights to areas in Europe and the West, savings on ski theft accident, and liability insurance, and discounts on many other ski-related items.

PONTIAC, Mich. [UPI] — Rick Forzano said Monday he had no intention of quitting as coach of the Detroit Lions, though he agreed his near-miss firing made his position tenuous at best.

UMass co-captain Tim Diskin pitches one up close while on his way to firing a two over par 74, in yesterday's Yankee Conference action. The performance wasn't quite enough however, as the Minutemen found themselves losing to UConn by 7 strokes. (Staff photo by Stuart Eyman)

Duffers place second among YanCon field

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The mens golf team had its three-year reign as Yankee Conference champions snapped yesterday, as it ran into a determined UConn squad and had to settle for second place in the tournament at Stowe Acres CC.

The linksters finished seven strokes behind UConn, hooting a team score of 461. Tied with UMass in second place, was the tough URI squad that the Minutemen barelv squeaked by last Thursday. Fourth place went to UNH with a 464 total. Maine took fifth at 476, while Vermont finished on the bottom with a 478 way off the pace.

For UMass, the story again this week was Jimmy McDermott. The talented sophmore collected his second straight 71. Yesterday's performance was a strong one-under-par effort that earned him Low Medalist honors.

Senior co-captains Bob Sanderson and Tim Diskin both shot fine 74's. Sophmore Rick Duggan, playing in only his second match, fired a 78.

Freshmen prospects Flint Lincoln and Ron Laverdiere had 82's. Lincoln, playing in his first match for UMass, might have been bothered by a hand injury. Laverdiere, three putted seven times enroute to his 82. He shot an excellent 76 last Thursday in his first performance for UMass.

Mark Duggan, also a freshman, shot a dissappointing 88 that did not figure in the best 6 of 7 scores format.

Coach Gaudette was far from disappointed in his team's showing. "Last Thursday we shot a 463 total, which turned out to be the winning score. Today we shoot 461, two strokes lower, but we end up losing."

"We played very well today," added Gaudette, "but UConn played just that much better. UConn was very consistent, they didn't have any scores in the 80's, we had two, that made all the difference."

Gaudette added that Stowe Acres played very very short, and that if the tees had been placed further back UMass may have won. "UConn was able to take advantage of the fact that the tees were up. If they were back where they usually are, UConn would probably not have been able to do as well as they did."

Regardless of what might have been, what happened is what counts, and what counts is that the Minutemen are no longer Yankee Conference champs.

"What we have to do is put this match behind us," said Gaudette. "We have a big match at Yale this weekend, the Toski Invitational and the New England and E.C.A.C. championships coming up later in the year.

"We have a young team this year, and when you have a young team you're bound to lose a few."

Women linksters split with Holyoke

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's golf team split matches with Mt. Holyoke Friday and Monday in "spur-of-the-moment" contests at Mt. Holyoke and Hickory Ridge Country Clubs.

Both matches were nine-holers with Mt. Holyoke out-stroking UMass 167-176 Friday. Ann Locke and Jan Van-Munching led the field with scores of 38 and 42 for Holyoke, while UMass' Deb McCulloch tied with 42.

Tables were turned Monday, with UMass the winner 189-195. McCulloch out-shot the field with a 39, followed by Holyoke's Locke and Abby Jensen with 44 and 46 respectively.

According to Coach Jane McGahan, the matches were quickly arranged for a "pre-season" warm-up for the women: "Everyone's just getting into the swing of things with school starting up and all, so we've been bringing whoever's available for the matches. Friday we were represented by five golfers, and Monday's competition by four."

The UMass golfers will travel to the Mt. Holyoke course once again Friday and Saturday for the Mt. Holyoke Invitational. Penn State will also play in the tournament, along with Boston College.

Completing the golf weekend will be a UMass Invitational. Mt. Holyoke and Cortland State of New York will be the main competition, with a possibility of other schools attending.

"It's all a matter of building up the women's program," explains McGahan. "Women's collegiate golf isn't that big right now so it's hard for us to get a big tournament off the ground."

Autumn baseball warms up as Minutemen battle AIC

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Although the major league baseball season is quickly winding down to playoff and World Series time, the UMass fall baseball campaign is just beginning.

The Minutemen, coming off a second place finish in the ECAC Division I New England Regional playoffs and an overall 24-13 record last spring, begin their unofficial intercollegiate autumn season tomorrow with a 3:00 game against American International College at Lorden Field.

The baseball team uses the fall months to prepare for the upcoming spring in many ways, according to coach Dick Bergquist.

"During the first few weeks of the fall semester, we conduct tryouts for the team and hold intrasquad games," he said. "Then we start to play other schools."

A total of 97 players tried out for the squad this year, Bergquist said, and 55 now remain on the roster.

"Eventually, we'll cut the number down to 35 players that we think can play varsity ball," he added.

"The purposes of fall baseball are to find and identify the ballplayers on campus, to try to fit a team together tor next spring, and to give the players some more experience playing ball," Bergquist explained.

The UMass coach has a host of spots to fill on the varsity, as he lost eight players to graduation. Included were John Seed, Mike Koperniak, and Jerry Mondalto, who constituted three-quarters of his starting infield; his catching corps of Jim Black and Bob Moore, who also doubled as designated hitters; leftfielder and leading hitter Mark Fontaine; flyhawk Steve Wright; and finally, pitcher Craig Allegrezza, now in the Baltimore Orioles farm system.

In addition to these men, Bergquist also lost underclassmen Dave Bertulli and Rich Kelly.

Returning to the varsity are co-captains Jim Cullen and Paul Abramowicz, regular Bavel Cummings, plus reserves Ed Skribiski, Dale Stone, and Art Weinslaw. The pitching staff remains virtuall, intact, with Tom Nigro, Dave Tewhill and Jeff Reardon all coming back.

Some of the empty places will undoubtedly be filled by last year's JVs, who went 18-1 on the season. Many of them are practicing with the team this fall, according to Bergquist.

The team has an 11-game schedule ahead of it. All but two contests will be played on Lorden Field. And, in keeping with the intent of fall baseball, don't expect to see the same men on the field game after game.

"I may put one team out for one game, and then put an entirely different lineup on the field for the next," Bergquist said.

The games are played informally, and sometimes even umpires are not used. Unless an umpire volunteers to call a game, the participating teams will use a player to man the crew.

The season runs until October 15, when a doubleheader with Dartmouth will close things out until next spring. But this fall, UMass baseball fans have a chance to see a sneak preview of how next year's team is shaping up.

Head coach Dick Bergquist didn't have to walk with his head down very often last year and hopes for the same uplifting for '76-77.

Cronin, Martus involvement hinted

ISC formation leaves questions

By JAMES ODATO
Collegian Staff

While many questions remain unanswered about the newly-formed Independent Student Coalition (ISC), sources said yesterday that Student Government Association (SGA) co-Presidents Jay A. Martus and Paul M. Cronin have been involved in the formation of the new political organization, despite their statements to the contrary.

The formation of the ISC was announced Monday night by Steven H. Goldberg, a student senator, during a broadcast over campus radio station WMUA. The ISC is planning to run about 50 candidates in next week's Undergraduate Student Senate elections.

When questioned Monday night, Goldberg declined to name any members or founders of the coalition until today.

An unnamed source said Martus and Cronin both had prior knowledge of the organizing of the ISC and were active in early discussions of it.

When contacted by the Collegian, Martus and Cronin denied any involvement in the organization and say they were not sure they would back it.

Sources have told the Collegian, however, that Martus and Cronin would come out in support of the coalition during their press conference today at 3 p.m. at WMUA.

Cronin initially told the Collegian in a telephone interview he had no prior knowledge of the coalition.

"Monday night was the first I heard of it," he said, referring to the WMUA broadcast.

He later told the Collegian that he and Goldberg had discussed the ISC formation and concepts early this semester.

Student Senator Bryan C. Harvey, director of communications for SGA, confirmed that Martus and Cronin participated in discussions of ISC concepts early this semester.

Cronin said he told Goldberg that "some of his ideas were good but that I was wary of some of the concepts." He said he assumed student senators were backing the coalition.

Martus said he learned of the ISC the day before the announcement when Goldberg spoke of the concepts of the coalition with him.

"I agree with its (the coalition's) ideas," Martus said. He said the concepts of Goldberg's announcement — more student input into student government, more communication between senators and constituents, and adding services to students — were all present philosophies of the student government.

Both Goldberg and Harvey said they could not reveal names of senators backing the coalition.

"I can't start listing names," Harvey said, "because I would not want to leave anyone involved, out."

Harvey admitted being a coalition member and organizer. He added that there were at least nine persons at each of the two coalition formation meetings during the past two weeks.

He said at least half of the estimated 50 persons running under the coalition banner are presently members of the student senate.

Boston's diGrazia speaks tonight

By RICK GUREGHIAN

Robert J. di Grazia, the outspoken and reform-minded Police Commissioner of Boston, will be the guest speaker tonight at the Amherst League of Women Voters annual fall membership meeting.

The affair, which will be held at 7:30 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High School cafeteria, will feature the commissioner's speech on "Changing Police Procedures."

Di Grazia, named to the post after an exhaustive nationwide search by Mayor Kevin White in 1972, drew national acclaim that year when he bucked the staunch seniority system of the Boston Police Department.

At that time, with allegations of corruption rampant within the hierarchy of the force, di Grazia phased out numerous long-time officers, banished admitted wrong-doers from the force, and centralized the efficiency of the department in such a way that it is now a much-copied example by many police departments throughout the country.

Described as "the working cop's commissioner," di Grazia's actions have earned him the respect of the Boston Patrolmen's Association while, at the same time, incurred the wrath of the more patronage-minded officers of the force.

Born in San Francisco in 1928, di Grazia rose through the ranks of the Novato, California police department, being promoted to Sergeant in 1961, culminating with his being named Chief of Police in 1963. After nation-wide recruitment, he was appointed Superintendent of Police, St. Louis, Missouri, in November, 1969. Three years later, Mayor White summoned him to Boston.

Earning an A.A. degree from the City College of San Francisco in 1966, di Grazia recently completed his B.A. at Boston College last year. Widely sought after as an authority on police procedure, di Grazia has taught courses in police administration, and delivered talks on hand-gun control and the much-needed upgrading of police leadership.

The meeting, which is open to the public, will be followed by a question and answer period.

UMass blood center to serve as barometer

By GARY BUSHEE
Collegian Staff

This is a crucial year for the UMass Blood Donation Center, according to Coordinator Frederick A. Shea, as this campus is the only one in the Northeast with its own donor center, and the Red Cross will be using it as a barometer to determine whether or not they will develop centers on college campuses throughout New England.

The center, which is open Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday from 5:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m., had their first three days of operation last week. Fifty-four units of blood were collected, much of which was due to the blood drive sponsored by WMUA.

Shea said, "Last week was a good start but its not quite what we'd like to do. We'd like to be averaging between 20 and 25 people a night." Facilities at the center have a maximum capacity of 32 people per night.

At the center, located on the lower floor of the Infirmary, a donor first sees a student nurse, who takes his temperature, then has him or her fill out a short registration form. Then two registered nurses take the donor's blood pressure, a small blood sample, and test it for hemoglobin content and a number of diseases to see if it is healthy enough to transfuse.

"All of this take 5-10 minutes", says Shea, "and the actual giving of the blood takes approximately eight minutes."

There is a Mobile Unit Assistant who packages the blood and Grow your own herb—it's easy

By CASSIE ECKHOF
Collegian Staff

From little strokes fall great oaks, and after Amy V. Morse, a plant and soil science major, took one course in Plant Propogation, she began a project that would take eight months with an end product of 168 herb plants.

This organic feat started when Morse's Plant Propogation professor, Dr. Donald N. Maynard, needed specimens for photographs to be used at the slide shows and presentations he gives locally. He asked Morse if she would be willing to undertake the project, and she agreed.

The project has been going on since February, when Morse filled the flats in the Organic Garden with four plants of each variety — or 168 plants in all. When the plants were two inches tall, the seedlings were transplanted into pots and by June, all of the herbs were outside. Says Morse, "The amazing thing was, nothing died!"

Morse, a farm girl since birth, stayed on in Sunderland over the summer and there worked on a private farm 55 hours a week. After working on the farm, she was still responsible for the herbs here at UMass. In addition to all this, she even has a garden in her backyard.

"If I wasn't eating or sleeping, I was gardening!"

Morse will be holding an "Open Garden" tomorrow from 2 to 4 p.m. at the Experimental Gardens, and all are invited. Her collection ranges from such common herbs as sage to the pineapple sage, a plant three feet tall and two and a half feet wide.

The emphasis of the exhibit is the minimum amount of care needed to grow herbs. None of those in this collection were ever watered fertilized or pesticided. The only care they received was weeding. At the exhibit, Morse will have a bibliography of garden and plant related books she will be giving out. After the exhibit, two plants from each variety will be harvested, dried and checked for yield. The other two of each variety will be left in the garden to see what happens to them over the winter.

Morse herself says she is starting to use many more unusual herbs in her cooking. She is now also drying them. All this involves is hanging the herbs upside down, and after a week, putting a paper bag over them so they don't fall apart. When they are sufficiently dry, just crumble them up.

Other uses of herbs include drawer sachets made out of lavender, balsalm, catnip or sage. "Great Christmas presents!", says Morse. Perfume can also be made out of correandor in about four months using almost all household ingredients.

Students can even grow herbs in their rooms if there is enough sunlight which is very important when the herbs first come up. Morse recommends a grow light for 18 hours a day and to keep them clipped back.

Yes, any Herb can grow herbs.

So you want to be a Rhodes scholar?

By MIKE WILSON
Collegian Staff

The International Programs Office is currently taking applications for the Rhodes, Marshall, and Luce National scholarship competitions, offering students of superior qualifications the opportunity to enrich their postgraduate educational studies by living, working, and studying, abroad.

The Rhodes scholarship was originally founded at the turn of the century by Cecil Rhodes, a noted British scholar to provide advanced study at Oxford University in England.

A wide range of areas are offered to the recipient, including the sciences, humanities, arts, law, theology, agriculture, and engineering.

The scholarship consists of full tuition and fee coverage, round trip travel costs, and a stipend of over $2,800. The period of study usually lasts for two years. This year for the first time, women are eligible to apply.

As gratitude for the assistance the United States gave Britain during its post-World War Two recovery period, the Marshall Scholarship Program was established to support American students pursuing advanced degrees at any of Britain's 44 universities.

Most fields of study available at an American university are offered at the British institutions. Applicants should be American citizens under 25 years of age and possess a bachelor's degree from an accredited university.

The award consists of $3,800 to cover roundtrip travel costs, tuition and fees, and living expenses.

The third program was begun by Henry Luce, founder and editor-in-chief of "Time Magazine" to develop a better understanding of Asia among future American leaders.

The program was originally launched in 1974, offering students with no prior experience in Asian affairs, the opportunity to encounter numerous Asian organizations at the educational, business, and government levels.

Candidates for the scholarship must be American citizens of not more than 27 years of age and possess a bachelor's degree. A clearly defined career interest is the most important factor judges will take into consideration.

The basic award includes round-trip travel expenses plus a stipend of $9,000 payable in twelve monthly installments. If a wife or husband accompanies the recipient, an additional $2,000 augments the award.

According to Sterling Lament, coordinator at the International Programs Office, only one UMass student has been awarded the Marshall scholarship, though others have entered the finals for the Luce competition. High prestigious schools of the northeast tend to monopolize the competitions, which are first divided into regional sections then assembled nationally, he said.

He mentioned that letters were sent to seniors with an overall grade point average of 3.7 and above, and it remained up to them to apply.

He also said the University Bulletin had printed information concerning the competitions.

Qualifications for all of the three scholarship competitions include superior academic achievement, evidence of outstanding leadership ability either on or off campus, and involvement in group or individual sport activities.

Applications may be obtained at the International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore. The deadline to apply is October 1

Sylvan to hold elections tonight

By ROSE CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Elections will be held this evening at the three Sylvan dormitories for area student government officials. To be filled are offices of President, vice-president, and treasurer.

Polls will be open from 4:30 this afternoon to 8:30 tonight. Residents may vote in the lobbies of the Brown, McNamara or Cashin dorms.

According to last year's Treasurer Bruce Belcher, one of the major concerns of the government this year will be improving on the disorganized structure of last year.

None of the candidates are opposed on the ballot. However, there is a write-in campaign for the office of the presidency.

On the ballot for the presidency is William Shewchuk, a senior majoring in chemical engineering.

Shewchuk's only opposition will be from a co-presidential write-in campaign initiated by Brad Goverman and John Braverman.

Goverman is a junior majoring in journalistic studies-English.

Braverman is a senior English major.

These two candidates profess no experience in student government, and aim to "simplify" area government through this inexperience, according to Braverman. He also stated that the pair refrained from entering their names on the ballot due to their "opposition to the bureaucratic system."

Running completely unopposed is vice-presidential candidate Mark Nachle, who is majoring in business. Also unopposed is John Jacobs, a sophomore whose major is Civil Engineering. Jacobs seeks the office of Treasurer.

The pay for each of these offices will be determined by the council within the next few weeks. Last year the positions paid $15 to the president, $12.50 to the vice-president, and $10 to the treasurer. These figures had been lowered from the previous year.

The Sylvan Area Government is responsible for overseeing Sylvan's radio and TV stations, WSYL, the area newspaper, the Parchment, the Craft Shop, dark room, Women's Center, Cultural Society and general activities.

Of the 1300 Sylvan Area residents a low voter turnout is expected.

Third World funding prompts OHAG dispute

by ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

The Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) meeting was abruptly adjourned last night after a near-fight between representatives of the Third World and other members of OHAG.

The argument centered on the Orchard Hill's Third World Center, which is asking for $2700 for the current year. This is about a 150 per cent increase from last year's budget.

OHAG representative heard a presentation on the center's budget, which had been cut $650 from a proposal made last week of $3350.

Arguments against funding were that much of the center's budget proposals were already covered in the Hill's overall budget, and that the center represented only one to two per cent of the Hill population.

The three-hour meeting was adjourned by OHAG President Deborah Love following much yelling and shouting that threatened to turn into a fight.

Earlier, a vote on the $2700 budget was taken and voted down. At this time, another motion was made to vote on the figure of $1500, which was the finance committee's proposed allotment for the Third World Center. The vote was never taken, after it was made clear to the representatives that the Third World would not accept that amount of money.

According to Timothy Hart, a representative of the Third World, if OHAG did not pass more than a $1500 budget for the center, it will

Pre-vets told

Veterinary school possible

By HELEN BERG
Collegian Staff

Sixty members of the Pre-Vets Club were told last night that a large amount of lobbying was needed before Tufts University and the state of Massachusetts would agree on a recent proposal to build a veternary school in Massachusetts.

The remarks were made by William F. Gearin, head of the Committee to Establish a School of Veternary Medicine in New England, at the meeting in the Campus Center.

Officials from Tufts and the state admitted Monday they were studying a plan that would convert the now-unused Grafton State Hospital to a New England regional veternary school and state research facility. The site is about three and a half miles from the UMass-Worcester campus.

According to Tuesday's Worcester Telegram, the state would pay the costs for operating the facility where state researchers would be working, and Tufts would pick up the costs of the educational and administrative personnel.

Gearin, who has been working on the committee since its founding in 1972, said he "thinks it's the closest we've been to a vet school since I've been working on it."

Officials working on the study say operation could start as early as 1978. The Telegram reported that there has been discussion of moving the Stockbridge Agricultural School to the Grafton site.

Tufts new president, Dr. Jean Meyer, a Harvard graduate and eminent nutritionist, is expected to make a decision by Nov. 15 as to whether the plan will be presented to the Tufts Board of Trustees.

Gearin, was quoted by the telegram as saying he hoped to see academic work for the school done in Boston, while the research is done on the Grafton site. The closest veternary school to New England is at Penn State.

Gearin said there is still opposition to the plan, because of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' plan to put a minimum security prison on the site. This proposal has been backed by State Sen. James A. Kelly, chairperson of the Ways and Means Committee.

He said that if the plan is adopted, his committee is prepared to launch a six-state fund raising drive in order to raise monies to help Tufts start up the school.

The regional approach is being used, he said, in order to attract federal monies. In the Telegram article, Gearin said his committee is planning a trip to Washington to make a presentation before the New England Congressional delegation.

The study, being headed by Dr. Thomas Murname, will determine the feasibility of the site. Satellite research centers, to be set up on the campuses of state university's in the Northeast are part of this study.

The satellite centers would focus on each state's important industries, such as the dairy industry in Vermont or the poultry industry in Maine.

According to the Worcester Telegram, local reaction in Grafton was "predictably favorable," since residents of the area are against establishing a prison there.

State Rep. Leo R. Corazzini, who represents the area, said the school would be "just the thing we need," the Telegram stated.

Gearin said he opposes the practice of making contracts with veternary school out of New England, whereby a state school would agree to accept so many students into their curriculum from a New England state.

Gearin showed slides of the site, which reportedly has been toured twice in the past five weeks by Tufts and state officials.

Located on 300 acres of prime agricultural land, Gearin said the site includes dairy, swine and horse barns.

'America can't be all bad' says columnist Buchwald

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

After musing on the people and policies of America for about 40 minutes, Art Buchwald assured an audience of 1250 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall last night that America "can't be all bad".

The syndicated columnist, author and lecturer came to campus as a Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) lecturer and also met with students during the day to answer their questions about Washington life, politics and sundry other topics.

Buchwald typically takes a flippant view of politics and politicians in his columns and his speech here ran true to form as he reeled off anecdote after anecdote on topical items. He also answered 17 questions from the audience in 23 minutes and polled the listeners on their presidential preference.

The result of the poll was that "Mr. undecided gets the nomination", Buchwald said after counting hands "scientifically". He added that he would report the results to President Ford and then none of the tax revenue from the area would be returned.

Dressed in a red tie, white shirt, blue plaid suit and black wing tip loafers, the 50-year-old Buchwald recounted how he snuck into the Marine Corps when he was 16 so he wouldn't miss World War II. After realizing his mistake ("in the Marine Corps they have no use for humor") he decided he should go to college.

With 4,000 other ex-G.I.s he entered the University of Southern California, Buchwald recalled, despite the fact that he didn't have a high school diploma. When told he could stay but would not be allowed to work toward a degree he shrugged it off because a degree wouldn't do him much good without a diploma. He then stayed for three years and "had a ball".

When he received $250 from New York State for being a veteran, he was advised by a staffer at the U.S.C. Daily Trojan to give the money to the Alumni Fund. "Cooler heads prevailed", Buchwald said, and he went to Paris instead.

He went because he had heard "the streets are paved with matresses". After protecting three American women for a night he "dumped them at the American Express office" and tried to get a job with the Marshall Plan, "the G.I. Bill for countries".

Unsuccessful, he instead got a job with the International Edition of the New York Herald Tribune for $25 a week writing on night clubs, movies, food and wine.

After 14 years in Paris, he returned to the U.S. in 1962 to work in Washington, D.C. He explained that he had to get used to "the little things, like taxes and expense accounts" again and though the nation's leaders should provide security, "the closer you get to the seat of power, the more nervous you get."

He then launched into a discourse that predominantly concerned presidential politics but also covered such subjects as Marlon Brando, Henry Kissinger, Senator William Scott of Virginia, the National Rifle Association (NRA) and gun control, transportation, computers, the Middle East and a long story about sex education and 11-13 year olds.

On President Ford: "He's fascinating and I respect him. I worship the quicksand he stands on. When he first took over, I

Charges filed against CIA by Amherst professor

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

A professor of sociology at Amherst College has filed charges against the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Bureau of Investigation for what he calls "an abridgement of academic freedoms" in the United States, according to an article in Monday's Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Norman Birnbaum said the two powerful law enforcement agencies kept files on his activities and intercepted his mail.

The "socially critical" Birnbaum learned of the agencies activities when, under the Freedom of Information Act, he requested to see his government files.

Intercepted by the CIA were two letters sent to the Soviet Union and Romania in 1970. Mailed from Amherst College by Birnbaum while he was chairperson of the Committee on International Sociological Associations, Birnbaum said the letters concerned a conference on religion. He further discovered that the FBI maintained an in-depth file on him which spanned his career, according to the Gazette.

Birnbaum, referring to exposures by Sen. Frank Church's investigative committee on CIA activities, states that the CIA has been very active in academia and is a threat to the freedom of American colleges and universities.

As a result of these revelations, Amherst College President John W. Ward has inquired to CIA director George Bush of CIA associations with professors and students at Amherst College, the Gazette stated.

Birnbaum, in the Gazette article said he believes it was a common practice for mail going between the U.S. and Eastern Europe to be intercepted as part of a "Cold War"-like intelligence operation directed by the U.S.

Suspicion based on "inferential evidence" convinced Birnbaum that the CIA still possesses an extensive file on him and that the FBI has not divulged all the information it has on him.

"They (the suspected, undisclosed files) are someplace. We are trying to get them," he said in the article.

Among his past political activities, Birnbaum was an opponent of the Vietnam War. In 1967 he signed, as did thousands of other Americans, the "Call to Resist Illegal Authority" document. The document urged all citizens to call for a halt to the Vietnam War.

The professor is further convinced that, due to his political beliefs, he was under surveillance by the intelligence agencies of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization during the 14 years he taught in Europe.

According to Birnbaum, two ways in which the CIA and FBI abuses can be remedied is to develop a more democratic foreign policy and for citizens to be more vigilant.

He was quoted as saying, "In the name of anti-Communism, we are beginning to do the same thing to our citizens as the Soviet Union does to theirs."

Voter registration gets underway

Voter registration for the Nov. 2 presidential and Massachusetts state election will take place today and tomorrow in the Campus Center Concourse.

Officials from the Amherst Town Clerk's office will register voters who reside in Amherst, and applications for absentee ballots also will be available.

An application for an absentee ballot, if a student is registered in a home town — is not necessary. Amherst Town Clerk Estelle M. Matusko says that a letter to town clerk in a student's home town, including name, home address and school address will serve as an application. Deadline for registration for the Nov. 2 election is Oct. 2.

Students MUST fill out their absentee ballots in the presence of a Notary Public or the Regisrar or Assistant Registrar of the University. Completed absentee ballots that are received after the polls close on Nov. 2 will NOT be counted — so it is advised to mail as early as possible.

Students who are residents of Amherst can also register during the day at the Town Clerk's Offices — or at the following special registration sessions: tonight from 7 to 9 at the Town Clerk's Office; tomorrow from 7 to 9 p.m. at the North Amherst Parish Center; Monday night from 7:00 to 9:00 at the Old Fellows Hall; next Wednesday from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Fort River School; Saturday, Oct. 2 at the Town Clerk's Office from 12 noon to 10 p.m., and Tuesday, Oct. 2 all day at the Town Clerk's Office.

Energy information forum planned

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

"Someday the people of Massachusetts will have to make a decision in the voting booths concerning the question of nuclear energy. We want them to make an intellectual decision," Robert T. Staron, the curator of Physical Science at the Springfield Science Museum, said in an interview yesterday.

He is coordinating a "Public Energy Forum" which will present expert speakers of opposing views on the energy problem Oct. 13-15.

The topics to be discussed include: the safety hazards of nuclear energy; the viewpoints of proponents of nuclear power stations; solar and geothermal energy; advanced energy conversion; pollution; and the energy policy of the U.S. government.

Several of the speakers will be representing the Union of Concerned Scientists, which is an independent organization and has conducted several technical studies regarding nuclear energy.

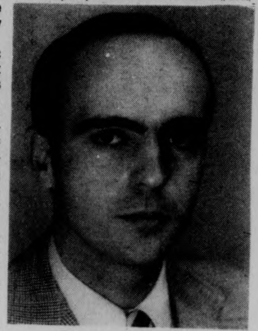
Other studies conducted by the union concerned air and steam pollution, radioactive waste disposal options, pesticide use, and energy policy alternatives.

Daniel F. Ford, executive director of the group, will open the forum discussing the views of those opposing nuclear power stations.

Bernard M. Fox, project manager of the Montague Nuclear Project of Northeast Utilities, will discuss the advantages of nuclear power plants later that evening.

The topic of the second session will be solar and geothermal energy. The speakers will be Dr. William P. Goss, professor of mechanical engineering and aerospace at UMass, and Michael Lotker of Northeast Utilities. Goss will discuss wind and ocean thermal power and Lotker will speak on energy conversion research being conducted at Northeast Utilities.

The third and final session of the forum will feature Dr. David J. Jharid of the Union speaking on the issue of job opportunities versus pollution levels and U.S. Air Force Lt. General Edmund F. O'Connor discussing the U.S. Government's overall energy policy. O'Connor is the Deputy Assistant Administrator for Nuclear Energy of the U.S. Energy Research and Development Administration.



Bernard M. Fox

Each session of the forum will begin at 8 p.m. and will be held at the auditorium of the Museum of Fine Arts in Springfield, The admission charge will be $1.00 and the public is invited to attend. Each speakers presentation will be about 45 minutes long and those in attendance will be able to direct questions to the speakers following each session.

Staron, the coordinator of the forum, said yesterday, "I do not think at this time that nuclear energy is safe. The waste products of nuclear energy plants remain highly radioactive for thousands of years. Transporting nuclear energy products is always subject to human error. We are making a commitment that generations and generations are going to have to live with. I don't think that we can make that commitment at this time."

Staron also said, "Nuclear energy may be the short-term answer to the energy problem. We should build a few plants, making them as safe as possible, while at the same time we are investigating other energy producing methods so that the nukes are just a stop-gap."

"Average security guard training is minimal. Human error makes it impossible to adequately guard nuclear plants. They should be impregnable for safety reasons. However, if they are guarded by garrisons, then we will have a garrison state. The power plants would be well armed and well staffed isolated hamlets and that is not desirable at this time," Staron added.

"Accidents have happened but there has been little publicity unless the Union of Concerned Scientists has spoken up. The utilities have been very secretive," Staron said, "Might there be more accidents taking place that no one knows about?"

Staron said "There's got to be regulations and very tight control over the dispersal of nuclear products, however, government regulations can be very slipshod. Government can be affected by the ills of human error, too. We are dealing with what could be a horrible thing; to leave it to chance is irresponsible."

The museum is the closest science museum to Amherst and is located in a quadrangle with two art museums, a historical society and a library.

Staron said he encourages UMass students to visit the museum, use its facilities and become involved with the museum. Students can volunteer, become guides, give technical assistance or arrange to do research at the museum.

UMass administrator finds solar heat good for pool

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

After investing a few thousand dollars in a swimming pool, solar heating may be a good way to extend the swimming season and get your money's worth out of the investment.

Bill Venman, director of the Division of Continuing Education had a solar energy system installed at his home in Amherst to heat his built-in swimming pool this summer.

Venman said he expects the main benefits of the system to come next spring, when the water temperature in the pool is too cold for swimming even on hot days.

He said he decided to invest in the solar heater from information he had gathered, but a general lack of knowledge about solar energy makes it difficult to choose the correct type of system.

"We're really experimenting with the system," he said. "We know that it works, but there are also problems which must be worked out."

According to U.S. Weather Bureau's records in the New England area, there is enough solar energy available to raise the temperature of the pool to above 70 degrees by the first or second week in May. The swimming season can be extended as far as mid-October with a properly installed system.

Partly cloudy or light overcast days radiate some solar energy and the pool water will store the heat and maintain a comfortable temperature over several heavy overcast days.

Venman purchased two solar collector panels, at $250 each to capture the suns' rays. He said an additional $25 was spent for hose, piping and fittings which connect to the pool's filter.

The system, invented by Gerald Falbel of Stamford, Conn. was purchased from Energy Alternatives, Inc. of Leverett, Mass.

Falbel designed a system which doubles the efficiency because the collector receives the suns' rays from the front and back, and its curve reflects the heat to a pipe no matter where the sun hits the collector. The water absorbs the heat as it travels from the pipe to the pool's filter and raises the temperature of the water.

The newness of the system has prevented Venman from seeing any tangible results, but a spokesperson for the company said a similar system sold to one of Venman's neighbors has saved him the $500 to $600 a year he was paying to heat his pool with gas.

"There are lots of ways to use solar energy," said Venman, "But there are different problems and results with each method."

A coil of hose on a black roof with water running through the hose would raise the temperature, he said. A plastic cover when the pool is not being used helps retain the heat, and a coat of black paint on the bottom would also heat the water, except there would be no way to shut off the heating system.

"It's true you can build a solar collector device of simple materials with little skills and create satisfactory results," said a company spokesperson. "It may not be as efficient as a manufactured product, but anything will give you something."

The company spokesperson said the Falbel system is cheap in comparison to other solar heating systems partly because it is not visually appealing. One collector is needed for every 10,000 gallons of water to be heated.

There is enough solar energy to raise the temperature of the pool to above 70 degrees by the first or second week in May.

The best results are obtained if the collectors are tied in to a domestic hot water system in the home to heat water in the winter, said the spokesperson.

A pump and heat exchangers are used to heat the water in the winter and the system is easily switched to the pool filter to heat pool water in the summer. The cost of the domestic hot water system is $700. In a little over three years, he said the system will pay for itself.

The systems are not being pushed, he said because it is still an experimental field and improvements are consistently being made.

Many firms are dropping or adding solar products and in a few years the big industries will have found the best ways of producing solar energy.

"But if there's another oil increase," he said, "there will be no sense to wait."

Nader, Lovejoy to be featured

By ANN MARIE REIS

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader will be the featured speaker at an anti-nuclear Teach-in next month, sponsored by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG).

Samuel Lovejoy, a local anti-nuclear activist, and Prof. William E. Heronemus of the UMass civil engineering department, who has researched solar energy and wind power, will also speak at the teach-in, scheduled for Oct. 5 and 6, according to Diane Woolf of MassPIRG.

In preparation for the teach-in, MassPIRG sponsors weekly meetings Wednesdays at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 805 and Thursdays at the same time in the Unitarian Church on 121 N. Pleasant St. in Amherst.

Woolf said workshops, film, music and informative material, aimed at "educating the public" will also be provided during the two-day event.

"People are not informed enough about nuclear power plants which are dangerous, uneconomic and a rip-off to the consumer," Woolf said.

According to John Pearsall, a teach-in coordinator, nuclear power as a source of energy and electric costs are "interwoven."

He said that in 1975 more than 58 per cent of Massachusetts' power was supplied by nuclear power plants.

"The utilities promised cheaper electrical costs," Pearsall added. "The fuel is cheaper, but the high cost to carry it has caused increased electric rates."

Woolf noted that during the month of June, 400 accidents occured in the 45 nuclear power plants now in operation throughout the country. These resulted from design problems, human error and equipment malfunctions, [illegible] said.

Woolf said sup[illegible] for a second demonstration at the Seabrook New Hampshire nuclear power site will be emphasized at the teach-in. Several individuals protested the proposed plant site last month after a construction permit was passed.

Upcoming hearings on the proposed Montague site will also be discussed, she added.

Bottle workshop tonight in Amherst

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

Proponents of the Bottle Bill, which will appear as a referendum question on the November ballot, will sponsor a workshop tonight at 7:30 in the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) office on 233 North Pleasant St., located in the Carriage Shops in Amherst.

The Bottle Bill will advocate a five cent deposit on returnable, reusable bottles and cans.

Susan Kaplan, a Mass PIRG representative, said more student interest in the bill is needed to assure its passage in November.

According to Kaplan, several bottle and can manufacturers, most of which are located outside the state, are funding a massive media "blitz" against the bill.

"This workshop will be a great opportunity for students to become familiar with the issue and the people working for it," she said.

Kaplan added that plans will be finalized tonight concerning weekly trips to Springfield to leaflet and inform others on the Bottle Bill. The first trip is scheduled for Saturday, she said.

Mass PIRG is a non-profit student organization inspired by consumer-advocate Ralph Nader.

Elma Lewis searches for $300,000

Roxbury fine arts school needs money

Unless $300,000 is raised within the next 11 days, the Elma Lewis School of Fine Arts in Roxbury, Mass. will be forced to close its doors, according to a report in yesterday's Boston Globe.

Although community activities have continued within the building, the school has been effectively closed for the last two months, and no classes have been conducted.

Elma Lewis has appealed to the public for donations to keep the school running. Representatives of several communities appeared at the Lewis speech to show that they are backing her efforts.

Among those who appeared were members of the Boston financial community; Percy Wilson, director of the Roxbury Multi-Service Center; Ellen Jackson, head of Freedom House Institute on Schools and Education; Otto and Muriel Snowden, co-directors of Freedom House; and Patrick Jones, director of the Lena Park Community Development Center.

Board members say that in addition to the $300,000 to keep the school running debts total almost $721,000, and according to the Globe, it also needs another $250,000 to allow the school to remain open until Febriary.

The institution's budget is $763,797 for Sept. 1 through next Aug. 31st. The school can expect $305,000 from other commitments, but has signed contracts for $101,000 already.

Outstanding debts consist of $88,000 owed to the Commwealth of Division of Employment Security; more than $200,000 is owed to the Internal Revenue Service in back wages to employees; $5,000 is owed to the State Department of Corporation and Taxation for Employees Witholding Taxes. The State Department of Labor and Industries has filed complaints on behalf of six employees of the school to collect $5,200 in back wages also.

Att. Gen. Francis Bellotti's office is showing support for the fine arts school and has joined the school in asking the Superior Court to allow the school to continue operations under the supervision of a "responsible fiscal officer." the Globe reports.

"I am very pleased with this development," said Bellotti, "I believe that the school furnishes unique communications services and should not be allowed to terminate solely due to fiscal problems."

Elma Lewis has said that donations of any amount, fifty cents or a dollar, would gladly be accepted, and these amounts are what will get them through. Any donations to the Elma Lewis School of Fine Arts should be sent to ELSFA Fund, Unity Bank and Trust, Warren Street, Roxbury, Mass. 02121.

Campus hotel serves variety of purposes

By DOROTHY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Hotel was planned in 1970 as a working lab with the Hotel Restaurant Travel Administration (HRTA) to provide students of that department with practical experience in their field, said Donald E. Witkoski, manager of the hotel.

"I bring students over to the hotel to work with the employees," he said.

Witkoski, an alumnus of UMass, has been manager of the hotel for the six years of its existence. He previously had worked for other hotels in the Cape Cod area.

He also teaches a three-credit course in the HRTA department.

Although Witkowski said the purpose of the hotel is to provide a place where HRTA majors can get first-hand experience, they are not given first preference to jobs.

Pat H. Hassett and Rick J. Galipault, HRTA majors, said student clubs are more beneficial to their careers than the hotel.

"With the clubs, you get a chance to meet people in the business and attend conventions," said Galipault.

The clubs referred to by Galipault and Hassett are the Food Service Executive Association and the Hotel Sales Management Association.

These clubs sponsor student chapters and have a guest lecture series where speakers discuss topics such as the job market.

The Campus Center Hotel has 116 rooms, most of which have two twin beds, although a few have double beds.

The cost of each room depends on the number of occupants. Although there are special student rates, there are no group rates.

Student rates are $11.75 for single or double occupancy, and $14.75 for triples. Normal rates are $16.00 for singles, $22.00 for doubles and $25.00 for triples.

"We maintain our rates year round," Witkowski said. "We do not raise them when activities on campus are likely to draw more people, such as Homecoming weekend."

He said most of the groups that stay at the hotel are with conference groups. Parents of students are the lowest percentage of occupancy, he said.

The hotel does not usually attract many people who are not associated in some way with the University, he said.

"We are operated along the same lines as any other hotel," he said.

"We hold staff meetings with heads of each department if we are working on a reorganization project, we hold staff meetings every day until we have something settled," he said.

Goldberg said these 50-odd persons were on the coalition slate, but Harvey said they are only possible candidates who have yet to confirm nomination contentions with the coalition.

Goldberg said the names were being withheld so he could have an opportunity to speak with representatives of the Third World community yesterday.

Harvey said the names were being withheld mainly because "people are prone to misinterpret the political actions of certain people."

Harvey said the coalition is not out to control the senate. "It will bring like-minded persons an organized structure to voice opinions," he said.

When asked how the coalition hopes to end fractionalization in the senate, Harvey said, "Although last year the unionization caucus in the senate split senators, we believe the coalition will bring together all senators to strive for a common goal."

Thomas J. Kerrins, acting treasurer of the student senate, said he did not agree with Goldberg's statement that budget matters are not known to students.

"The budget is advertised in the Collegian, pamphlets are issued concerning it, and two public meetings on the raising of a budget are publicly announced to students." he said.

Goldberg suggested Monday night that the student senate elections, scheduled for Monday and Tuesday of next week, be delayed so that more people could have time to be made aware of the existence of the coalition.

Karl S. Allen, chairperson of the senate Governmental Affairs Committee, said he would resign if the election is delayed.

"There was no opposition to the election date voiced at the Sept. 8 meeting, and Goldberg was present," he said.

Goldberg said Monday night that the coalition wants to increase student input in government and enhance communication between students and their senators. He said the group wants more Third World and women's involvement in the senate.

Goldberg said that the senate, as it stands now, "is not functional." He said the coalition was formed "because of the lack of input into the student government by students."

The ISC slate calls for a greater control by students of the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF), a $1.1 million budget which comes from a $55 fee each student pays every year; "unification of energies towards a productive goal; and a network of information from senators to students."

On the NRA: "We have a very uptight society. For every uptight person there is an uptight organization to back him up. The NRA is the most uptight. He then asserted that though he lives in Washington he is not a cynic — "You have to be an optimist to fly Allegheny."

He then told the crowd no matter what was in the newspapers or on the news that "we'll make it, we've always muddled through one crisis or another." Buchwald then recalled how he watched Gerald Ford take over the presidency when Richard Nixon resigned yet there were "no tanks or helmeted soldiers in the streets. There were only two motorcycle cops on Pennsylvania Avenue directing traffic."

He finished "A country that can go through a change like that can't be all bad."

After the speech Buchwald received a 30 second standing ovation as he saluted the crowd with both arms raised in the v-for-victory sign.

After calling for the house lights to be turned up Buchwald polled the audience on its presidential preference, and then received questions from the floor.

The questions came predominantly from the first two sections of the hall as they were the only two sections equipped with floor microphones. Nonetheless, many shouted questions from their seats.

Often they had to be repeated two or three times and Buchwald remarked, "This is a great concert hall going this way (pointing to the rear of the hall) but not the other way."

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A top official in the Chilean government of the late President Salvador Allende was killed yesterday when a bomb exploded in his car. A woman passenger in the car also was killed and her husband severely injured.

Orlando Letelier, 44, former defense and foreign minister of Chile and a former embassador to the United States, was killed when the bomb demolished the car he was riding in at Sheridan Circle in northwest Washington.

Also killed was Ronnie Karpen Moffitt, 25, of Potomac, Md., a staff member of the Transnational Institute of Policy Studies where Letelier was a director. Her husband, Michael, also a passenger in the car, was in fair condition.

Police said they had no suspects.

U.N. will focus on southern Africa

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. [AP] — Delegates from 145 nations gathered yesterday for the 31st U.N. General Assembly, a three-month meeting expected to concentrate on the quickening race conflict in southern Africa.

Both Third World and Western diplomats voiced hope that the confrontations of recent years might be muted and that the General Assembly could produce an international convention against terrorism.

"I believe there's a real desire to avoid confrontations," said Ambassador Salim A. Salim of Tanzania, a veteran African envoy.

On the U.S. side, the pugnacious and blunt envoy of last year, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, has been replaced by the more moderate William M. Scranton.

Moynihan, who electrified last year's assembly with his tough defense of Israel and hard-hitting attacks on what he saw as Third World hypocrisy, is now the Democratic candidate for senator from New York.

On the eve of the assembly opening, Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim urged diplomats to cut down on the escalating volume of paperwork, partying and procrastination. He urged the assembly to guide "potentially divisive forces of change into constructive channels of cooperation."

Waldheim concludes his first five-year term this year, and his re-election is one of the items before the assembly.

Ford's 'ethics' questioned

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford acknowledged yesterday he accepted two golfing vacations at a U.S. Steel country club when he was a congressman. One came after the House adopted an ethical code forbidding members to accept such favors.

U.S. Steel's chief lobbyist William Whyte said his firm paid "room and board" for both Ford visits to the Pine Valley Golf Club near Clementon, N.J. Whyte said he personally paid Ford's miscellaneous expenses.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen quoted Ford as saying: "I've been a friend of Bill Whyte for 28 years. I've been there twice as his friend to play golf."

Nessen said Ford recalled playing golf at the lodge in 1964 and again about five years ago.

In 1968, the House adopted a code of ethics stating that "a member, officer or employe of the House of Representatives shall accept no gift of substantial value, directly or indirectly, from any person, organization or corporation having a direct interest in legislation before the Congress."

Nessen, questioned further at the daily White House press briefing, said Ford's 1964 visit involved a "long weekend," and the one "about five years ago" was briefer.

Asked if Ford thought the second trip violated the House ethics code, Nessen said, "I'm not familiar with the details" of the code and "I can't make that judgment."

"it's obvious," he said, "that if the President thought there was anything wrong, he wouldn't have done it."

Nessen said he did not know if Ford knew whether Whyte or U.S. Steel paid for the golfing trips.

Whyte said that since Ford's visits to the lodge were considered personal gifts and not campaign donations, they were not included in the company's recent internal investigation into improper payments.

He said the audit listed only one $100 contribution by a cement subsidiary that the corporation no longer owns.

However. U.S. Steel spokesmen in Pittsburgh and Washington told UPI they could find no record of any such audit. A check at the Securities and Exchange Commission, which normally receives such reports, also failed to turn up the report.

The Internal Revenue Service said it is not against the law for a member of Congress to accept a gift, but that the giver must file a tax return for gifts of substantial value.

Although Ford and Whyte said they could recall only two visits, former employes of U.S. Steel told UPI that Ford "frequently" was treated to expenses-paid weekends at the lodge.

Whyte said U.S. Steel has a complete listing of guests who have stayed at the lodge since 1969. These records, he said, are kept in a limestone mine in Annandale, Pa.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Rhode Island's Board of Elections was asked yesterday to nullify the Sept. 14 primary balloting in one state representative district for alleged illegal notarization of absentee ballots.

The case, involving more than 150 ballots, will have an impact on the close Democratic U.S. Senate nomination race between Gov. Philip W. Noel (L) and auto dealer Richard Lorber (R).

Board Chairman Harry F. Curvin took the motion under advisement during a continuing hearing into voting irregularities in the 1st representative district in Providence.

Board Secretary Francis Rao read a report from State Police Capt. Edward Pare which confirmed allegations Mourachian obtained improper authorizations on absentees and shut-in votes.

Newest astronaut... ...'bubble boy'

HOUSTON [AP] — David, who turned 5 yesterday, will soon become an astronaut on his own planet, wearing a specially designed space suit to explore an earth environment as alient and harmful to him as outer space.

David has not felt the touch of a human hand since he was born.

His life has been one of isolation in a plastic bubble in a room at the Texas Children's Hospital in Houston and another bubble at his home in a Houston suburb.

He is the victim of a sickness called severe combined immune deficiency — or SCID — an inherited disorder that strikes one in every 10,000 males. His body has no natural defenses and the simplest of germs in earth's environment could kill him, doctors say.

His new suit, a by-product of the technology that put men on the moon, will give David the mobility to explore things are familiar with — sunshine, rain, plants, solid ground and the laughter and faces of other persons.

David's parents have declined to be identified. Hospital officials said they did not know if any special celebration was scheduled for David's birthday.

But he was told recently of the biggest gift he will be getting — perhaps before Christmas. It is the suit that will get him out of his bubble.

"We told him about it and we showed it to him," said Fred Spross of the Bioengineering Systems Division of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration-NASA, which designed the suit.

Vietnam joins World Bank

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Behind closed doors and over the singular objection of the United States, the executive directors of the World Bank voted yesterday to admit Vietnam into their organization.

Vietnam's admission to the World Bank follows similar action taken by the International Monetary Fund last week. In the IMF vote, the United States representative also voted against admitting Vietnam.

Treasury Department officials have repeatedly objected to Vietnam's admission to either organization, saying it would be premature to admit the country at this time.

Admission to both world monetary organizations could spell good financial news for Vietnam.

Vermont Senate threatens 'nosy' opposition group

MONTPELIER, Vt. [AP] — If the American Civil Liberties Union persists in questioning the constitutionality of a Senate investigation of the Unification Church, it could find itself the target of a legislative probe, says the legislative panel's chairman.

"If they, the ACLU want to stick their noses into this, we'll be glad to pursue them a little, too," said Sen. Thomas Crowley, who heads the five-member select Senate Committee.

Crowley's remarks came after the Vermont chapter of the attorney's group, approached by the Unification Church for legal advice, labelled the Senate proceedings "clearly unconstitutional and unreasonable."

The panel, which holds another in a series of meetings here today to hear rebuttal testimony free church representatives, was approved by the Senate following complaints about the religious group's recruiting and soliciting techniques.

Crowley, a chief backer of the probe, made it clear the church would be the committee's target. But at his request the Senate did not specifically name the Unification Church in creating the committee.

"We wanted to leave it open ended so we could investigate any other organization or cult using the same practices," said Crowley. "This way we can move in any area we want, any organization we wish, including the ACLU."

The panel is titled the Committee for Investigation of Alleged Deceptive, Fraudulent and Criminal Practices of Various Organizations in the State.

Vermont ACLU executive director Lynn Heglund said there has not been a court challenge to he investigation only because the Unification Church has not requested one. But she said the circumstances would be different if the committee expanded its probe to include the ACLU.

"If he, Crowley, wants to go into court, we'll be glad to meet him there," said Ms. Heglund.

"This investigation — like the McCarthy hearings — has a very chilling effect on the people associated with the church," she said, referring to former Sen. Joseph McCarthy's crusade of the 1950s against people he believed were Communists.

Miss Heglund said hearings thus far have been conducted in a biased fashion.

"Opponents are used as prosecutors to grill witnesses that are against the church. It's very clearly an inquest, a set up situation," she said.

Crowley said legislation to remove the church's tax exempt status may be drafted at the conclusion of the hearings.

Ad ban failing

PORTLAND, Maine [UPI] — A member of the Television Bureau of advertising called yesterday for a partial lifting of the five-year-old ban on television and radio cigarette ads — in the cause of better health.

Bruce McGorill, manager of WCSH-TV in Portland and a member of the bureau's national board, said statistics show the ban has not succeeded in decreasing the number of smokers in the United States.

Instead, McGorill said, it has simply decreased the public's awareness of new low tar and nicotine cigarettes on the market. He said those products have been proved less damaging to a smoker's health.

"I'm sure awareness is down," he said. "If something is not called to people's attention, they won't go looking for it."

He urged Congress to allow advertising of cigarettes with tar and nicotine levels which fall below certain limits. Those limits should be revised frequently to reflect new medical and market information, he said.

In the land of affluence...

Migrant workers struggle uphill

SALINAS, CA., [PNS] — Home is a clapboard shack where the front door hangs off the hinges and the plumbing leaks. The rooms are bare and battered, the windows are covered with taped cardboard.

For Sixto Torres and thousands of other farm workers, life has been a succession of such homes. The buildings sit in silent enclaves surrounded by huge flat squares of broccoli, cauliflower, lettuce or potatoes.

Tractors raise dust — dragging gang plows over the fields, planting, spraying and cultivating. Long aluminum pipes snake across the fields shooting water into the air and trucks filled with strawberries or sugar beets race along the straight narrow roads.

Until about two years ago, Sixto Torres was on the move from one job to the next up and down California, while his family stayed in a shack rented by a grower in one of the small valley towns totally devoted to agribusiness.

Now, as unionization brings better wages and more steady employment, Torres and other farm workers have been able to think about establishing more permanent roots. "We need a place to live," Torres says. "We want to be able to settle down and be part of the community — and we've found the place."

The place is called San Jerardo — the first farm worker cooperative housing project in California. For the past two years, however, Torres and a group of about 60 farm worker families have had to wage an uphill battle to begin work on their new homes.

Torres and a group of 30 Mexican-American families had been evicted nearly three years ago from a trailer camp when the agribusiness they helped unionize sold out. They camped on the sidewalks of Salinas for nearly three weeks.

The county, unable to find space for them in the overcrowded migrant camps in Salinas, King City, Watsonville or Gilroy, finally allowed them to move into old Camp McCullum: 33 acres of dilapidated barracks, stubbly fields and pot-holed streets located five miles southeast of Salinas.

Camp McCullum — rechristened San Jerardo by the farm workers — had been built in 1942 to house workers for a quickly abandoned government farming project. Later it served as an internment camp for Italian and German prisoners of war.

Finally purchased by private growers to be used as a labor camp, McCullum housed up to 2000 single Mexican men during the Bracero program from 1951-67.

But Torres and the other farm workers had a different idea. By September 1974, 50 families had paid $400 each to join San Jerardo Inc. — and their $20,000 became a down payment for the deserted camp.

Hidden from view by 700 towering eucalyptus trees, the 31 buildings (each 120' x 124') in the camp are planned as the base of a vibrant community of up to 60 families.

The concrete-slabbed, redwood-studded buildings will be refurbished into duplexes by the families after work and on weekends. The key ingredient needed — approval on a $1,128,000 FHA loan for the self-help, non-profit corporation — is pending.

"What we want," says Torres, president of the San Jerardo board, "is a place to live that is decent and safe, a place we can afford and that we can be proud of. We don't want charity.

"The families will do a lot of work themselves. We are taking a place that is no good and turning it into homes. We think that is good for the whole community."

Many residents in the surrounding community disagree. The most recent opposition to the cooperative, a lawsuit filed by 15 neighbors that would prevent the families from moving in, failed September 1 when Monterey County Superior Court Judge Hark Joon Paik ruled in favor of the farm workers. But lawyers for the plaintiffs are appealing.

Initial opposition to the project came not only from area residents but also from the local Alisal School District trustees, who complained that an increase of 110 schoolchildren would add to already overcrowded conditions.

In a heated four-and-a-half hour session last fall, the Monterey County planning commissioners considered arguments for and against permitting a use permit for the project.

"I'd like to know," asked one resident, "why they shove everything into Alisal when they can go to some other town. We've got enough trouble of our own."

And opponents' attorney Myron E. Etienne Jr. criticized the project because of "leap-frog development" and the "ghetto" implication of its concentration of Mexican-Americans, a third of whom don't understand English.

Commissioner Edward Whitaker noted, however, that the board had earlier in the day approved 45 new housing units 15 miles from town, and said he didn't see the wisdom of forcing people to continue "living in conditions of miserable housing" to avoid an inconvenience to the school district. And Commissioner Millie Pratt said, "We're taking these people out of the ghetto and putting them in a decent place to live."

Finally the commission voted five to two to grant the new permit.

Buoyed by the decision, the families began cleaning up the camp, carting off rubbish, stripping rotted interiors and cutting weeds in the future park and recreation areas. A child-care and community center was mapped out.

Then San Jerardo was cast into limbo by the lawsuit filed by the 15 Alisal property owners challenging the commissioners' decision. The suit contended that San Jerardo was a "subdivision" and should not be permitted on agriculturally zoned land.

★ Blood drive continues

delivers it to the labs, and there are two or three student nurses on hand to assist. A pint of blood is extracted from each donor.

Ninety two per cent of blood is fluid or plasma. After giving blood a person's body will replace almost all of these fluids within a matter of hours. After you give you're requested to wait in the canteen area for about 15 minutes where we serve soda and cookies. The whole process takes about 45 minutes to an hour from the time you come in," he said.

The blood is taken to a laboratory in Springfield where it is processed and then distributed to the hospitals in western Massachusetts that need it, or to the Boston area if the need is great.

This week, The Collegian is sponsoring a blood drive, and next week the Air Force ROTC will be doing the same.

Those who donate during the Collegian drive will have their names published in the paper, although they may be held upon request.

"In the future we may have a table at the Campus Center and have blood technicians come down and take blood types right there. We may also try to get RSO status for the over 30 volunteers at the center," he said.

Shea has had a busy schedule since joining the Red Cross this August, attending seminars on blood and its components, touring several of the state's blood labs trying to drum up support for the center, while performing his usual duties, and he's still attending school.

Shea is a senior majoring in business management. Upon graduation, he says he'll "probably work full time for the Red Cross as a donor representative".

As far as getting the center established, Shea said, "Mr. Leo Hall, the Health Services administrator, has just done wonders in finding us space and setting up time for the program. Also, Mrs. Constance Petrunenko of the Division of Nursing has been very supportive by encouraging student nurses to volunteer."

Shea also thanked The Collegian and WMUA for their support.

"WMUA went all out last week," he said, and stressed how important this year is to the center.

"The Red Cross will be looking at us very closely: they're interested in finding out how community-oriented young people can be," he said.

Anyone interested in organizing a blood drive can call Shea at 256-6294 or go down to the Blood Donation Center, located downstairs in the University Health Center, in the Physical Therapy room during the hours that they are open.

★ OHAG dispute

be boycotted and would be unable to meet as a functioning body for the rest of the year.

OHAG has $11,035 in the yearly budget. This funds all office expenses, program support, social events for the Hill. The OHAG finance committee had discussed the various program allotments to be made in a meeting Sunday night. The Third World Center received the most money of any program, with the Women's Center getting $1000.

The Third World Center last week had shown their proposed budget of $3340 to OHAG. This week they had trimmed their proposal down to $2700 by committing $400 in salaries and cutbacks in supplies and programs.

At the beginning of the meeting, Love expressed her desire to work out a "reasonable agreement." However, parliamentary procedure was interrupted countless times for heated discussion on why the Third World Center should get such a large amount of the Hill budget.

A representative from the Women's Center pointed out that the Women's Center represented over 45 per cent of the Hill population. A Black woman pointed out that the Women's Center did not represent the Third World women on the Hill.

A suggestion was made by Love that the Third World Center could use other means, such as movies, to generate money for their group.

Economics journal meeting

An economics journal by and for students is being planned for this fall. Based on a spring survey, it will contain articles on Mass. economic policies, UMass economic problems, a consumer guide for students, theory articles of debates and Third World and women economic issues.

Any student interested in writing or being on the editorial planning board is urged to attend a meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in Room 100, Thompson Hall.

Students with past economic papers that can be recycled are asked to bring them to the meeting or drop them off at Room 100, Thompson Hall.

from our perspective

The stigmatized vet

During the Vietnam era, the military's major handle in attempting to control and quell the deeply rooted GI dissent was the discharge system. 800,000 veterans were branded with other than honorable discharges. Only 6 per cent were given as a result of a direct court martial. 94 per cent were given "administratively," that is upon the recommendtion or whim of the local commander without a court hearing; and they usually were for things that are not crimes in civilian life.

Many of these discharges were administered explicitly because of anti-war activity. Other bad discharges were clearly of a racial nature. A Department of Defense Taskforce on Military Justice reported that while blacks made up 12 per cent of the services, they received one-third of the Dishonerable Discharges, 21 per cent of the Bad Conduct Discharges and 17 per cent of the Undesirable Discharges.

Because of the stigma associated with a bad discharge, these veterans must face discrimination when attempting to obtain jobs, insurance and credit. And when applying for educational benefits, a Ralph Nader study shows that only six per cent of vets with bad discharges are accepted.

Discharge upgrading, which only remotely deals with the problem, may be obtained, however. But due to legal costs, it is an expensive process. Tonight in the Hatch, the UMass Veterans' Coalition is sponsoring a benefit concert to generate funds to cover costly litigation expenses.

A fine jazz-rock band, "Offering," is donating their musical talent to the effort. So have a good time, while helping the stigmatized vet.

A labor of love

You've probably heard it said a million times — "There's a blood shortage, so give as soon as you can." Maybe you went out and donated a pint, or maybe you didn't give it much thought. But if you didn't, then, you ought to now.

Last year the Northeast Regional Red Cross Blood Program — which supplies virtually all of the blood for 85 per cent of the hospitals in Massachusetts and which services the state of Maine as well — collected 347,000 units (pints) of blood. During the same period, hospitals in Massachusetts alone required more than 400,000 units. That means someone probably went without — and no statistics can communicate the tragic loss of life.

One of the greatest problems in dealing with blood is that whole blood can only be kept for 21 days. This means that when donations are high, a surplus develops, and when they're low, a shortage.

To make the supply of blood more consistent, the Red Cross has been establishing "donor centers" recently, where people can donate any time, not just when the bloodmobile rolls around. UMass is the only college campus in the Northeastern U.S. with its own donor center, and ours is just a trial run. If donations here are low, there will be no centers on campuses which is a shame, considering the amount of blood that walks around Amherst every day.

To help give the UMass donor center that needed "shot in the arm," the Collegian is sponsoring a blood drive, to take place tonight and tomorrow night from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the Health Center. Just walk in between those hours — it only takes a little bit of your time, and a little bit of you.

Remember — donating blood really is a labor of love. Whether the life you save is your own or someone else's, somebody will be very grateful. We sure will be.

Muckraking autumn leaves

By JIM SCHPEISER

A HORSE's ASS: The loneliness of the long-distance writer strikes again. I thought of buying a horse to ride to school but the turds deterred. I haven't bought a parking sticker yet, because my kitten isn't old enough to carry me. Parking fees seems discriminatory, like everything else. Imagine me paying $25 so I could make believe I'm back in the city.

"Towing is a great enforcement tool," says David L. Johnston of the parking enforcers. Try towing my horse!

But is enforcement the problem? Are fees too much, too little, bus services inadequate? 11,000 cars will park at school daily, and bikes ain't too good in January.

Do we build subways, tear up North Pleasant? Perhaps the five colleges could sponsor a jitney service, small taxi-van type vehicles, more convenient than buses. And have you smelled the air on North Pleasant lately? If the Amherst area is to become the next Massachusetts city, then we should have some responsible planning.

What's happening on the by-pass? Students should lobby at the Chamber of Commerce-board of selectmen meetings if they don't want the state spending money for a road which will be detrimental to the environment. Better yet, pick up hitchhikers. As FDR said, "All we have to fear is fear itself."

Don't change channels! Even Brandeis has a hitchhiking post, but Abby Hoffman delivered pizza there.

Jitneys or hitchhike on rte. 9. From personal experience, in New York and San Francisco, buses aren't the answer because anybody with the money is going to buy a car because buses are as irregular as your grandmother and inconvenient to most places most times.

Met a bus driver in Flushing though, played hoop against Bill Russell. A lot of older people are agreeing with me. Should I retire, or become a professor of rhetoric?

Help wanted: Cartoonist to spice up this column. Is Doonesbury relevant?

Hark: I hear a lynching parts. Actually, I believe that it's all in your head man.

Psychopathic cyclers

To the Editor:

It is no wonder to me why so many bicycles that are parked on campus become maliciously destroyed or stolen during the course of the academic year. The reason is clear. Simple revenge. People who have been hit or who have been likely targets for the bike-riding student body, merely wish to express their displeasure towards these psychopathic cyclers who cover the campus in a net of terror.

No pedestrian is safe from the onslaught of vicious ten-speeds and other such two-wheeled vehicles when they try to pass from class to class, from hall to hall. Only with the death or possible maiming of a student will these people learn that speed kills.

It is my personal experience that tells me where the concentration of possible injury can be found. Living in Southwest I have the great fortune to have to walk through the Tunnel of Love that separates the campus from Southwest. This one spot alone houses some of the worst offenders of the cycle of safety laws.

Reaching speeds in excess of the national highway limit, many a Southwest freshman has been sideswiped or witnessed the death of a fellow inmate. This I feel could be damaging to the learning system encouraged by UMass. The cyclers, however, have made their trips almost a sporting event.

Soon we will have the day when limbs and other paraphenalia being transported by the pedestrian will be given point value and raced after accordingly. Let's say 10 points for loss of vision in one eye, 25 for both, 20 for loss of limb, 35 for complete removal of a vital organ, and so on. The first person to accumulate 100 points gets the UMass Oak Leaf Cluster.

One would tend to worry about the day the class of '05 visits the campus for its reunion. It is feasible that a cyclist could major in the activity and receive his degree for his efforts.

I myself, would be unable to face life had I caused the death of a lively fellow student by the use of my bike. I would cringe at the sight of the headstone which would possibly read, "Here Lies A UMass Freshman — Killed By A Schwinn".

Bringing these facts together, I ask the bicycle-commuting population to slow down and possibly save the life of another. Remember, "Learn as if You Were to Live Forever; Live as if You Were to Die Tomorrow".

Shoot a hunter today

To the Editor:

It has been my contention that sport hunting is a brutal unnecessary carnage which has been supported by the gun and ammunitions manufacturers and carried out by those people who enjoy killing for fun. That is not to say that sport hunting cannot be denfended. After all; if hunters don't kill our wildlife, who will? You can't depend on the Federal government to do everything.

Hunters defend their sport on the premise that if the animals were not killed, they would starve anyway. It seems that all animals considered to be of interest to hunters are overpopulated far beyond natures control. It is nice to know that nimrod is putting himself out to save so many animals from starvation.

Let us apply this principal to the starving people of the world or better yet, to hunters. Indeed, they frequently overpopulate the countryside thus doing harm to each other in the form of hundreds of hunting accidents each year. Let us join together in the spirit of wildlife management to conserve hunters by shooting one today.

Seriously sick

To the Editor:

I am not going to write a long intellectual letter about the stupidity of the person or persons involved in the weight throwing incident from George Washington Tower in the Southwest section of the campus. I am going to say, however, that these people are seriously sick. Hopefully, they will be dealt with appropriately if apprehended.

Kennedy's sacrilege

If Jimmy Carter has accomplished one thing in his quest for the Presidency, it is the near banishment — and total destruction — of Edward Moore Kennedy from the thoughts of the national electorate. And what's even more amazing is that Kennedy himself is probably the most appreciative of that fact.

Chappaquidick notwithstanding, the Kennedy charisma nationwide is as solvent as it is in Massachusetts. Yet, Carter's adept filching of the nomination, without even a challenge from the Massachusetts Senator, only strenghthens the belief that Kennedy just didn't want the demands and sacrifices that go with the pursuit of the Oval Office.

It is near sacrilege, in Massachusetts at least, that a member of the Kennedy clan would not openly covet the Presidency. Yet, from his statements of 1972, and his repeated further attempts at convincing a disbelieving public, Kennedy had no interest in seeking a job that would lay bare the family plight to a national audience.

As much as Chappaquidick seems to be a national tragedy within the minds of the American voters, it is the much more personal aspects of Kennedy's family life, the ordeal of cancer which plagued his son, and the whisperings of alcoholism linked to his wife Joan, which made his decision so firm and final!

It is not unlike the plague of suspicion that has followed Elliot Richardson through his meteoric political career; an on-again, off-again talk concerning Richardson's bout with the bottle, and his less-than-perfect and much publicized driving record. But with Kennedy it is different. It is not himself he has to defend, but his wife, his family. And the Senator is much less restrained, and much more emotional, when talking of his family.

Kennedy could contend with the rumors of Chappaquidick, his wife and family could not. It is this problem, the swirl of rumor and suspicion that accompanies the Kennedy name, which influenced the Senator concerning the fragility of his family. He is the father of the three families, the patriarch of a clan which draws its strength from the last surviving brother, and it is he, alone, who realizes the importance of his being an ever-present father-confessor — a job that would conflict with the duties of the Presidency.

Kennedy also, much more than anyone had at first realized, likes being a Senator. The trappings of the office are much less demanding than the Presidency, less apt to promote the public airing of the family problems. He has had to live under the cloud of suspicion since 1969, a cloud that expands and contracts with every utterance of a Kennedy Presidential candidacy. He would rather be the "Senior Senator from Massachusetts," a less noble title than that sought by either Carter or Gerald Ford, but a more enjoyable and easy-going life that goes with it.

But with a third term already assured after last week's onslaught of three minor Democratic opponents, Kennedy can now settle back into the role of Senator, with no pretensions toward the Presidency, and an eager eye towards a Carter candidacy and a National Health Care bill he believes is now feasible with the help of a Democratic President.

Personally, he can settle his sights on the future candidacy of his nephew Joseph; the talk already being that the Kennedy machine is eyeing a Congressional seat for the 23-year-old. They had hoped to run Joe for the late Torbert McDonald's seat, but with political newcomer Ed Markey winning the Democratic nomination, they must now cast their glances elsewhere.

In essence, Kennedy can relax, and now guide his nephew into the political realm. As campaign manager, Joe developed his own political contacts, intermeshed them with his uncle's political fruits, and must now be considered the next Kennedy in line for a Congressional seat. The mantle will soon fall to Joe, and with it, the inherent problems that go with the family name.

TWPAIC

Some years ago the late humorist H. Allen Smith coined an expression which was really an abbreviation "TWPGTM". It's pronounced "twupguttem" and stands for, "The wrong people got the money". It's one of my all-time favorites. He cited several twupguttemists and their pecuniary profligacies, none of which Providence has inspired me to remember.

Still I know the basic way of going about identifying your average twupguttemist. Look for someone who is absolutely rolling in lolly and observe how he spends it. Jen Thorsen is a twupguttemist. He is a Danish film producer who is so loaded with the filthy green that he is at a loss for what to do with it. Or rather was at a loss until six months ago.

He has spent the meantime rallying support for his latest film project. (And if this isn't bad taste at its zenith, I'm the Pope's son). Brace yourself vicar! He plans to make a pornographic film of Jesus Christ's sex life. According to the weekly magazine "The Economist" the script includes Christ riding a motorcycle, making love to Mary Magdalene, and pursuing a homosexual affair. Which makes this reporter wonder if Pontius was the type to kiss and tell? I'm sure the film will do well for, to paraphrase H.L. Mencken, no one ever went broke underestimating the taste of the general public.

Pricked to action by the recent shenanigans and pronouncements of our country's and, indeed, world leaders I am coining an expression of my own — "TWPAIC" — pronounced "twapake". It means "The wrong people are in charge."

Ronald Reagan, the cowboy who rendered us his dismal third-rate imitation of Teddy Roosevelt for over a year, was asked why he favored outlawing the use of marijuana while he had no such similar feelings toward alcohol. His reply, "If the pilot of a plane was drunk you could tell but if he were high you couldn't". TWPAIC!

Then there is Hubert Humphrey, the Minnesotan ambassador of obtrusive goodwill and uselessness. Humphrey, in the Detroit Tiger's bullpen last month discovered that if the players consigned there wanted to watch the game they had to stand. Humphrey termed this sunken bullpen "inhuman". Yes he did! He meant it too! There was Hubert Humphrey, taking a tour of Michigan's Auschwitz. TWPAIC!

Turning to the international scene, some months ago, many a horrified pair of Austrian eyes stared at their Interior Minister Otto Roesch shaking hands on television with the world's most wanted man. He is the Argentinian terrorist "Carlos". Roesch explained to his stupified countrymen that Carlos was upset that the plane he was in the process of highjacking had to make a fuel stop in neutral Austria, a country that Carlos is fond of. Carlos is merely wanted for murder, kidnapping, and other assorted misdemeanors. A well-deserved TWPAIC!

And finally there is the case of Lester Maddox, whose contributions to the advancement of civil rights have endeared him to blacks and whites alike. Last week Lester told reporters "I've been oppressed. There are a lot of clubs I couldn't get into, even as a delivery boy". Lester's never been much of one for clubs though; he is partial, I hear, to ax handles. Double TWPAIC!

Spouting rhetoric on abortion

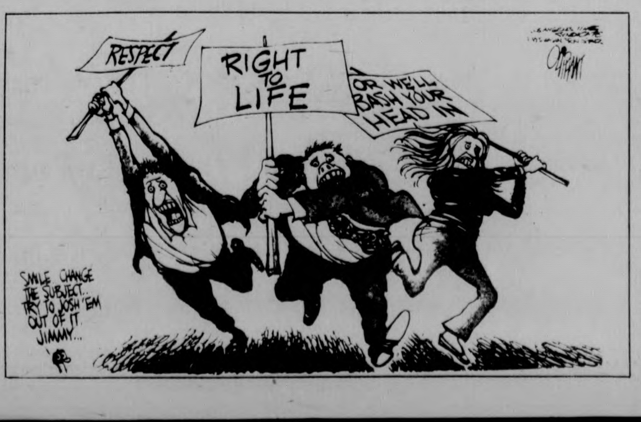
The question of a woman's right to abortion, an issue which has been dormant for some time, except among hard-core right-to-life groups, is once again in the public eye. Ellen McCormick made it a campaign issue, and both Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford have spoken out on the subject. In October, the Supreme Court will rule on whether or not states may deny financial assistance (i.e. Medicaid) to low income women for non-therapeutic abortions.

The candidates are both spouting rhetoric, Carter being "personally opposed," but against a constitutional amendment banning abortion, and Ford being for the amendment; but in the end neither man will have much effect on an anti-abortion amendment.

The Supreme Court, however, will be setting a crucial precedent with its October decision, because the court will be ruling on whether or not poor women have as much right to abortion on demand as rich women do.

Money has always been able to buy an abortion. The right doctor combined with the right amount of money, and no wealthy woman ever had to worry about carrying an unwanted baby to term. Just as the rich have always had access to contraceptives, so have they always had access to abortion, without the humiliation involved in seeking financial aid to help terminate a pregnancy. Unfortunately, it is generally poor women who have a greater need for abortion services.

Anti-abortion groups argue that abortion is murder for the mother's convenience. Yet very often the poor are ignorant of methods of contraception, and have children who are unwanted and for whom they are financially unable to care. Should the court rule that states may deny Medicaid support for abortions, they will be helping to bring such unwanted children into the world, and they will be saying in effect that the states, because they dispense Medicaid payments, have control over the bodies of poor women.



RESPECT
RIGHT TO LIFE
OR WE'LL BASH YOUR HEAD IN SMILE. CHANGE THE SUBJECT.. TRY TO JOSH 'EM OUT OF IT JIMMY...
OLIPHANT

Abortion is not a pleasant or easy thing for a woman, especially for a poor woman who does not have the comfort of a private doctor and hospital room that money can buy. However, as it now stands, poor women at least have the means to get abortions. Should the court rule to deny Medicaid recipients the right to non-therapeutic abortions, by saying that states may refuse to subsidize such abortions, it would be, according to Karen Mulhauster, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League, "discrimination ....(because) poor women can be denied abortions, while rich women are not."

Should the court discriminate against poor women in this way, it may also mean that back-alley butchers, with their knitting needles, catheters and coat hangers, will once again be the only ones willing to give a desperate, broke women an abortion on demand.

Health information questions answered

Through the cooperation of the staff of the Health Education Department of the UMass Health Services, and the families of the Infant-Toddler PlayGroup, Dr. Jim Able, the pediatrician for both the Valley Health Plan and Student Health Services through University Health Services will address the group on basic health issues of young children, including immunizations, contagious illnesses, colds and coughs, bumps and bruises, and also field questions from those attending.

If anyone and his-her family is enrolled in either insurance plan, this is an excellent time to meet Dr. Able and also obtain valuable information. This program is open to all interested parents.

Able will look at many of these issues from the view of the child who is enrolled in any group setting, and address some questions concerning the problems-concerns about health issues for children in groups.

Other programs will be offered on alternate Wednesday nights covering nutrition, motor development in young children, Contraception, First Aid and Emergency Treatment, and Sexuality and Young Children. Dates and times of these workshops will be available shortly.

Contact Susan Mackey at 665-2885 or 545-2403 for information.

Veteran's Coalition benefit dance

The Veterans' Coalition for Community Affairs will hold a Benefit Dance-Concert on Wednesday in the Hatch. The event will begin at 8 p.m. The band will be "Offering", a local group. Proceeds from the event go to the coalition Discharge Upgrading program.

Weight reduction prog instituted

A new program of weight reduction will be introduced in a series of 12 meetings this semester designed by University Health Services staff members Dean Allen (Clinical Psychologist) and Lisa Lambiase (Clinical Nutritionist). There will be a coordinated program including behavioral and situational management as well as individual nutrition counseling and some exercise. This multi-faceted approach has been shown to be the most effective in promoting lasting results.

Participants must be at least 15 lbs. overweight and should be willing to make a firm commitment to the program (including regular attendance). There will be two separate groups:

—Tuesdays 8:30-10 a.m. First meeting Sept. 28 or —Thursdays 4:30-6 p.m. First meeting tomorrow.

All meetings will be held in Hills North, Room 222. A maximum enrollment has been set, so plan on coming early or telephone ahead (549-2671, ext. 137) to reserve a place.

Anthro organization meets today at 3

The undergraduates in the Anthropology department, under the guidance of Assistant Prof. Alan Swedlund, who is presently the department's director of undergraduate studies, are holding an organizational meeting today at 3 p.m. in Machmer E25.

All members of the Five-College community are cordially invited. This includes majors and non-majors who have an interest in Anthropology.

The meeting's purpose is to discuss departmental activities which will be carried out during the fall semester. Also, it is to introduce the undergraduates to the various options available following graduation, in addition to the many subdisciplinary fields.

The faculty have recently been concerned with the apathy of the student body in that the enrollment in various courses was particularly low at the commencement of the semester with an increase during the add-drop period. With the benefit of such an organization, the undergraduates involved will become more aware of the many openings available in Anthropology and will become more directly involved with the faculty in improving and strengthening this department, Swedlund said.

Labor movement flick to be shown

The Commuter Collective will sponsor the showing of "The Inheritance", a movie dealing with labor movement, today at 3 p.m.

This is the first in a series of workshops sponsored by the People's History Project, a group funded by the collective.

The project will be putting out a calendar of events of people's history.

Schorr decision delayed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Ethics Committee yesterday postponed until today a decision on whether to cite CBS reporter Daniel Schorr on contempt and criminal charges for refusing to reveal how he got a confidential intelligence report.

The committee met in private for 90 minutes and then voted 11 to 0 to delay a decision pending further discussion.

Rep. John J. Flynt, D-Ga., the committee chairman, told the open session after the executive meeting that at one point the panel had agreed unanimously to come to a vote this morning.

But the vote was "vacated," he said, apparently because of objections from members that the issue had not been adequately discussed.

"The chair was pressing for a vote," he said.

After the meeting, Rep. Floyd D. Spence, R-S.C., the ranking Republican member, told reporters he was hopeful a decision could be reached Wednesday.

"This is a very serious matter which would have very far-reaching consequences," he said, referring to a possible citation of Schorr and its constitutional ramifications.

"People need to think about it."

Earlier, the committee voted 6 to 3 to close its meeting to the press and public.

Schorr appeared last week before the ethics panel under subpoena. The committee wanted to know who gave him a secret intelligence report that he subsequently turned over to Village Voice, a New York weekly newspaper.

Schorr ignored nine explicit warnings from Flynt that refusal to answer opened him to the possibility of a contempt of Congress citation and criminal charges that could bring a fine or imprisonment.

It appeared doubtful then and now that the committee could muster enough votes to cite Schorr.

The committee has been widely criticized for calling Schorr as a witness since he had said repeatedly he was protected by First Amendment rights in refusing to reveal a source of information.

At least six of the 12 committee members have indicated that they will oppose a vote of censure on Schorr.

Young Teamster

MANKATO, Minn. [UPI] — The pickup truck wobbled erratically down U.S. 169 south of Mankato.

Minnesota highway patrolman Bob Nelson wheeled his patrol car around, turned on his siren and flashers. When he came alongside, "I got my first clue."

The driver was sitting on the edge of the seat, straining to see through the windshield. The truck started veering — toward the center marker. Cars were whizzing all over, Nelson said.

Finally, the driver drove into a ditch, got out and started to run, but was quickly caught.

He was an 8-year-old who had stolen the truck from a farmer's yard.

He said he had "practiced," but this was the first time he had driven on the highway. He was turned over to juvenile authorities.

"He was normal size for an 8-year-old," Nelson said, "but I don't think he drives like a normal 8-year-old."

Decision makers aided by PULSE

PROJECT PULSE is Gallup-type poll project conducted as an information gathering service for various decision makers on campus. A weekly telephone survey is used to collect student opinion information on various issues, especially current events. The PULSE services also include MINI-PULSE, which is designed to handle 4 or 5 very short questions and sent to students through campus mail.

PROJECT PULSE is a component of SAREO, the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, which is organized under the Vice-Chancellor's Office, but works independently of the administration.

During the fall semester, PROJECT PULSE will poll the student body on such issues as the Campus Center food service facilities, student affairs, Mass PIRG, and election issues.

The services of PROJECT PULSE are available to Student Affairs agencies, and individuals and agencies representing campus groups.

Inquiries regarding PROJECT PULSE and requests for survey services should be addressed to PROJECT PULSE, SAREO, 229 Whitmore, Telephone 545-2687. The director is Maynard Davis and the assistant director is Joseph J. Weglowski.

Ed school future topic of discussion

Tonight at 7:30 in the Student Union Ballroom, the Undergraduate Executive Committee of the School of Education will sponsor, for the first time, a school-wide meeting for students.

Distinguished speakers will be Grace Craig, acting dean of the School of Ed.; Richard Clark, assistant dean for Teacher Education; Michael Schwartz, director of the Undergraduate Advising Office; and special guest Dwight Allen.

Subjects to be covered will include the future of the school and our new dean, Mario Fantini; teacher certification in Massachusetts; teacher education programs in the school; and the present status of Special Education in the Commonwealth.

It has always been the desire of the faculty and administration of the school to get as much direct undergraduate contribution as possible, but students haven't always been motivated enough to participate. Recently, the Undergraduate Executive Committee was organized to study current school problems and raise the levels of student involvement. This meeting is a move in that direction.

State officials outline cuts

BOSTON [UPI] – Computers instead of people process the 3,200 person payroll for Massachusetts unemployment compensation operation, cutting state costs per paycheck by 75 per cent, a state official said Tuesday.

Authors of the report said last spring adoption of the guidelines could cut state costs by $319 million annually.

But last week, Human Services Secretary Jerald Stevens said the estimated savings in his operation alone were overblown by $25 million.

Howard Smith, secretary of economic affairs, outlined the savings as he and other top state officials detailed progress implementing the 807 recommendations of the Governor's Management Task Force.

"the need to control government spending has never been greater," Smith told the cabinet meeting.

"These projects will help us provide needed services more responsibly and at lower cost."

Smith said his department would "study and or implement" all but nine of the 51 recommendations pertaining to his operation. Processing costs for paychecks have been trimmed from 92 cents to 23 cents per check, he said. But report's projected annual saving of $1.6 million in the department's annual budget of $13.5 million was too high, Smith said.

An estimated saving of $950,000 was "more conservative and realistic estimate" for the recommendations under consideration, Smith said.

Other agencies outlined similar progress.

Clerks and investigators for 27 Massachusetts boards of registration licensing everything from physicians to hairdressers should be centralized to make the boards more responsive to consumer complaints, Consumer Affairs Secretary Christine Sullivan said.

The agency planned to adopt 32 of the 42 recommendations outlined in the report, Miss Sullivan said, with next year's budget reflecting many of the recommendations.

Jobs offered

Project PULSE, the student attitude and opinion survey project on campus, still has several openings for work-study students to work as telephone interviewers on Wednesday evenings. The work is interesting and provides experience in working with people. Applicants must have 3-6 hours available for work on Wednesday evenings from 5:00 to 11:00.

Interested students are welcome to stop by the PULSE Office, 229 Whitmore, or call 5-2687 or 5-2640.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, September 22 – Born today, you are one of those persons who needs space – space for his physical self, space for intellectual expansion. You cannot happily survive in the midst of surroundings that crowd either your bodily or mental expression; nevertheless, you are quick to adapt outwardly to such circumstances and for that reason, you are capable of being productive, regardless of the situation. You are willing to work just as hard for the honor that may derive from success as for any material benefits. Highly communicative, you have no difficulty getting across to others your ideas, whether simple or complex, accepted or experimental.

You not only enjoy mysteries, you are drawn toward attempts at unraveling them. Your wish to understand all that goes on about you forces you to enter into all manner of problem-solving activities. You will at times forfeit the profit that comes of career activities in order to partake of those dedicated to the solving of puzzles in other areas. You enjoy great freedom of mind and spirit, but you need to enhance that freedom with that of an intellectual nature -- and you feel that you cannot possess the latter without an understanding of the hidden aspects of everyday experience.

Something of a visionary, you tend to see in the mundane things quite out of the ordinary, and often you are in the long run proven right in what you have "seen."

Thursday, September 23

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your keen interest in the work of those destined for high places may in the long run serve you well. Enjoy time with new friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – The discovery of hidden talent may be just what is needed to bring your goal within your reach at this time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – What you cannot account for, you would do well to forget -- for the time being. Don't try to force issues into the open at this time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – A question of apparel may cause considerable disharmony both at home and on the employment scene. Make an effort to explain your motives.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Professional Aquarians may vie with those Aquarians in the business world for a larger slice of the financial pie. In-fighting brings disharmony.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Your intuitive knowledge may be quite remarkable today, particularly as it touches upon the activities of loved ones at a distance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Domesticity looks very good to you today. Don't make yourself uncomfortable by attempting that for which you are ill-prepared.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your ability to invent ways and means of doing things may cause you more trouble than satisfaction today. Have a care.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Originality pays off early in the day, but you would do well to stick to established methods late in the afternoon and evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Your tendency to take things more seriously than they are meant makes this a day frought with disappointment.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Treat in a kind and loving way all whose paths cross yours today. This is no time to stand on ceremony; relax and swim with the tide.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your artistic taste may make it impossible for you to appreciate another's work. You can, however, appreciate his effort, and say so.

Solar movement suggests dreams possibly valuable

By KIT WALKER
and ROB HENRY

The Sun and Moon are still in Virgo, the sign of critical analysis. Last night there were a number of creative aspects involving Venus, Jupiter, and Saturn, hopefully helping us wake up to a new sense of creative harmony. But at 8:18 a.m. the Virgo Moon formed a square to Neptune (the dream planet) in Sagittarius (the sign of wisdom) so if you had some dreams, why not write them down. They could offer some symbolic insight into your present state of affairs.

Mercury is still in Virgo, and going backwards at that, so we can expect that our mercurial communication will be valuable only as a means to understand our own selves. Moreover, criticism won't work if we aren't its object first.

The recent turn-around of Jupiter, too, will be turning us inward. As it moves backwards into the material sign of Taurus, we'll have to discover what it is we have to give.

The coming new moon in Libra will be bringing about a beginning of relationships with the understanding that the old ways are not going to work. We can't make secret agreemtns but rather, we must find open ways to become more productive. If we have not developed the gifts we have been given to share, then we will be barren, and unable to bear fruit. We may feel new ties becoming more solid, with an understaading that working on ourselves is an absolute prerequisite to opening to others. We have to take off our own clothes before we can ask someone else to go naked. So let's button up our birthday suits, while taking off our silly coats of armor.

Tonight, at 5:58 p.m. to be exact the Sun moves into Libra, the sign of The Scales, and thus marks the Fall Equinox. The four corners marked by the equinoxes and solstices are the turning points of Earth's year. They are the time-pivots of Day and Night, the Self and the Community, the lessor whole and the Greater Whole. As such, these times should be special moments of alertness and participation for all of us.

Since the Spring Equinox (Aries), the days have been longer than the nights, reaching a peak at the Summer Solstice (Cancer). But now the nights will grow longer than the days, reaching a peak at the Winter Solstice (Capricorn). In terms of the cycle of the year, the self-assertion of Aries went thru Taurus and Gemini to reach the enduring sense of personality of Cancer. That, in turn, went thru Leo and Virgo to become the "relating with others" of Libra. Personality (Cancer) must express itself (Leo) and then analyze and criticize itself (Virgo), in order to reach a balanced adjustment in action with others (Libra).

Since remote and slow Pluto is in Libra, this time of year will be a relative mixture of decay and renewal in our relationships, depending on how much we've been able to clean out our hearts in Virgo.

The New Moon occurs tomorrow afternoon in Libra. Tonight, while the moons still in Virgo, let's use our critical wits to get ourselves in gear for the change. But, since the Virgo Moon is 30 degrees behind Mars-in-Libra tonight, that Virgo criticism without piscean compassion isn't the best foundation for acting harmoniously on our desires. In other words, kindness could go a long way tonight.

Aikido: Training your mind in communicating with the reality

Aikido is a Japanese Martial Art which attempts to teach us that harmony is more essential than winning, and that flow of movement is more significant than strength. To win or to lose, we need conflict of one pitted against the other. These opposing forces merge in Aikido to create a complete whole. The attacker strikes and enters into a union of movement; this action is fulfilled within the flow of the universe. Like a wave receding and expanding, the cycle of nature is a constant resolution of seemingly antagonistic forces. Aikido is a way of using these natural movements and forces in harmony with conflict.

Roughly translated Aikido means the way or practice of harmonizing spirit-essence. It is a martial art of peace and harmony. Again we encounter the dichotomy — Martial Art versus peace and harmony. Yet these are facts of life. Don Juan in his teachings to Carlos Castenada said to be aware that death was always lurking over his left shoulder. With this in mind, one can re-evaluate his life, to live more naturally, moving with the ebb and flow, the life and death, of the world.

Aikido is not practiced merely for utilitarian purposes nor for pure aesthetic enjoyment, but it is meant to train the mind to bring it into contact with ultimate reality. Furthermore we do not practice Aikido solely for self defense, although self defense becomes a by-product. With more of a universal concern for resolving conflict in a non-violent manner, we attempt to blend our actions within Aikido to a more humanistic outlook toward the world.

There exists an Aikido club on campus open to the entire community for a small membership fee. It meets Wednesday and Friday nights at 6:30 and Sunday at 2:00 in Boyden Wrestling Room 237.

Braves ink Dantley to lucrative contract

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] — Adrian Dantley, a forward from Notre Dame and a member of the U.S. Olympic gold medal basketball team, has signed a "lucrative" multi-year contract with the Buffalow Braves, the club announced Tuesday.

The announcement was made at a news conference attended by Dantley, the Braves' first choice in the 1976 draft, his attorneys and the Braves co-owners, Paul Snyder and John Y. Brown.

Although the Braves had called the news conference during the nald Dell, said terms weren't actually reached until late Monday.

"We only reached the terms late last night," he said, adding that there were a "few things" that had to be worked out.

However, Dell said Snyder "was very generous as far as the contract." He refused to give any details, but said it was "a lucrative, multi-year contract."

The braves hope Dantley can step into a starting role in place of Jim McMillian, who was sold to the New York Knicks a few weeks ago.

Dell said this was a factor in Dantley's signing because it means that he will be able to start at the "small forward" position tha tMcMillian vacated, instead of having to fight for the spot.

Dantley said he was "very happy" with the contract and the Braves were "very generous to me."

"I'm very happy to be here in Buffalo," he added. "I'm looking forward to playing with the guys on the team."

Phils ex-general manager dies

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — John Quinn, who served a total of 28 years as general manager of the Boston and Milwaukee Braves and the Philadelphia Phillies, has died at his home in Santon, Calif., after a long illness. He was 68.

A spokesman for the Phillies said Quinn died Monday night.

Quinn began his baseball front office career with the Boston Red Sox as an assistant to his father, the president of the team, and moved to the Boston Braves when his father became president of that team.

In 1945, Quinn became general manager of the Braves and helped lead the team to a National League pennant in 1948. The franchise moved to Milwaukee in 1953 and Quinn, building a team that included Hank Aaron, Eddie Mathews and Warren Spahn, won league pennants in 1957 and 1958 and the World Championship in 1957.

Quinn joined the Phillies as general manager in 1960 and spent 13 years in that capacity with the team. It was under his leadership that the Phillies had a near-miss of the National League pennant in 1964, blowing a 6 1-2 game lead with 11 games to play.

Quinn is survived by his wife, Miriam; two sons, Bob, director of scouting and minor league operations for the Cleveland Indians; and Jack, general manager of the Hawaii Islanders of the Pacific Coast League; and two daughters, Mrs. Margo Hemond and Mrs. Susan Haffley.

Funeral arrangements are incomplete.

Norton's hard work gets to spar partners

GROSSINGER, N.Y. [UPI] — Heavyweight challenger Ken Norton, who has been doing some heavy work in daily training sessions for his title fight against Muhammad Ali, is now down from four sparring partners to two.

Heavyweight Jody Ballard of Houston joined the injured list and will be through for the remainder of the sessions.

"He has severely bruised ribs and may have a fracture," said trainer Bill Slayton. "Jody's finished. He won't be able to work anymore."

The Norton camp also lost the services of another valuable heavyweight on Saturday when undefeated Fred "Young Sanford" Houpe had to leave camp with a badly cut lip.

"We only plan on boxing another two or three days," Slayton went on. "Ken can't hold back with these guys and they've all worked hard. It's unfortunate that these injuries occurred, but that's the nature of the business."

Norton, who has been working in the afternoon and doing roadwork in the morning, has moved his afternoon sessions up from 3:00 to 1:00 and will run in the evening.

"I'm going to be fighting at night," said Norton. "I may as well run at night and get used to that night air. On the 25th we'll be fighting outdoors at Yankee Stadium and this is my first outdoor fight. I want to feel comfortable. I want to go out there relaxed when I take that crown from Ali."

American football: Catching on in Japan

BERKELEY, Calif. [UPI] — Before long, contends University of California coach Mike White, American football will be just as popular as baseball in Japan.

White, who helped coach a group of U.S. Collegians in Tokyo earlier this year, doesn't think it will come to Japanese teams trading home-and home dates with their American counterparts, but, instead, provide good enough caliber football to draw strong local interest.

"I didn't know how well versed the Japanese people were on American football before I went there," recalled White of his trip. "And when we got there, it was difficult to measure what the average guy on the street thought about the game. But I know now they have more exposure to American football than I had envisioned because they get taped replay of U.S. games.

"It was a real rich experience for all of us. Because it was the first time a game of this magnitude had been staged, there was a lack of coordination, but it couldn't have worked out better."

The game, staged in the massive Olympic Stadium, drew an estimated 68,000 fans and White later admitted, "it was one of the real thrills of my life when we walked into the stadium two hours before kickoff and found the place just about filled."

The Japan Bowl was sponsored by the Newspaper Sports Nippon and featured three other nationally prominent coaches besides White. They were Jim Young of Arizona, Fran Curci of Kentucky and Lou Holtz, now coach of the New York Jets but then head of the program at North Carolina State.

Unlike baseball which was introduced by such well-known American heroes as Lefty O'Doul and Babe Ruth, football had meager beginnings in Japan. American servicemen stationed in Japan got the sport started on a club level and it has since developed into a network of school and semi-pro teams in the Tokyo and western Japan regions.

All told there are 185 teams, ranging from company teams all the way down to the junior high school level, under the jurisdiction of the Japan American Football League.

The federation was established in 1946, but the sport — referred to as "Amerug," a contraction of American Rugby — did not become popular until two or three years ago when the telecasts began.

"As near as I can trace it, interest in football came through military teams stationed in the orient," White said.

New co-capts. take over uncertain season

Tim Diskin played a big part in last year's championship team. Golf coach Fan Gaudette is hopeful that Diskin will be able to fill the leadership void, due to loss of last semester's captains.

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

If someone were to ask me to sum up the spring season of the men's golf team. I could do it perfectly with just five words. John Lasek and Glen Sullivan.

The magnificent pairing of Lasek and Sullivan totally dominated the team. In match after match, it was their consistently low scores that made the difference between winning and losing. It is doubtless that the team would have gotten as far as it did (the Nationals) without their superior play.

Lasek and Sullivan were the heart of the team, the nucleus of the atom, the foundation of the structure etc. etc. etc. Along with Rick Olson, Lasek and Sullivan provided badly needed leadership and dependability.

With the loss of these three great players, (Lasek and Olson to graduation, and Sullivan to the pros,) the fall rendition of men's golf faces big problems. The biggest of which will be the replacing of the departed giants, the filling of the massive talent and leadership voids left by Lasek, Sullivan, and Olson.

Part of the job of void-filling will be levied on everyone, but a huge percentage of the weight will fall on the new co-captains Bob Sanderson and Tim Diskin.

Sanderson, a senior, transferred to UMass from Greenfield. Bob had an excellent spring season, almost totally obscured by the heroics of Lasek and Sullivan. His trademark was solid play ear-marked by great consistency. His performances late last spring, in many of the key tournaments, showed a capacity for clutch, dependable golf.

Tim Diskin, also a senior and a transfer student (Mass Bay Community College), is eager to improve on his performance of last spring. Tim had a rather up and down season, spotted by uncharacteristically high scores. Tim had an exceptional fall a year ago, the type he needs to have this season.

Even in an off season such as the one he had last spring, Diskin has shown determination and lots of hard work. He, like Sanderson showed a determination to work hard to improve and put out 100 per cent, a trait not shown by many last spring.

Diskin and Sanderson have all the makings necessary to become this year's heroes, able replacements for Lasek and Sullivan. Whether they can put these makings together or not, only time will tell.

The fall season of 1976 will technically be one of rebuilding. It will also be a season full of questions and uncertainties, but one thing is for certain. If the team is to have any of the success it has enjoyed in recent years, a lot will have to come from Sanderson and Diskin.

Bob Sanderson, also a member of last year's championship team, will be heading a golf squad that shapes up to be a mixture of seasoned veterans and lower classmen. (Staff photos by Stuart Eyman)

Bucs split twinbill; Phils pulling ahead

CHICAGO [UPI] — Manny Trillo's single in the 13th inning scored Jerry Morales who doubled to give the Chicago Cubs a 2-1 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates and a split of a Tuesday doubleheader that left the Pirates 4 1-2 games behind the first-place Phillies in the National League East.

Rennie Stennett's two-run, two-out single in the bottom of the ninth inning won the opener for Pittsburgh 4-3.

Bob Moose came into the game in the 13th and retired the first two batters before Morales doubled over third baseman Richie Hebner's head. Trillo then slashed a single to right field to drive home Morales with the winning run.

Moose's record fell to 3-9. Paul Reuschel, the last of six Cub pitchers, picked up the victory.

The Pirates tied the score at 1-1 in the fourth when Richie Zisk walked, Dave Parker singled and Richie Hebner hit a sacrifice fly.

The Cubs scored in the third as the result of an error by Stennett. Chicago had runners on first and seond and one out when Rick Monday hit a double play ball to shortstop Frank Taveras. His toss to second baseman Stennett was dropped for an error, filling the bases, and Mick Kelleher hit into a fielder's choice to score Joe Wallis.

In the opener, the Pirates tied the game in the sixth on a solo homer by Zisk, then rallied for two runs in the ninth to win. Willie Stargell started the ninth inning uprising with a double and Parker was walked intentionally. After Hebner grounded out to advance the runners, Stennett followed with his single to left.

The Cubs threatened in their half of the ninth when Hebner booted a grounder and Trillo doubled home a run with one out.

Pirates' catcher Duffy Dyer scrambles for the tag as Manny Trillo safely scores in the 5th inning. (UPI)

Sorenson tries Celt

BOSTON [UPI] — Free agent Dave Sorenson, who tried out with the Boston Celtics last season, will try again Thursday as the squad begins preseason practice at the Massachusetts Maritime Academy.

Sorenson left the Celtics prior to the exhibition season a year ago to play with Team Roma in Italy, where he became the top scorer in the country. The 6-foot-7 forward brings the total of players in the Celtics' camp to 19.

Sorenson played 79 games with the Cleveland Cavaliers in 1970-71, averaging 11.3 points a game. He will compete with free agents Fred Saunders, Ed Searcy, Darryl Brown and rookie Norm Cook for the corner spot opened by the retirement of Don Nelson.

Rigney resigns from Giants

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Bill Rigney resigned Tuesday as manager of the San Francisco Giants effective at the end of the season, but announced he will remain with the Club's front office.

"When I took the job," the 58-year-old Rigney said, "I just took it for one year. I said then I would decide at the end of the season whether I wanted to continue.

"But I have decided in recent weeks that I have had enough of managing. It's not any special disappointment I've had this year. I've been a manager for 18 years. I've been on the field too long," he told a news conference.

Rigney was named manager earlier this year after financier Bob Lurie of San Francisco and Bud Herseth of Phoenix purchased the Giants in a last minute deal to prevent the club from moving to Toronto.

Rigney said that Lurie, a long time friend, had agreed that he should have a job "somewhere in the front office. We wanted to turn the baseball situation around here in San Francisco and we only feel we did it partly this year," he said.

It was the second time that the silver-haired Rigney, a New York Giants' infielder in the late 1940s and early 1950s, has left the job as Giants' pilot. He handled the team from 1958-60.

Ron Harris gains Yan-Con honors

New Hampshire tailback Bill Burnham, Massachusetts safetyman Ron Harris, and Rhode Island halfback Jim Hodgens have been selected as the Yankee Conference offensive, defensive and rookie players of the week following outstanding performances on the gridiron last Saturday.

Harris, ' 5'11" — 190 lb. senior from Framingham, Mass. played a stellar role in the Minutemen secondary by being in on eight tackles against Maine, deflecting a pass at the UMass five yard line, and returned five punts for 75 yards. He had a 74 yard punt return for a touchdown in the first period nullified by a clipping penalty.

Burnham, a 6' — 205 lb. junior from Dorchester, Mass., led the Wildcats to their second win of the year as he gained 169 yards in 33 rushing attempts, score one touchdown and set up another with his consistent running. Burnham has gained 339 yards in two games for New Hampshire.

Hodgens, a 6'1" — 178 lb. freshman from Brooklyn, N.Y., was the hero in a fourth period rally which enabled Rhode Island to defeat Northeastern 15-14. He gained 80 yards in 21 carries during the game and his 33 yard scamper set up one touchdown and a 25 yard punt return was a key play in the winning tally.

Sub-varsity 'looks' good

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Even though the junior varsity football team's first game is over two weeks away, coach Tom Mullen already likes what he's seen.

"We're very pleased with the enthusiasm they show," he said. "They've really been hustling."

Mullen, a first-year coach, is a 1974 UMass graduate. He played offensive tackle on the 1972 Boardwalk Bowl team, along with current coaches Clarence Brooks and Phil Roland.

Mullen has been putting the squad through its paces daily, as he and the coaching staff use the JVs as a "look team" for the varsity.

The JVs oppose the varsity in practice as that Saturday's opponent. For example, this week the JVs suited up as Harvard, who the varsity will play on Saturday.

"We may continue working with the 'look team' arrangement throughout the season, although I'm not sure if we will every week," the coach revealed.

Mullen has several varisty players, mostly freshmen, on his roster. These players dress for home games, but do not make varsity away trips. Therefore, they play with the JVs in order to receive more playing time, according to Mullen. In addition, no JV game dates conflict with varsity games, which also allows the players on the varsity roster to suit up for all home tilts.

Those varsity players include quarterback Mike McEvilly, halfbacks Cliff Pedrow and Bob Ridley, fullback Hank Sareault, flankers Chris Kurtz, John Sabatalo, and Kevin O'Connor, and split ends Dan Clerico and John Fitzgerald. The linemen are guards Steve Wojes and Karl Nyholm, and center Don Sarette.

Full time JVs on the offensive unit include quarterback John Benoit, tight end John Ferranti, and linemen Mark Foley, Bob Eakins, and Ed D'Abre.

On defense, Mullen has rovers Brian Saulin and Peter Russell, linebackers Bob Wilson and Steve Ringer, end Duncan Gillan, cornerbacks Kevin Sullivan, Chuck Vuytowicz and Norm Fredkin, and safeties Brian Heyworth, Dave Federici, and Steve LeMay to work with from the varsity. In addition, returning defensive back John Czerapowicz will help out.

The JVs, who finished at 2-3 last season, will play six games this year. UMass plays host to Dartmouth on October 8, while other home contests include arch-rivals Boston College on October 31 and Connecticut on November 7. The JVs play Army, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island away.

Offensively, the squad will use a modified veer offense. "We run exactly what the varsity runs," Mullen said. "What we're trying to give the team are the basic skills of the offense, the philosophy behind it, and a good sound understanding of the fundamentals."

Tiant reflects on 20th win

BOSTON [UPI] — Luis Tiant, called a washup at 30, laughed in the face of old age again Tuesday night by winning his 20th game for the third time in four years.

The 35-year-old Cuban marvel passed a three-hitter and struck out 12 batters in hurling Boston to a 7-1 win over the Milwaukee Brewers. The win was the 10th in the last 11 games for Tiant, 20-11. He almost was out of baseball because of a shoulder injury before the Red Sox picked him up as a free agent in mid-1971.

The milestone win gave him a forum to answer the critics who say he is too old whenever Tiant goes into a mild slump. "Everyone saying I'm 35 going on 50. That's crazy. The people talking about me are older than I am.

"I don't care what they say; I never lie about my age. I hope I can still pitch when I'm 50. It's not how old you are or how young. It's just whether you can win."

"I don't mind winning 20 any time but I prefer to go to the World Series and not win 20," said Tiant, who won 18 regular season games last year, then won three more in post-season play.

Asked if winning his first Cy Young Award in 13 major league seasons was his goal, the four-time 20-game winner said, "I don't worry about that stuff. If I win it, good. If not..."

Against the Brewers, Tiant pitched a perfect game through 3 1-3 innings and had a no-hitter until former Red Sox first baseman George Scott rocketed a triple with one out in the seventh. Scott scored the Brewers' only run moments later on Mike Hegan's groundout.

But Tiant got even with Scott, striking out the Milwaukee slugger with two men on and one out in the ninth inning. He ended the game by fanning Hegan.

"Did he lose something off his fastball late in the game?" asked Boston catcher Carlton Fisk.

El Tiant sparkles; wins 20th

BOSTON [UPI] — Luis Tiant fired a three-hitter and struck out 12 for his 20th victory and Butch Hobson and Carlton Fisk drove in two runs apiece Tuesday night as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Milwaukee Brewers 7-1 to extend their longest winning streak of the season to seven in the first game of a doubleheader.

Tiant had a no-hitter for 6 1-3 innings before George Scott tripled to deep center and then scored the Brewers' run on Mike Hegan's infield out. Cecil Cooper hit a three-run homer for the Red Sox to help Tiant to his fourth 20-victory season and third with Boston.

Russians chase NHL

The 1976 Canada Cup hockey series is over and all National Hockey League fans can breathe a sigh of relief. Team Canada, a collection of the very best Canadian born pros skated off with the cup symbolic of world hockey supremacy. Canada eliminated Russia 3-1, and then defeated Czechoslovakia 6-0 and 5-4, to take first place honors. For at least another year Canada and the NHL will be safe and secure in assuming the knowledge that the world's best hockey players are Canadian, and on the basis of results that appears to be a valid contention.

Yet having watched Team Canada play the Russians since 1972, I have concluded that the Russians, and-or Czechs, can outskate, out-pass, and out-stick handle the Canadian pros. Their physical condition is vastly superior to that of the Canadians. All this leads to the obvious question; "How does Canada win?"

A look back to the year 1946 helps answer that question. In 1946 Russia decided they would play the sport of ice hockey. Russia was not content to merely play the game; they had to have the finest team in the world. So in 1946 the Russians went to Canada and studied the world's best players, and they went home and taught their youngsters to play hockey Canadian style, which at that time was a game of speed, passing, and stick handling.

The dedication to training of the pseudo-amateur Russian athlete is well known. Therefore, it isn't surprising that it has taken the Russian sports factory only 20 years to produce hockey players comparitive to Canadian quality. But in the last four years the Russians have learned, much to their surprise and extreme displeasure, that Canadian hockey has changed considerably since 1946.

Speed and puck handling are still important, but no more important than physical intimidation, which in the NHL is often referred to as violence. The NHL has evolved into a style of play which entails dumping the puck into the opponents end, chasing it down, and relaying it to a teammate in front of the net. It is essential, when playing this style of hockey, to regain control of the puck after throwing it into the opponents zone. The best way to accomplish this is to physically separate the defensive player from the puck. In the NHL this style often includes a liberal dose of high stick and elbows.

It is also necessary to keep opposing players from in front of your own goal. The Russians, and other European teams, are discovering how small a hockey rink can seem when their forwards are being hit hard along the boards, and in front of the Canadian net. In their own zone the Russian defensemen are up against muscular Canadian forwards who thrive on a bone crunching style of play.

If the NHL expects to compete strongly with the Europeans in the future they will have to either continue playing "violent" hockey — or develop a training program comparable to the Russians.

Booters take on Bridgeport squad in season opener

By FRANK SYPEK
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team under first-year coach Russ Kidd, opens its season against highly-ranked Bridgeport College today at 3:30.

Bridgeport is basically the same team as the one that lost to UConn in the opening round of the tournament last year. The only difference is that it lost its two big guns from last year, Esterban Sorbonne and Hugh O'Neil.

Bridgeport already has two games under its belt: last week the team battled to a 1-1 tie in overtime with UConn and defeated Bates on Saturday.

UMass will start Dave Tagliavini, Tony Biladeau, Bob McChesney and Joel Mascolo at front line. The halfbacks will be Andy Moore and Mark Vasington. Co-captain Mike Parsons, Ed Niemiec, Larry Aronson and Steve Macaulay will be the fullbacks. Kidd hasn't decided between co-captain Mark Hanks or Mark Hodgdon in goal. Both goalies had excellent pre-seasons.

"We're hurting at mid-field without T.J. O'Brien," said Kidd, who plans to platoon the front lone and halfbacks today.

"Our back-up depth is ready," stated Kidd.

When Kidd wants to rest this front line he will bring in a unit consisting of freshman Mike Shannon, sophomore Mark Abbott, Mike DeCosta, and Bill Leary, who has moved up to the line from fullback.

"I'm optimistic," said Kidd. "We're bigger and faster than they are," he added. "We've worked very hard and have had a busy pre-season. We're ready."

Booter Banter: Last year the two teams played during pouring rain at Bridgeport and UMass lost 4-1 ... The booters lost their third straight scrimmage Saturday, bowing to Williams 5-1. The Ephmen led 4-0 at the half. "Williams is second only to Brown in teams we've scrimmaged this year," said Kidd ... Sweeper Steve Macaulay may move up to mid-field during the game, which will be played at the field in front of Boyden.

Netwomen meet Smithies

By PATTY AMERO
Collegian Staff

One of the strongest UMass women's tennis teams in recent years will take the courts against a "very tough" Smith College in the team's season opener this afternoon at 4:00 on Boyden Lower Courts.

Coach Kenneth Rubin said he is "very optimistic" about the results of this match against the Ivy League school.

Rubin, a graduate student here who is in his first year of coaccing women's tennis, said that although he has not seen Smith's team as yet, he knows they will be tough opposition.

Today's match will consist of nine games — six singles matches and three doubles. Junior Jennifer Ranz will be the number one singles player. The number two through six singles spots will be filled respectively by Carolyn Mooney, Kathy Sullivan, Martha Aswiszus, Caron Tsapsatsaris and Dawn Minaai.

The doubles will be played by the number one team of captain Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt, the number two team of Jeanette Flynn and Leslie Howell, and third team doubles players Sue Storer and Ann Andre.

"The team this year has a lot more depth than last year," said Rubin. "I feel the team has a lot more strength, with both strong singles and doubles players."

Each one of the six singles matches and three doubles matches counts as one point for the team that wins. The overall match will be won by the team that wins five matches out of the possible nine.

Rubin said that since there are an even number of singles matches, the doubles matches may decide the contest, even though all matches will be played simultaneously at the Smith competition only.

"A match may come down to the doubles if the singles are split," said Rubin. "Doubles could possibly make or break the match."

Rubin said he feels confident going into today's match because "the doubles players have good serves and can come to the net."

The match against Smith was rained out last year, preventing a good evaluation of that team.

But the overall qualities of the UMass team makes Rubin very confident they will win.

"The girls are really psyched for this match," he said. "We have a good team."

Rubin extended the practices for the team one day longer each week when he took over as coach this year — a move, he said, that the women reacted favorably towards.

The match scheduled for Saturday against Tufts University of Medford will not be played because Tufts defaulted, Rubin said.

Footballers TV-bound

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

About this time each fall, the three television networks begin their new seasons. Some shows return from years past, while others make their debuts on prime time.

Well, in case you're flipping the dial this Saturday looking for the college football game of the week, you'll run across a show that is a mixture of the two already mentioned.

For the first time since 1972, the UMass football team will be seen on ABC-TV's weekly game. The Minutemen will be playing Harvard, favored by many football authorities (if there is such an animal) to win the Ivy League.

Now, being on a regional game of the week telecast is no big deal for some teams. Notre Dame, USC, Ohio State, and Texas would probably be highly offended if they were only shown on a regional basis. Most of the time, schools of their ilk are seen coast-to-coast.

But for Division II teams such as UMass, TV coverage is a godsend. Initially, it took a Bowl appearance in '72 to get the Minutemen on the air. A 35-14 trouncing of the University of California at Davis in the post-season Boardwalk Bowl at Atlantic City, New Jersey was seen by the East Coast in the Minutemen's last television appearance. Prior to that game, the only other ABC appearance by a UMass team was a 1967 airing of a then Redmen-Dartmouth game.

In fact, the football team is the only UMass team to receive even that much coverage. Other than a few PBS telecasts, the basketball team has not been seen on the tube. Many of their opponents in the new Eastern Independent Collegiate Basketball League (EICBL) have been on the ECAC regional game of the week, but Minutemen have never been selected to appear on it.

So Saturday afternoon will be a big day for not only the football team, but also for the rest of the UMass athletic department. For when a college team makes a TV appearance, its school reaps some financial benefits.

According to UMass assistant athletic director Bob O'Connell, the school figures to make a healthy profit on this week's telecast. He indicated that both participating schools must first pay fees to their governing bodies, the ECAC and NCAA.

"The NCAA uses the money it receives to pay for non-revenue tournaments, such as fencing, track and field, and wrestling," O'Connell said. "The NCAA also uses the money to finance Division II and III tournaments, which don't draw as many fans as Division I events."

O'Connell isn't sure how much money UMass will receive from the telecast, but he thinks "it will be a healthy chunk of cash."

Of course, outside of the financial considerations, UMass has a great deal more to gain from the telecast. Top media coverage has eluded UMass for many years in the Boston area, so finally the athletic program here will be showcased to many people who don't know all that much about it. And, should UMass beat Harvard, it would be considered an upset and may serve to inform college football fans that Massachusetts does have a state university with a respectable football team.

When New Hampshire made a TV appearance last fall in the Grantland Rice Bowl, its football program received a big shot in the arm. It also alerted many fans to the fact that there even is a New Hampshire athletic program, because the Wildcats are hardly a household word.

Publicity is half the battle with many collegiate football teams. Many Division I schools haven't even been given half as much coerage as UMas, a Division II school in football. But on Saturdaa, UMass will receive two things its athletic department desperately needs. Recognition and money.

Netmen attempt to up record; meet undefeated UNH squad

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The men's tennis team will attempt to up its record to 2-1 as the netmen take on New Hampshire today at 2 p.m. on the Boyden courts.

UMass (1-1) recorded its first victory by trouncing B.U. 9-0, in the home opener last Saturday.

UNH (1-0 posted a win against Rhode Island in its first match of the season. Rhode Island has beaten both UMass and B.U.

Because UNH players are noted for their strength in singles, UMass coach Bill Brown has had his players concentrating on their singles game since Monday, in preparation for the match. Brown feels that the "singles should tell the story" of today's match.

The coach made no indication of any personnel changes, so expect to see the singles matches played by Adam Rosen, Alan Green, Barnaby Kalan, Jimmy Barnhart, Ricky Sharton and Steve Heyl, respectively.

The doubles pairings will be Rosen and Kalan, Green and Barnhart, and Sharton and Heyl.

Home courts and a recent victory gives UMass the advantage in today's match. However, the UNH victory over URI gives the Minutemen much to think about. Coach Brown respects the talented Wildcats, but figures "if we stay in shape like Saturday we should be OK."

Whether or not Saturday's performance can be repeated will be known today at 2 p.m.

Senate fills vacated posts

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Undergraduate Student Senate last night filled two posts within the Senate which had been opened since resignations two weeks ago.

Brian DeLima was elected to the position of speaker of the Senate, a post vacated by Annette Guttenberg who resigned amidst internal Senate controversy.

The treasurer position was also filled by the Senate last night's meeting. Thomas Kerrins, who has been serving as acting treasurer since the resignation of Henry Doyle was tapped to fill the post for the up-coming term.

A motion was porposed to postpone SGA elections until the second week in October.

The motion was later changed to read that the elections be postponed until the first week in October. Neither motions were adopted by the Senate.

Karl Allen, chairperson of the Governmental Affairs Committee said if SGA elections did not come off as scheduled, he would resign his office.

"I've been putting in about 100 hours a week on this thing," he said.

Those who supported the motion to postpone the election cited several reasons including the small number of nomination papers which had been turned in to the Governmental Affairs Committee.

"There have been 88 nomination papers accepted, said Allen.

"The committee (Governmental Affairs) voted to accept nine additional papers which have not been signed by the nominee if they are signed before the election," said Allen.

In all, it is possible to have 97 senators running for office, said Allen.

The Student Senate, however, has seats for 120 senators.

"It looks like we could have between 30 and 40 empty seats this year," said DeLima.

Opponents of the motion said the elections should be held without change or delay.

The motion was voted on twice, each resulting in a tie. In the event of a tie it is the duty of the Speaker to decide on the motion.

"I am going to start a precedent here," said DeLima.

"In the event of a tie, the chair will vote without fail to defeat the motion on the floor. I believe that if a motion cannot pass with a majority, then it should not pass," said DeLima.

Another topic of debate was a motion to delete $2,900 from the budget of Nummo News. The money had been appropriated for the purchases of four pages of color print for the weekly paper.

Debate on the amendment lasted an hour and a half as the chair had to make many rapid decisions as to the order of the procedure.

The final decision of the senate was that the budget was passed without the appropriated money for color pages however Nummo News may come before the Senate next week and present its reasons for wanting the color pages.

At that time the senate may vote to reallocate the money if it desires. The final budget was passed with Nummo News receiving over $17,000 for the entire year.

In other business, $1,500 was given to "EASYRIDER", a new type of computerized ride referral service.

The meeting closed as attempts were made to place several referenda on the election ballot.

There were five proposed referenda.

Debate centered on each referendum however the end result was that no reference will be placed on this year's Senate election ballot.

Meeting convenes to help Gethers

By KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

"Basically this meeting is being set up to help Craeman," Earl Brown said at last night's Earl Brown-Craeman Gethers Defense Committee Meeting in the New Africa House.

Both Brown and Gethers are currently serving time for the 1974 robbery of the McDonald's restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley.

Brown, who chaired the meeting is on a work release preogram from the Northampton House of Corrections.

Approximately 35 people attended the meeting and the pro's and con's of various defense strategies were discussed.

Darlene Beauchemin' from the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Oppression, said her organization wants the Brown-Gethers case "adopted as a national priority case."

The Alliance, which was involved with the Joan Little case in 1975 publishes a nation wide, monthly "alternative type of media."

When asked about the possible injurious effects of national exposure to his own case, Brown said: "Regardless of what I do to try and get my own freedom, if the judge is going to deny it, he's going to deny it."

"I think it's a little premature to go national now," Rick Townes , a student attending the meeting said.

"We haven't mustered enough support here in our own backyard," he added.

Eliot Kass, from the UMass chapter of the Revolutionary Student Brigade, said his organization would like to "re-establish the issue on campus, make it a real thing. It's been a while since anything active has happened."

Also brought up at the meeting was the case of three Black UMass students charged with the Sept. 11 robbery of the Rt. 9 Cumberland Farms in Hadley.

"I look at the case of Earl and Craemen and that's the shakiest shit ever," one student attending the meeting said.

"It's absurd and I see the same thing happening again. It's getting easier and easier to throw us in jail. I'm fearful of the entire situation," he added.

"The media will present you as a criminal if you don't have a counter package to put out," said Muhammed Ahmad, grad student in the School of Education, who was arrested in California in 1972 and released in 1973 for charges of criminal anarchy and inciting a riot.

Many people, caught up in the legal system are unable to handle the situation through bureaucratic means, said Ahmad.

"You gotta take it where they don't want it, and that's mass pressure," he added.

Similar solutions for Brown-Gethers and the three youths in the Cumberland Farms case were considered.

Earl Brown urged people who would like to help to write or visit Craeman Gethers at Norfolk prison, Box 43, MCI Norfolk, Mass. 02056.

RSO complies with guidelines

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

Affirmative Action should be dealt with in spirit than as law, says Anne E. Thorkelson, Student Senate Affirmative Action Coordinator. Thorkelson will oversee the hiring policies of over 400 Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) on campus, and make sure these organizations comply with Affirmative Action guidelines.

Affirmative Action is a series of laws designed not only to prohibit discrimination, but also requiring additional efforts on the part of employers to reach out and encourage Third World and Women to seek the jobs that have been traditionally white male, according to Thorkelson.

The term "Affirmative Action", first coined by the late President Kennedy, encompasses such laws at Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1963, the Equal Pay Act of 1963 as amended by the Higher Education Act of 1972, and Title IX, the Education Amendment Act of 1972.

What these laws amount to is that it is illegal to discriminate on the basis of sex, race, color, religion or national origin, in either employment or educational opportunity, said Thorkelson.

Thorkelson is an Affirmative Action officer, and that gives her the power to suggest to the Student Senate freezing of funds for groups that do not comply with Affirmative Action guidelines, but the spirit of Affirmative Action is what concerns her more, she said.

"To make Affirmative Action an automatic procedure, and not a hassle, is what I want to see", she said.

"And Affirmative Action is a hassle with paperwork. It's bureaucratic and cumbersome, said Thorkelson.

"Instead of a tell-your-friends hiring procedure, it is necessary to not only advertise on WMUA or in the Collegian, but also to encourage Third World people and women to apply for the positions through non-traditional channels. In many cases ther person who gets the job is the person who has been working with the group all along and knows the group's functioning. But the paperwork is necessary," Thorkelson said.

Thorkelson emphasized education in acquiring the spirit of Affirmative Action.

"You have to be bombarded with information. You have to want it. Tuesday we found out in the Collegian that women professors on this campus make several thousand dollars less every year than men do. That makes you want Affirmative Action", said Thorkelson.

A study showing that women faculty members are underpayed compared to male faculty members at UMass was released Tuesday. The average woman, who is a full professor here earns $3,015 less than her male counterpart, according to the report.

It will be a long time before Affirmative Action is accepted in spirit, she said, although she said UMass is doing relatively well compared to other college campuses in New England.

"The problem Affirmative Action is having is that it is up against a brick wall of attitudes", she said.

Thorkelson said she feels little support since Annette Guttenberg resigned as speaker of the undergraduate Student Senate two weeks ago.

Guttenberg had said she was resigning the position because Student Senate Co-Presidents Jay A. Martus and Paul M. Cronin "sold out" to the administration, and kept valuable information from her and the students.

We need to have representation in RSO groups that serve the entire University, such as WMUA and the Collegian, which reflect the views of the University. That means if we have 15 per cent blacks on campus, we should have 15 per cent black membership on the Collegian, said Thorkelson.

One problem with this is getting an accurate profile of the groups the way they break down now. Guttenberg had sent out questionnaires late last spring to all RSO groups asking for ethnic breakdowns, rates of pay, and hiring procedure. Only 8.76 of the groups responded to the survey, said Thorkelson.

Another problem is getting a profile of the entire University. Thirty-two percent of the students on campus have not reported their race or sex to the University.

Thorkelson said she not only wants to see improvements in the statistical breakdown of women

Stockbridge elects officers for the academic year

By MICHAEL SLAVIN
Collegian Staff

The UMass-Stockbridge student senate elected its four officers for the 1976-77 academic year at its meeting last night.

Elected to posts in the Senate were Brian Kelly; president, David White; vice-president, Cheryl Sylvester; executive secretary, and Michael Leonardo; treasurer.

Also announced at the meeting was the outcome of the Stockbridge freshpersons class elections.

Kevin Hollister was elected to the presidency of the class, while Maureen Golden will assume vice-presidential duties. Philip Howard was chosen as the freshperson's treasurer, Trudy Scheinost is the new secretary and James Wood is the new senator at-large.

The senate is comprised of a freshperson and a senior from each class, various club officers, class officers, representatives to the Campus Center Board of Governors and the UMass Judiciary Board.

Each class also elects two senators-at-large.

Richard Griffith was elected senior class secretary and senior class president Kevin Stuart was voted senate parliamentarian.

The 1977 senate budget was announced last night. It contains $38,450 in student dues.

The Senate also passed a motion to allocate money for the purchase of cameras for the Stockbridge yearbook.

President-elect Kelly said, "I'd like to see Stockbridge looked upon in a better light by the rest of the University. For some reason it has become sort of a joke at UMass. It's a small, together, career-oriented, two year school."

Local pediatrician discusses health care for young children

By MARY BETH ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Discussions of the controversial swine flu vaccine and preventive measures aimed at reducing childhood illnesses were the highlights of an address given by Dr. James Able last night.

About forty people, mostly parents, attended the session which is the first in a series of six sponsored by the Infant-Toddler Playgroup Parent Discussion Group.

"Basic Health Issues" was to be the theme of the meeting, conducted by Dr. Able, who is the pediatrician for the Valley Health Plan and Student Health Services.

He spoke briefly on child immunization and care of common childhood illnesses before fielding questions from the audience.

"The swine flu immunization campaign is a classic example of a hurry-up program," said Dr. Able, in response to a query from the audience.

"We don't have seven years of testing to back up the vaccine's effectiveness and safety." He had stressed earlier that polio, DPT (diphtheria, pertussis or "whooping cough," and tetanus) and measles immunizations are some of the safest and most effective medications available.

"I do not think there will be a swine flu epidemic," said Dr. Able.

"You will have to decide for yourself whether or not to immunize yourself and your children from the disease," he added.

Dr. Able said that the only age groups he recommended the vaccine for were adults over 65 and children and adults with health problems such as lung, heart, kidney and respiratory diseases, and chronic allergies and asthma.

The symptoms of the notorious influenza are those of a cold with a fever, sore throat, a painful cough, congestion in tenderness in the windpipe — many symptoms of the classic "croup."

Dr. Able then described a program for children that he believes promotes good health and reduces childhood illnesses.

"Good nutrition, exercise, environmental control and stress reduction," are the elements of Dr. Able's childhood health regimen.

"I advocate a non-smoking, dust-free, mold-free home," he said, when asked to define "environmental control."

He also maintained that breast-fed babies were better able to build up natural antibodies against disease than bottle-fed babies, and less likely to develop allergies to certain foods.

The audience, which had applauded Dr. Able's natural system, which includes avoiding useless medication and adherence to a natural diet, became defensive when he added "no fur-bearing animals" (cats and dogs) to his list of things to avoid.

Next week's topic will be "Nutrition," lead by Helene Yass, Community Health Educator.

DiGrazia speaks freely of underground gun sales

Robert J. diGrazia

By RICK GUREGHIAN
Collegian Staff

Robert J. di Grazia, the embattled yet candid police commissioner of the City of Boston, admitted last night that organized crime elements within the city, were "in the business of renting handguns".

Di Grazia, speaking before the opening meeting of the Amherst Women League of Voters, told a crowd of over 100 "It's a fact of life. Absolutely! People are robbed, their businesses ransacked, and in the process their guns are stolen and end up back on the street"!

Di Grazia, one of the most outspoken advocates of hand-gun control among law enforcement officers in the state, lauded the efforts of the League in their promotion of Question 5 on the November ballot, the referendum dealing with the outright banning of handguns in Massachusetts.

The Commissioner added "Knowledgeable citizens within the state for over a decade have been advocating hand-gun control. And despite the gun lobby, which has acted to obstruct and bring down the democratic process, we've been able to bring the hand-gun issue to a public forum".

The Commissioner was equally critical of the Massachusetts Legislature, which had passed legislation allowing the placement of an additional gun-control question on the November ballot. That question, which was supported by the pro-hand-gun forces in the state, was "an ill'conceived, unconstitutional attempt to confuse the hand-gun issue."

The Question dealt primarily with whether a person using a hand-gun while committing a crime should be given a mandatory prison sentence.

"The court's decision recently striking down the constitutionality of the Question was a victory for the citizens of this state," add di Grazia.

"The hand-gun is the nation's number one weapon used in crimes. 3,000 people were killed, and over 200,000 wounded last year by hand-guns. 75 per cent of the policemen killed in this country in 1974 were killed by people using hand-guns. It's about time we realized the seriousness of this problem and started doing something to solve it," said diGrazia.

DiGrazia focused primarily on the hand-gun issue, and reflected on the problems he has faced as Commissioner for the past four years.

He referred to the busing problem in Boston, and how over 75 per cent of the men on his force were against it. "But," he added, "their job is to enforce that law. And it's particularly difficult when you have a police force that is mostly Irish Catholic and involved in enforcing the law in an area of the city that is ethnically the same."

DiGrazia said he recognized that his patrolmen were facing a situation completely different from what they had experienced during the anti-war years of the late 60's, saying, "they're no longer facing the long-haired, hippie-types of yesteryear. Now they're out there nose-to-nose with red-haired, freckled kids, their parents, some of them even their neighbors, and it's no fun!"

A moment of irony came about in the question and answer period when a member of the Gun Owners Action League asked the Commissioner the percentage of crimes committed by "honest citizens, such as members of hunting clubs, conservation-type groups," etc. di Grazia hesitated, and then related an incident concerning the Westwood Police Department and how two officers happened upon a shooting on the highway.

Said the Commissioner, "A man had just killed his business partner at the side of the road. The two officers had pulled up at the exact moment and the man killed one officer and wounded another. Up until then," said di Grazia, "that man was an honest citizen. He was also a former New Hampshire State Trooper!

So that tells you anyone with a gun — good or bad — can kill! added di Grazia.

Paul Puryear confirms he will be next provost

By ROB GALVIN
Collegian Staff

Paul Puryear, provost at Florida State University in Tallahassee, has confirmed that he will become the new provost and vice-chancellor of academic affairs for UMass, according to yesterday's Daily Hampshire Gazette.

He has been provost at Florida State for three years, and hopes to start work at UMass in early October, the Gazette reported.

Puryear, 42, taught political science at Florida State, as well as serving as director of the Urban Research Center before becoming the provost of the Division of Social Sciences and Law there.

Earlier, he had taught at Fiske University in Tennessee, where he was chairman of the political science department and the director of the Institute of Afro-American Research.

He has also taught at Tuskeegee Institute in Alabama, where he was director of the Center for Social Research.

Puryear will succeed Robert Gluckstern, who left to become chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park in March of 1975.

The acting provost and acting vice-chancellor of academic affairs has been Dean Alfange, Jr.

SGA co-presidents defend formation of political group

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

SGA co-presidents Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus yesterday defended their roles in the formation of the Independent Student Coalition (ISC) — a group that will run a slate of at least 25 candidates in next weeks Student Senate elections.

Cronin and Martus each stated yesterday that they were aware of a fledging political group on campus about two weeks ago, but that they did not learn of the specifics of the Coalition until Monday.

Student Senator Steven H. Goldberg announced during a Monday night broadcast on WMUA the formation of the Coalition.

In a similar broadcast yesterday, Cronin read a prepared statement that said he and several senators met shortly after Annette Guttenberg resigned as speaker of the Senate on Sept. 8.

Cronin said that "many topics were discussed at the meeting, including the possibility of forming a group within the Senate that would work constructively to change the emphasis of student politics, a body that would be not only responsive to students but productive in its day-to-day workings.

Cronin further stated that he subsequently met with Goldberg "about the situation in the Senate ... Steve and I discussed all of the possibilities and left it at that," he said.

Goldberg said that he did not learn details of Goldberg's plan until Monday night. He did say that he would support the principles of the ISC.

Martus said he also attended the initial meeting about the Coalition, and that he was aware of general principals concerning the group.

He also said he did not become aware of the full scope of the ISC until Monday.

Both Martus and Cronin said they believed the concepts of the ISC were sound, and hoped that more persons would get involved in the senate.

Bryan C. Harvey, director of Communications for the Senate said that of the 97 persons who yesterday filed nomination papers for senate seats, about 25 were running under the slate, with a possibility of more joining the slate before next week's elections.

Only about 80 seats are actually being contested.

Cronin said that he does not believe that the ISC is an attempt to control the senate.

"An effort was made to recruit a relatively small group of concerned people who could have a positive influence in the Senate," he said.

He said that he did not know how many candidates were involved in the ISC. It is known that former Senate speaker Jon Hite, Goldberg, and Harvey will all be running on the slate.

Energy Office informs people of solar energy for homes

Harvey Michaels urged the members of the western Massachusetts branch of the New England Solar Energy Association (NESEA) to make their plans and ideas for the use of solar energy available to his office and to their legislators.

Michaels explained that his office was set up to advise and inform the governor, legislature and citizens about alternative energy sources and energy conservation.

State Senator John W. Olver told the group what the legislature is doing to promote the use of solar energy by homeowners and businesses. He discussed bills passed that give tax breaks to people who install solar energy in their homes.

When asked why more was not being done to promote alternative energy sources, he said "the legislature reflects the people, when more people are aware of alternative sources, there will be more legislation," said Olver.

U.S. Representative Silvio O. Conte was scheduled to appear but was unable to attend.

Richard Whiting of Whiting Oil in Holyoke read a statement prepared by Conte's office describing solar energy legislation that Conte has sponsored in the House of Representatives.

Peter Bogle, a staff attorney for the Massachusettts Public Interest Research Group spoke on bills pending in the state legislature effecting solar energy.

He stressed the necessity of citizen involvement in pushing for an alternative energy source.

"The Challenge for the Future", a film put out by the Energy Research and Development Administration was shown.

Students hear AP chief

The Associated Press Boston bureau chief addressed UMass students at a media workshop last night, and told them innovations in electronic journalism have put an even greater premium on responsible, accurate reporting.

Joseph McGowan, drawing on a career as an Associated Press reporter that stationed him in Cuba, Peru, India and several cities in the United States, said "the world for a journalist is an exciting one", but also requires a command of basic English skills, something he said he finds lacking in many novice reporters.

"Computers, video terminals, scanners and other space age innovations have made it possible to send a story around the world in a matter of seconds," he said.

Referral service will mate riders with motorists

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

EASYRIDER, the new UMass computerized ride referral system, opens its memory banks to the public today at 2:00 p.m.

According to its founder Charlotte J. Allen, EASYRIDER will provide an efficient and reliable way for people who are looking for rides to get together with people looking for riders.

Allen said yesterday the service is free, and available to the entire Five-College community.

To use the service people simply dial 545-3333 or stop by room 404 of the Student Union Building any day of the week and leave their name, phone number, and address, along with the zip-code of their destination and intended date of departure.

The computer will do the rest. The computer program is based on zipcodes, and is programmed to lead people as close as possible to their destinations in the event that no one is going exactly where a rider or driver is headed.

EASYRIDER can also be used in returning to the Amherst area by calling to see who is coming back.

There are some options on the program designed to match people who prefer to ride only with men or women, smokers or non-smokers, and pets.

In addition, those looking for someone to share the driving can indicate whether they have a standard or an automatic transmission.

Allen said EASYRIDER is not responsible for the safety of its clients.

"It's up to people to use their own discretion," she said. However, as an added precaution, people offering rides must provide their license number.

The idea of a computerized ride referral system for UMass was originated this summer by Charlie Pellet, WMUA's station manager.

WMUA's ride referral service was discontinued two years ago because the disc-jockeys could not keep up with the 30-40 calls a day.

It was replaced with Alpha Phi Omega's ride board, still operating in the Student Union Building.

Allen said the fraternity's system is "good but not the best way," because EASYRIDER will serve the entire Five-College area.

She said another advantage is that EASYRIDER will be working in cooperation with the Student Senate's auto-pool vehicles, making them available to riders.

Allen worked throughout the summer, along with Marc Zimmerman, organizing and seeking funds for EASYRIDER.

She said she has had little problem getting funds because EASYRIDER "will benefit all groups of people."

H. John Fisher, Economic Development Coordinator for a number of campus organizations will oversee the operation of EASYRIDER along with Allen.

EASYRIDER, as well as looking for rides and riders, is looking for a logo or graphic to be used in future advertising. Whoever comes up with the best one, will win a meal at Earthfoods, a bottle of wine and two tickets to see the Count Basie Orchestra.

Entries should be submitted to Room 404 Student Union by 5 p.m., Wednesday, Sept. 29. The winner will be announced Oct. 1 in the Collegian.

According to an EASYRIDER spokesperson, the computer will not choose the winner.

CIA remains unresponsive to Amherst President

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

In a letter last spring to CIA director George Bush, Amherst College President John W. Ward inquired about possible CIA associations and activities with that college's faculty and students, according to Ward.

While not requesting names, if any, of persons involved, Ward said his primary concern is where and what the activities may have been.

Responding in June, CIA director Bush wrote to President Ward that his inquiry had been passed on to another department and that, upon completion of its investigation, the findings would be forwarded to him, said Ward.

To date, however, there has been no further response from the CIA, according to Ward.

In his letter to Bush, Ward said he warned that such CIA activities on college and university campuses as had been revealed by the Senate committee headed by Sen. Frank Church (D-Idaho) "subverts the capacity" for people to believe in the independence of those institutions.

In one instance, the committee found that, during the Vietnam war, the CIA created and published, through University Press, a book which purported to be the work of persons of the academic world, specialists in South East Asia, and rendered opinions and arguments favorable to the government's Vietnam policy.

Concerning the legality of such activities, President Ward said the Church Committee found "no violation of law," but left it to the academic institutions to establish their own standards of professional conduct.

Candidates ready for first debate

[UPI] — President Ford and Jimmy Carter yesterday prepared for their first debate on the economy and domestic affairs while the current major issue appeared to be Carter's remarks on sex and religion in Playboy magazine.

While touring his peanut warehouse in Plains, Ga., Wednesday morning, Carter said he did not think it was going to hurt his campaign.

White House spokesmen would not discuss the issue and denied a Ford meeting with evangelist Billy Graham was set up to draw favorable attention to the President.

But Vice President Nelson Rockefeller said in Cleveland he never thought he would see the day "that Christ's teachings were discussed in Playboy" by a presidential candidate. "And I'm a Baptist, ladies and gentlemen," he added.

"I don't think it's hurt any," Carter told reporters.

In the interview, Carter said in sometimes earthy language he had experienced sexual temptation himself in the past and did not condemn those who had given in to it.

Carter's press secretary Jody Powell said anyone who read the interview would see that Carter's point was "judge not less ye be judged" and recalled a popular president of the past — apparently Harry Truman — who used "much earthier language."

President Ford today took time out from his preparation for Thursday's debate with Jimmy Carter to sign the largest military spending bill in history, a $104.3 billion package.

Schorr escapes legal punishment

WASHINGTON [AP] — The House ethics committee yesterday ended its attempt to punish television reporter Daniel Schorr for refusing to give the panel a copy of a secret House intelligence report or indentifying the person who gave it to him.

The panel voted 9-1 to lift the subpoenas against Schorr and three other persons involved in the publication of a classified report on activities of U.S. intelligence agencies.

Rep. Thomas F. Foley, D-Wash., said the vote effectively ends the committee's attempt to discover who gave the report to Schorr or to take legal action against the CBS reporter for refusing to cooperate in the panel's investigation.

The other three subpoenaed were Clay Felker, publisher of the Village Voice; Aaron Latham, a senior editor of New York magazine, and Sheldon Zalaznick, former senior editorial director of New York.

The decision to drop the subpoenas came after a series of votes on related motions failed to unite the committee behind a specific course of action. One would have declared "the committee does not recommend citing Daniel Schorr for contempt." It failed on a 5-5 tie vote.

Indonesia announces plot discovery

JAKARTA, Indonesia [UPI] — The Indonesian government announced yesterday the discovery of a plot to oust President Suharto and replace him with former Vice President Mohammad Hatta.

The announcement also called on Indonesians to remain vigilant and warned that sterm measures would be taken against any unconstitutional actions. It did not elaborate.

Four persons, one of them believed to be a former minister in the previous Sukarno government, were reported to have been detained in connection with the uncovered plot.

The announcement, made by the state executive secretary after a meeting between Suharto and leaders of the nation's top state institutions, said there were "indications" of such a plot in two seized documents.

Stock report

NEW YORK — [AP] — The stock market's rally of the past week came to an abrupt halt yesterday in the face of government figures that showed slack demand for durable goods.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, up 20.28 points Tuesday, had climbed another 8 by early Wednesday afternoon when the durable goods report was issued.

The average finished the day with a minus .74 reading at 1,014.05.

Gainers held an 8-7 edge on losers in the over-all count of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

In the heavy cross-currents of buying and selling, Big Board volume reached 32.97 million shares, up from 30.30 million Tuesday and the heaviest total since 34.32 million changed hands last Feb. 26.

The market began the day in an atmosphere of excitement over the Dow's breakthrough Tuesday over the top of the 960-1,010 range in which it had fluctuated since early in the year.

But the first signs of some profit-taking appeared at mid-morning, pulling the Dow back from an early gain of 5 to just 1 point at noon.

Lorber wins!

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Political newcomer Richard Lorber has been declared the winner of Rhode Island's Democratic U.S. Senate primary, defeating Gov. Philip W. Noel by 100 votes.

The state Election Board announced the official results late yesterday afternoon. The final tally gave Lorber 60,118 votes and Noel 60,018 votes.

However, John D. Lynch, chief legal councel for Noel, said he would recommend to the governor that a decision by the Election Board to throw out 160 disputed shut-in ballots be taken to court.

Lynch said the primary's outcome would be in question until the validity of those ballots was resolved. He added that possible discrepancies in Providence machine voting should also be investigated.

"As a Democrat, I would like to see that resolved," he said of Mayor Vincent A. Cianci Jr.'s claim that there were 2,937 more votes cast in Providence than there were signed voter slips at the polls.

Neither Noel nor Lorber, a wealthy car dealer, were immediately available for comment although a press aide for the governor said Noel had been in his office during the day.

Sick man may have swine flu

BOSTON [AP] — Doctors say they may have uncovered a second case of the transmission between humans of swine flu, the disease that some fear could turn into a national epidemic.

Doctors at the University of Virginia Hospital diagnosed the illness in a New York man and said they thought he caught it from another human, not a pig.

Health officials have feared a national outbreak of the disease since 11 recruits at Ft. Dix, N.J., became ill with swine flu early January.

The Ft. Dix sickness is the only concrete example of swine flu being spread between humans. The Virginia case, though known to some government health officials, was not widely reported until now.

This form of flu is common among swine and occasionally is spread from the animals to their human handlers. However, doctors are not sure how readily the illness can spread among people. The ability of the disease to travel from human to human is a crucial factor in the threat of an epidemic.

The case is described by a team of doctors from the University of Virginia Medical School in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

"Because he did not have any known contact with swine, the inference is that he represents a case of human-to-human spread," Dr. Jack M. Gwaltney, one of the authors of the report, said in an interview.

The victim, a 55-year-old radio announcer, was not identified by doctors. He was admitted to the hospital on Dec. 31, 1975, a few days after he arrived in Charlottesville, Va., for a visit.

"The man was very seriously ill," said Dr. Richard P. Wenzel, who also worked on the case. "It took a long, long time for him to recover."

His illness was not diagnosed as swine flu until after the highly publicized Ft. Dix outbreak, when federal officials warned hospitals to watch for the disease.

The doctors say they do not know from whom the man caught the disease.

"Since he did not have any contact with swine, the next best bet is that he got it from another human," said a spokesman for the federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

"We would assume that the virus was circulating prior to Ft. Dix," he said.

Three weeks before the New York man became ill, the hospital admitted a woman with swine flu, but she had had recent contact with swine on a pig farm. The two cases were not related, doctors said.

"WHY WOULD A NEW YORK STUDIO ENGINEER LIKE ME RECOMMEND SEIDEN SOUND?"

The reason is simple. I want you to get everything out of a recording that I put in.

What do I put in? Hours and hours of work, first of all. Getting just the right sound from every musician—before I even start rolling tape.

And by the time I'm finished recording the music, it'll have passed through over $500,000 worth of highly sophisticated microphones, consoles, equalizers, limiters, multi-track recorders, monitors, lathes, and more.

To get all that out, you need someone who knows as much about playback as I know about recording. That's Seiden Sound.

They've got the experience to customize a system to the characteristics of your room, and the qualities of the music you like. And they do it within the limits of the budget you set!

I recommend them because they're the best. The leading upstate sound dealer, with more brands, convenience, experience and expertise. Seiden Sound does everything better, right down to warranties and payment plans.

Seiden Sound. What I produce, they know how to reproduce.

Active friendship

To the Editor:

Oftentimes, in an institute of higher learning, such as UMass, with a student population close to 23,000, many individuals feel lost and isolated, islands unto themselves. To these students, the education process invokes fear of the eventual loss of their identity. There are ways to tackle this identity crisis, however. The fastest and the best way is to become an active participant in a school organization.

The BELCHERTOWN VOLUNTEERS are students from UMass who spend their Saturday afternoons befriending some people who live at the Belchertown State School.

Friendship takes many forms: shared conversations, cooperative play, and learning experiences. Those forms of friendship are often lacking at the state school. We try to get to know people there as individuals. Some are old, some are young, some have learning disabilities, some have physical handicaps, some of them have been labelled mentally retarded, but the experience common to all is that they are living in an institution, and that is the greatest disadvantage of all. But the people there are individuals, in need of friends, in need of the opportunity to express themselves. We try to foster those opportunities.

The BELCHERTOWN VOLUNTEERS do not need special academic backgrounds. The only qualifications are a willingness to make and be friends, and an optimistic understanding of the frustrations of others.

There will be a meeting tonight in C.C. 803 at 7:00 p.m. for all those who would like to participate in our program this semester. Please come if it is at all possible. If not, the first bus will leave Sunday Sept. 26 at 12:30 on the Whitmore side of Haigis Mall and will return at 4:30. There will be an orientation of the state school on this day. On all future weeks, the program will be run on Saturdays, same times, same place. If there are any questions call Bill at 253-5750.

Endangering acts

To the Editor:

Recent articles in the Collegian have described dangerous instances of objects being thrown or dropped from dormitories — especially the towers. We are writing to further alert dormitory residents to the urgency and seriousness of this problem, to describe steps which are being taken to resolve it, and to request the cooperation and sense of responsibility which is so essential if we are to have a safe living environment.

First, the facts must be straight about the dangers involved. In one recent incident, a student was seriously injured by a roll of toilet paper thrown from the tower. Instead of unrolling into a streamer, it became a potentially lethal missile. What may have started as "fun" resulted in a serious injury. It could have resulted in death. It should be clear to everyone that throwing anything — beer bottles, water balloons, or even paper airplanes — in such crowded conditions as Southwest is not fun. No amount of caution and concern for the well-being of others can be enough.

Secondly, we are taking immediate steps to prohibit and punish such endangering acts. Securing screens, as reported in the Collegian, is one such action. Also, according to existing policy, endangering behavior [which also includes such things as tampering with elevator doors] is punishable by expulsion from school, as well as any legal charges which are applicable. Our residence hall staff and the campus police are cooperating fully to identify persons who are endangering the health and safety of others and to take action to remove them.

Unfortunately, these steps have limited impact without the full cooperation and involvement of the residents. The removal of a security device, or dropping something from a window is a direct threat to you and to your fellow residents. While loyalty to someone you know is a virtue in some situations, the failure to confront or report someone engaging in these endangering acts is misplaced loyalty, and a failure of responsibility to yourself and to your community. From many discussions about this problem, it is clear that residents want these hazardous incidents to stop and that they will give full support to those who take the responsibility for reporting those involved.

This leads to one final point. Physical barriers, security measures, disciplinary actions and reporting are obviously not the total answer. The sense of shared responsibility we are working toward has far broader implications. It can be the basis for developing creative means of solving problems, having fun, venting frustrations and getting attention for personal needs. It can help more people begin to replace self-destruction or endangering actions with constructive actions.

While this is more subtle than dramatic instances of falling objects, and it receives less immediate attention, it is happening and it receives less immediate attention, it is happening nonetheless. At the same time we are "cracking down" on endangering persons. We are also seeking better ways of acknowledging, encouraging and learning from the many students and staff who are creating educational communities which are not only secure, but are also nurturing, stimulating and enlightening.

In defense of ROTC...

To the Editor:

As an Army ROTC cadet, I was amazed to read the column by Paul Fishman in Friday's Collegian. Paul Fishman was very misinformed about the purpose of the Army ROTC table that was set up in the Campus Center last week.

The purpose of the table was to inform people about Army ROTC as it exists on this campus. There were no official recruiters at the table at all. Cadets, male and female, were the only personnel at the table. Our primary goal was to inform the student body as to what the Army ROTC program has to offer. We feel that we have a program which all students could benefit from, regardless of whether they decide to continue on in the program or not. Our secondary goal was to find people who might be interested in trying the program, but who otherwise would not have heard about it.

Mr. Fishman's inference that Army ROTC is a program for training killers is absurd! Of the 22 branches of the Army, only five are considered to be combat oriented. The world situation requires the United States to maintain Armed Forces which must be capable of employment to any part of the world on limited notice. In order to maintain this state of readiness in time of peace requires a great deal of training and professionalism on the part of the individual soldier, both enlisted men and officers. Army ROTC's goal is to provide men and women with the skills necessary to manage other people and to motivate these people to achieve their best.

As an officer in the U.S. Army it will be my job to manage my subordinates in such a way that my mission is accomplished. Be it building a road, running a post theater, or defending a hilltop, if the mission is accomplished then the goals of the Army ROTC program will have been met.

Todd R. Higgins
Cadet Public Affairs Officer.

...and the critic responds

To the Editor:

The frantic scramble of Messieurs Spelman and the brigade of ROTC apologists to disassociate the military training of ROTC from the overt brutality of their brethren in Marine training, has that irresistable aroma of rats deserting a sinking vessel...and misses the point entirely.

Whether or not acts of savagery such as the McClure beating occur in ROTC, as well as in Marine training programs, is begging the question. If such violence were confined solely to training programs and boot camps, the I would warmly encourage the khaki-clad heathens to beat each other to a patriotic pulp.

But the McClure death was not an aberration, nor an isolated act of violence. Rather, it was symptomatic of the tacit acceptance, by the American military establishment, of warfare and aggression as legitimate forms of expression. Lynn Ed McClure's death is an albatross which every branch of the military must bear. For it is not the "pugil-stick" drill, but the brutality spawned by the military on a global scale, which is so morally repugnant.

The devastation in Vietnam, the Pentagon Papers, the secret bombing raids on Cambodia, have taught us bitter lessons about the nature of the American military. Training men for warfare has inherently been a self-fulfilling prophecy...history has shown that our armaments seldom remain idle for very long.

The recruiters on the UMass campus, be they Marine or ROTC, have dextrously attempted to ram the concept of college-level military training down our collective throats. This integration of warfare into the sphere of education, be it through weapons research on University campuses, or active recruitment in the Campus Center, is not congruent with the spiritual and moral health of this school.

The squirming reluctance of campus recruiters to take responsibility for their recruits bloodthirsty excesses is understandable. When you're trying to garner fresh bodies for ROTC, it's damn embarassing when the violence bubbles over in your neighbors ranks, and the eager young fellas start slashing their own necks. If they'd only wait a few more months, they could have stomped a "commie peasant"....but alas, boys will be boys.

I fail to see how training college men to lead soldiers into war, can be anything but sanctioning killing. Whether we are training Marines like the unfortunate Mr. McClure, or officers to lead soldiers into war — military training, in any of his dismal forms, has not place whatever in the education climate of UMass.

The dorms are a better deal

To the Editor:

This letter is in regards to the apartment complex we live in in South Amherst, namely Brittany Manor apartments.

Upon arriving at our apartment on September 1, 1976 we were kindly greeted by the permanent residents of our apartment. To date, three centipedes, five silverfish, two hornets, one cockroach, one maggot and hoards of flies.

When we first inspected our apartment in late May we noticed that the apartment was in need of repair. We promptly brought this to the attention of the apartment manager. We were told that the apartment would be brought to satisfactory condition before we moved in some three months in the future.

I also noted in my initial inspection that the temperature was unbearably hot. We were told this was because the furnace for our complex was located below our apartment. We were also told that this problem would be rectified before we moved in. Well while I am sweating typing this letter it is almost ninety degrees in our living room and about sixty-five outside of our jungle paradise.

There are also many other problems with our apartment that make it quite uninhabitable. For instance, our kitchen floor has cracked and shifted so our oven sits at a tilt. This would be great if 'angle' cakes were the in-thing.

Our encrusted, scummy and stained rug was supposedly shampooed before we move in, but it sure doesn't look it. There is also a hole in my bedroom wall where an electrical outlet once sat, doors don't close right, and we are missing a screen. But I guess that doesn't matter, the window won't stay open.

If you campus residents want to move to an apartment because you want peace and quiet keep far away: above us we can hear every footstep that is made.

The construction is so poor that you can actually hear the ceiling creaking and cracking with every footstep. Also you can hear the other tennant's dishwashers, garbage disposals, toilets, etc. If they talk loud enough you can pick up on whole conversations.

It isn't bad enough that the apartment is in bad shape but upon entering our hallway to exit our building, you'd swear you were in the John Adams dormitory on Saturday night. There are more vomit and other types of stains on the rugs that one can stand. At least at the dormitory they are cleaned after a weekend.

It actually says in paragraph three in our lease "NO PETS are permitted on the premises". I guess all the dogs I see aren't real and the dog shit we step in doesn't really exist.

We sincerely hope this letter will stimulate the management to change their ways in the near future. For $230.00 the dorms are a better deal.

Saxe, guilty..?

Seven women and seven men have been chosen thus far, to serve as jurors in the forthcoming trial of Susan Saxe, self-proclaimed lesbian, amazon and feminist. She is a 26-year-old activist who will be tried in Boston, for alleged involvement in a Brighton bank robbery in November 1970. A Boston policeman was killed in that incident.

If found guilty of involvement with the robbery, not the killing, she faces a lifelong sentence, with no parole, on a felony murder charge. Eventhough another man has admitted to pulling the trigger, she will be incarcerated for being there. Further, on a felony murder charge, the judge can't instruct the jury to find the defendent guilty on a lesser charge.

When I chose to write about Susan Saxe, I uncovered many questions about the politics of the case, within myself and from other feminists.

Because of the factionalizations of the feminist movement, there are just as many differing reactions to her case, and her cause.

The main question is not whether she will, or can, receive a fair trial. Because she can't. She is being tried in the city where a dead Boston policeman used to live. And he was a poor man with many kids to feed. Over 200 potential jurors have been dismissed because of their subjectivity to the biased male-dominated media. A motion for the dismissal of her case, due to the massive pre-trial publicity was denied, as was the motion to dismiss because of the unconstitutional exclusion of women from the Grand Jury which indicted her in 1970

She has many things going against her. Being a lesbian, feminist and leftist casts aspersions on her character in the Amerikan eye. Good thing she isn't black or the court would have another criterion for judicial repression.

She is up for grabs for two incidents; a bank in Philly was robbed of money, purportedly to finance revolutionary work, and the Newburyport Armary was liberated from secret files about military deployment of armed forces in Boston in the event of civilian uprising.

The women's movement can justify the latter more readily than an action that involves killing. The question that has been raised is, should women support armed action that is not a direct defense of oneself or others? Revolutionary actions, directly and indirectly challenge systematic oppression and repression.

It is apparent that Susan Saxe does not separate the struggle against sexism from the struggles against racism, capitalism and imperialism. For her, as with many faminists, the defenses are the same.

Unfortunately those separatist women, who because of their politics, cannot support Saxe, appear to judge her in terms of what she could have done, as opposed to what she allegedly did. In other words, she should have been working with all women as opposed to the predominately male left.

What separatists don't realize, or perhaps overlook, is that no movement will go anywhere unless all oppressed people are involved.

Involvement can reach many levels, and should encompass all colours and both sexes.

A modern day drama

And now it's time for the ever continuous, ever growing, ever boring....

SEARCH FOR A PRESIDENT

The last time, you remember, the president of the country was preparing his campaign for the upcoming presidential elections. Our story today begins with the President and the First Lady seated in the Oval Office. The First Lady is speaking.

"... And Israel and Russia and England and Brazil and..."

"Betty, don't you think you're planning a gosh-awful amount of traveling for us this year?"

"This is for me, Gerald, You'll be campaigning."

"Campaigning?"

"For president."

"I almost forgot."

"Anyway, I'm not taking any chances. I want to get in as much traveling as possible before we have to pay our own way."

"You don't have much faith in my being re-elected, do you?"

"What re-elected? You were never elected in the first place."

"I forgot."

"Still, I have all the confidence in the world that you'll be elected. Let's see, Hawaii and Puerto Rico and France and..."

The next scene takes place in Plains, Georgia, in the quiet atmosphere of the Carter residence. The family, except for Governor and Mrs. Carter, are all out this evening at their uncle's gas station. Suddenly, Mrs. Carter enters from another room.

"Dear, there's a call for you from your dentist."

"Doctor Loafaskelli?"

"Yes dear."

Anxiously, Jimmy Carter steps into the den and closes the door behind him.

"Hello? Doctor Loafaskelli?"

"Hello Governor."

"Is there something wrong?"

"Well, in a way. It's not an easy thing to talk about."

"Out with it man!"

"It's your teeth, Jimmy."

"You mean..."

"They'll have to be removed."

"Removed?"

"Yes sir."

"But I've got a debate to appear on!"

"I'm sorry but there's nothing I can do."

"But without my teeth..."

"You could try smiling less."

"That'll hurt my image."

"Try just talking without the smile."

"Talk! I talk enough as it is."

"Try talking about, well, something different."

"Something different?"

"Try talking about specifics. It'll take attention away from your teeth."

"Specifics?"

"I'm sorry Governor, but there's nothing I can do. Goodbye."

Carter slowly put the phone down and stared distantly into space.

"Specifics?"

As Governor Carter stood motionless in his den, the scene shifts to a classroom at the University for Presidents in Brunswick, New Jersey, where the new semester is just beginning for the hundreds who will graduate as potential presidents. We now hear the professor of diction and accent as he is in the middle of a lecture.

"My fellow Americans."

"Very good Johnson, next."

"My fellow Americans."

"Not bad Williams but a little more accent of 'fellow'. My fellow Americans and then wait before continuing. Now class, we've been a little slow this semester so we're going to move right along to accents. As you know, the New England accent was very popular for a while and then the southern drawl came and left. Today, we're going to work onthe accent currently in style, the midwestern apology. I'll go over it once using any topic I choose and then each one of you will continue using a topic of his own. Any questions? Good. Here we go. I'm sorry New Yorkers but. Next."

"I'm sorry New Englanders but..."

"Very good, next."

"I'm sorry social services but..."

"Excellent, continue."

"I'm sorry American taxpayer but..."

"I'm sorry equal education but..."

"I'm sorry human rights but..."

Will our next president come from this class of th University of Presidents. Will Carter snap out of it i time for the debates. Will the president still have t have his mittens clipped to the sleeves of his jacket Find out the answer to these and many othe questions you don't really care about the next time ir "Search for a President."

Is America really free?

To the Editor:

"America, America, God shed His Grace on thee, and crown thy good with BROTHERHOOD, from sea to shining sea."

"America, the land of the FREE and the home of the brave?"

In this bicentennial year it is difficult to believe that our country is still bound with the fetters of prejudice. I have heard and read of injustice to the American Black, but not until this year has it really hit home. It happened to someone I love. I have just learned that the son of a black family known and respected, Keith Dixson of Springfield, has just spent some miserable hours in jail at the State Police Barracks in Northampton. I am very angry as I write and hope as you read this you will have some of the same feelings as I do.

An armed robbery was committed in a nearby town yesterday afternoon involving four blacks and a convenience store. Five hundred dollars was stolen. It didn't take police long to find their suspects. The first car coming into campus with three young blacks in it was stopped and the young men handcuffed and put into jail. No one listened to what they were saying, they were black, that was all that mattered. "The blacks all look alike," said the man who was robbed, and he identified them as his thieves, although Keith didn't even get a look at his accusor. It didn't matter that they had no money but did have proof they had just been to a town in the opposite direction from the robbery, they were black. Neither did it matter that there were only three boys in the car. "One must have flew the coop," said their arrestors.

Keith Dixson is a third year student at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. At Springfield Technical High School he won the "Outstanding Student of the Year Award," from the Black American Nascent Groups for the Year 1973-1974. Just this year on April 25, he was awarded the "Reserve Officers Association Bronze Medal," presented by the Western Massachusetts Chapter 001 to a Military Science II cadet who has demonstrated outstanding qualities of leadership, moral character and high aptitude for Military Science.

We can only pray that the injustice done to Keith and his two black friends will not leave an indelible scar; it can. When you have won these honors and have worked all summer at menial jobs to get some of the things you want, and then someone accuses you of doing something you couldn't possibly have done, it hurts, hurts so badly you don't know how to take it.

Now I understand why the American Black feels so angry, we whites have made them that way. Just who do we think we are anyway? Are we really a FREE country? I think not. Not until ALL Americans are free of prejudice against their fellow men is America truly going to be free. How long before we rid ourselves of these fetters of racism and give equal justice to all? May God help it to be soon.

The cry of rage

To the Editor:

Today, in Lares, Puerto Rico, tens of thousands of patriots are commemorating the revolution which almost brought her independence from Spanish Imperialist rule. On September 23, 1868, for a few short days, Puerto Rico had declared her Republic and had the forthcoming recognition of other Latin American countries. But the hundreds of years of tyrannical rule were not to end on that day. Betrayal of the struggle caused her forced to be wiped out and independence was not won. Betrayals and tyranny have been the history of Puerto Rico but so have revolts against her oppressor.

El Grito de Lares was not the first instance of angry rage against colonial imposition, just as the cry for the right to self determination is not a new idea. Puerto Rico has been yanked from its autonomy to "democratic dictatorship" to the "vote without voice" to now. Many attempts have been made to muffle the public dissent of nationalists so their rage would not be known to the world.

We have in the U.S. now, five Puerto Rican Nationalists who have been imprisoned for over twenty years for their attempts to make the struggles of their people known. Also, a woman from New York, Lureida Torres, was imprisoned this year for refusing to testify to the grand Jury concerning political activities.

You see, the endeavors continue. This letter is not enough to inform all of you of the efforts of the Puerto Rican people for their rights. We need unity among Puerto Rican brothers and sisters here to get the participation of other communities by informing them of the activities dealing with the struggles. We need to encourage the interest to achieve the solidarity and support of the people who are now in the dark and do not understand the screams of indignation.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Housing program tonight on WMUA

In response to the student uproar over the requirement for living on campus, WMUA Public Affairs will be presenting a special program entitled "housing".

The program will have guests Lynda Wierenga, Resident Hall Assignment Coordinator, and Bob Campbell, Director of Housing and it will be hosted by Bill File, Public Affairs Director for WMUA.

This program is an attempt by WMUA Public Affairs to provide an opportunity for both the Housing Office and the students on campus to air their opinions concerning the housing requirement.

As the Housing Office does not actually make the rules, students will be asked to petition the Trustees of the University in order to bring light to the subject once again and possibly move towards an amendment or change of the rule.

"Housing" will be aired live on "off the hook" at 6:20 tonight.

Listeners are invited to call in with their questions and comments at 545-2876. WMUA 91.1 FM Stereo.

Your Birthday
by Stella Wilder

Thursday, September 23 — Born today, you are inclined to spend in haste more than you earn — and to regret it greatly later on. You will from earliest childhood benefit considerably from having a manager, a partner in your affairs who will keep an eye on your funds, on how you gain them, on where you spend them. There will be times when you resent your partner, times when you will desperately wish to handle your own affairs and be responsible for your own gains and losses — but there will be more times when you will be thankful for whatever power granted you the insight you needed to take on a partner in the first place. In general, you appreciate a good manager above all else.

Although you do not need immediate favorable response to your efforts, you do ultimately need to know that what you do is appreciated and that your labors yield results. One who thrives on encouragement but tends to shrivel into an uninspired mass of unproductive activity under adverse criticism, you do your own share of praising and make every effort to avoid damning when judging another's work. Able to eventally rise above failure yourself, you are not so sure that others can do the same; thus in criticism, you try to avoid the words that imply distaste.

You have an entirely natural way of expressing yourself.

Friday, September 24

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Scientific research brings you close to the answers you seek. Take care that you don't move too fast to glimpse results.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Seek to aid another in his efforts to attain better living standards for himself and mutual loved ones.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This is an excellent day for starting a new project that puts you into direct contact with the general public. Seek a partner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Increased difficulties in your business dealings with an old friend may spell the end of a project. Be prepared to make a change.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A matter of professional jealousy makes this a difficult day. Early experiences bring new understanding; look to the past for guidance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Continuing energy is a must. Don't allow yourself room for doubt when contemplating the profit potential in a new endeavor offered in the afternoon.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You may wish to change present procedure on the employment scene where the sharing of benefits is concerned. Co-workers may complain mightily.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Don't take too aggressive a stand against what another wishes to achieve at this particular time. Make an effort to understand what lies behind the spoken word.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Be tolerant of another's temper -- and he may, in turn, be tolerant of yours. There is much to be gained through mutual aid.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Thoroughly acquaint yourself with the ideas behind the present project on the home front. You may wish to join another for a productive evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You can gain in popularity if you will take the time to develop your ideas carefully before presenting them to others for judgment.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept. 22) — Your contentedness with family life may not inspire others to great thoughts or deeds --but it does bring peace to your days.

Equality in the Community of Stars

By ROB HENEREY

Think of day and night. There are two points of the year when they're equal and two points when one of the two is at its longest. The Equinoxes and Solstices. Spring, Summer, Fall, Winter. Each of these critical points is dynamic, never static. Cyclic time, like linear time, never stops. Yesterday was the Fall Equinox. For the next six months night will be longer than day, reaching its peak at the three-month point, at the Winter Solstice. If we look at Day as the time when the Sun is totally dominant and Night as the time when the Sun moves aside to reveal a huge cosmic family of stars, in which our star is only the most local member, we can understand what the two halves of the year are about. The day half is about the individual. The night half is about the group.

Libra, the initial 30 degree segment of the 180 degree Night 'half', symbolizes, in the image of the Scales or Balance, the initial and basic recognition what we are not alone, that the 'other' may be as heavy as our self in the measure of importance. Libra is the function of cooperation, of balance, equity, justice. With Libra we can move from what is logical toward what is ethical, Virgo to Libra. From what makes sense to what makes love. We each make sense of our own world, through the analytical function of Virgo, whereas in Libra our feelings are polarized by an 'other', a partner, a 'world' to counter-balance the self. We recognize that the 'form' of life is a balanced interdependence, and that the more anything evokes a sense of balanced interdependence, the more beautiful or attractive we feel it to be. The Libra part of each of us is the part which 'feels the value' and recognizes the beauty or 'justice' in any experience.

Today, at 3:55 p.m. is the monthly New Moon, this time in Libra. In the fore-noon, the pensive Moon, still in Virgo, will be conjunct retrograde Mercury (introspection), which is 30 degrees behind Venus-in-Libra (harmony) today. The morning could be very alalytical and communicative, perhaps looking forward to, but having some hesitancy about, a really creative and harmonious partnership. In our conscious minds we may still be wondering about the practicality of simply acting on the premise of a partnership that's still developing. Perhaps such caution will guarantee that whatever we start at this New Moon today will be just as effective as it is idealistic, as sensible as it is beautiful.

By far the most important factor in the New Moon pattern is that it is (harmoniously) 120 degrees ahead of Jupiter (expansion) in Gemini, (communication), which is also retrograde (backward relative motion). So if we're feeling a little shy because we're questioning our own basic philosophy these days, today and tonight are perfect for coming out of our shells by expressing a new faith and commitment within our relationships. It's great mental weather for expanding into new connections or growing within old ones. By the end of the night, if everybody's sharing their hidden gifts, fortune will smile on creative relationships.

10,000 participate

Large IM season opens

By JEFFREY WEINER and MICHAEL SHULMAN
Collegian Staff

The successful University of Massachusetts intramural sports year was "kicked off" by touch football this week. Other sports which commence play this month include badmitton, tennis and track.

UMass intramurals is possibly the largest voluntary program on campus. Figures show that over the past academic year, an excess of 10,000 students participated in some phase of the program. The intramural sports competition is organized into three divisions: Residence Hall, Fraternity & Sorority, and Independent. Each team competes in a round robin schedule within their division. League champs then advance into a single elimination campus playoff to determine the Campus Champion in their respective sport.

The success of our intramural program can be attributed to all students competing in an organized yet completely relaxed atmosphere. Jim Fitzgerald, last years Mens Outstanding Sports Manager sums it up this way, "The Intramural program has provided an outlet for students athletic needs for quite some time. The competition and recreation has been used as a study break and as a break in monotony by many students. However, in some cases, the activity has provided relief to some very keenly competitive individuals."

There are other opportunities for students who do not take advantage of the intramural program. Recreational facilities, gymnasium, pools, bowling and handball, are also included in the general athletic program.

The unmatched successfulness of the UMass Intramural Program would not be conceivable without a staff working behind it. Director Ted Schmitt, his staff, and an advisory group of student representatives put in a maximum effort to make the program a fine one. However, success in the operation of the program not only depends on planning and execution, but on student interest and participation.

UMass to host volley workshop

Mary Jo Peppler, 1975 Superstar, 1964 Olympian, and 1976 coach of the Phoenix Heat, will conduct state-wide volleyball workshops in Massachusetts, September 25 and 26.

The Saturday (25) workshop will be held at Worcester State College, while the Sunday (26) session will run at the Boyden Physical Education Building at the University of Massachusetts.

Sessions from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. include participating in administering drills, and lectures on strategy and systems.

Originally open only to coaches, the workshops now invite all those interested in learning and improving volleyball from someone considered to be the sport's greatest strategist.

The workshop fee is twenty-five dollars. Anyone interested, contact Diane Thompson, Program Head for Volleyball and Softball, Boyden, 545-2845.

Leland Byrd, athletic director at West Virginia and league president, said the league will begin competition this year under a two division format with George Washington, Massachusetts, Rutgers and Villanova in the East Division, and Duquesne, Penn State, Pitt and West Virginia in the west.

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Bruins still have hope of compensation for losing Bobby Orr to the Chicago Black Hawks, but are powerless to set a deadline or even demand a player, Bruins' president Paul Mooney said Wednesday.

"I don't think it's likely but I can't say there is no chance" of the Bruins coming up emptyhanded, said Mooney, who conducted a tour of the renovated Boston garden.

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Pittsburgh Steeler offensive lineman Jim Clack has a bruised thigh and is listed as questionable along with three other players for Sunday's home encounter with the New England Patriots.

Women's hockey opens tonight

By SUSAN FOX
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team will open its 1976 season tonight at 7 p.m. against Springfield College in Springfield. Meeting the third placefinishers in last year's NCAA tournament on their home field will not be an easy task for the Minutewomen. The performance of the team in tonight's game will be an indicator of its ability against top-flight competition. Coach Judith Davidson think her team's main assets are passing and defense.

"Technically, our biggest strength is in our passing game and quick defense. But more than that, we have a very aggressive team, both in play and attitude. We go after the ball very aggressively and we've got a winning attitude."

"Our only real weakness is the tendency of the defense to play the ball rather than the opposing player. I want them to concentrate on guarding their player instead of going after the ball all the time."

Returning from last year's 8-4-1 team are Seniors Karen Zimmerman and Cindy Hartstone, Captains Judy Kennedy and Sue Kibling, Cheryl Meliones, Olivia Lovelace, Kelly Salls, Kathy Gipps, Lynsie Wickman and Gayle Hutchinson. The abundance of experienced players from last season's varsity is a good sing, as is the confident attitude displayed by Coach Davidson.

UMass catcher Charlie Ciccone catches one of the few pitches AIC did miss yesterday as they wolloped the Minutemen 10-1. UMass didn't hit the ball much either and one of the few to do so was third baseman Leo Kalinowski (right). (Staff photo by Dale Griswold)

AIC clouts fall batmen

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It wasn't exactly the perfect way to begin a season.

American International College, powered by a 12 hit attack and four hit pitching, overpowered the UMass baseball team yesterday, 10-1, in an eight-inning game played at Lorden Field.

AIC rapped UMass starter Chris Kirby for two runs in the first inning, four more in the third, and added another four run outburst in the fourth off reliever Dave Stoller.

While the Yellow Jackets were going to town on the Minutemen hurlers, UMass' offense could not produce a base hit until the fifth inning, when Bavel Cummings rapped a line drive off the glove of the AIC third baseman.

Designated hitter Mike Farrel was one of the big guns for AIC, as he went three-for-three, rapped out a double, scored two runs, and knocked two in. Helping out the Yellow Jacket attack was first baseman Andy Zajek, who hit a three-run homer and also drove in another with a single.

AIC split its pitching between three hurlers, all of whom did excellent jobs. Starter Ken Bourque held UMass hitless through the first three innings while striking out five, Frank Green allowed just one unearned run in his three inning stint, and Tim Carroll finished up with two scoreless innings.

AIC scored its first two runs on a two run single to left by Farrell. The four runs in the third came on a hit-and-run double off the bat of centerfielder Chris Olinski, a sacrifice fly by Zajek, a wild throw by rightfielder Neil Lojek, and another RBI single.

The Yellow Jackets finished their scoring in the next go-round via an RBI single by Farrell and the three-run shot over the right field fence by Zajek.

While the AIC bats were smoking, the UMass bats appeared to have been put in a deep freeze prior to the game. After the Minutemen left the bases loaded in the first inning, their only other scoring threat came in the sixth, when they tallied their lone run.

Leftfielder Art Weinslaw singled to center, and after a walk to third baseman Leo Kalinowski, AIC's catcher tried to pick him off first. The backstop's throw sailed into right field, and Weinslaw scored on the two-base error to give UMass its only tally.

The only other Minutemen hits were garnered by Cummings again on an infield roller, and second baseman Ed Skribiski, also of the infield variety.

Surprisingly, the best UMass pitching performance of the day was turned in by Jim Cullen, who was shifted from shortstop to the mound by coach Dick Bergquist in the sixth. He hurled three scoreless innings in his mop-up job.

A number of promoted JVs saw action in the game, including Lojek, Stroller, Kalinowski and catcher Charlie Ciccone. Only four regulars from last year's squad were in the lineup for the Minutemen. They were Cummings, Skribiski, Cullen, and first baseman Dale Stone.

Umass, whose record is now 0-1, will play North Adams State next Tuesday at Lorden Field in its next game.

Booters lose in overtime

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Bridgeport scored two overtime goals to defeat the UMass soccer team 4-2, to spoil the booters season home opener yesterday.

The Minutemen forced the overtime session with just 56 seconds remaining in the game when Dave Tagliavini rifled a shot into the far right corner of the net to tie the game at 2-2.

Both clubs missed some good scoring opoortunities in the first half. Mark Hodgdon, who was making his UMass debut in the nets, made a good diving save early in the game. UMass came back and applied some pressure, but the Minutemen could not put the ball in the net.

Bridgeport scored first when Dan Skowronski took a corner kick from Charles Jute and headed the ball right in the open side of the goal.

Just 26 seconds later, UMass pulled even when Tony Biladeau took a pass from Bob McChesney and headed the ball into the lower left corner of the net.

UMass seemed to pick up some momentum and almost scored just seconds later, but goalie Eric Swallow made two good saves on shots by Bob McChesney and Steve Macaulay, who had just moved up to halfback from sweeper.

Bridgeport had a good scoring chance, but the shot hit the top of the crossbar. The Minutemen missed yet another good opportunity when Dave Tagliavini and Bill Leary came right in on Swallow, but again could not score.

The first half ended with the score deadlocked at one all.

Bridgeport came close to scoring on two occasions early in the second half, but Hodgdon came far out of the goal to retrieve a ball that got past the defense. Mark Abbott kicked a ball that was headed for the open side of the net to save a sure goal, after Hodgdon had made the initial save.

Things looked bad for the Minutemen when Dennis Kinnevy scored on a shot that just caught the top of the net to put the Purple Knights in front by the score of 2-1.

But Tagliavini scored at the 44:06 mark to send the game into overtime.

"If anyone deserves a goal today, Tagliavini did," said coach Russ Kidd, who was making his debut as head soccer coach.

However, Bridgeport took a 3-2 lead with just 39 seconds left in the first overtime session when Dennis Kinnevy scored his second goal of the game.

The visitors wrapped up the game at the 4:03 mark of the second overtime session when Paul Knight scored on a direct kick after Kinnevy faked the shot and overran the ball.

"We played a courageous game," said Kidd. "I was upset with our corner and direct kicks," he added. "We missed a lot of first time shots."

Booter Banter: Kidd cited the play of Mark Vasington, Mike Parsons, Larry Aronson and Mike Shannon ... The final shots were 37 for UMass and 26 for Bridgeport ... Hodgdon, who didn't play a bad game, had 13 saves, while Swallow had 15 ... The booters are idle until Saturday when they face Maine.

Smith forges win, 5-2; doubles are singled out

By PATTY AMERO
Collegian Staff

Despite strong wins by singles players Martha Awiszus and Dawn Minaai, the UMass women's tennis team lost its season opener to Smith College by a score of 5-2.

UMass lost three of the five singles matches and both of the doubles.

UMass' top three singles players all lost their matches, while numbers four and five won.

Number one player Jennifer Ranz of UMass lost to Smith's Sue Silver, 7-6, 6-4.

Smith's number two player Theresa Partlow, defeated UMass' Carolyn Mooney 7-5, 6-2 and UMass' Cathy Sullivan, the third player, was defeated by Stephanie Hodel of Smith, 6-0, 6-4.

Fourth and fifth singles players had good strong aggressive games, as UMass player Martha Awiszus defeated Cynthia Barrett of Smith, 6-2, 6-0; and Dawn Minaai of UMass beat June Roberts of Smith, 6-2, 6-3.

Smith took both doubles matches with UMass' number one team of captain Nancy O'Neil and Michelle Schwartzman being defeated by Smith's Mary Bernard and Sue Bodden, 6-3, 6-0.

The second doubles match was carried to a third set with Smith's Elizabeth Sawyer and Polly Matthews taking the UMass team of Jeannette Flynn and Leslie Howell, 6-0, 7-6, 6-1.

A foot injury at practice yesterday afternoon to doubles player Karen Holt led to a last minute change in the number one team.

Coach Kenneth Rubin said, "This made a difference, since those two girls (O'Neil and Schwartzman) hadn't played as doubles partners before, and weren't used to each other." He said he is looking for a temporary number one doubles team for the eight to 10 days that Karen Holt will be out of action.

"Overall, I wasn't disappointed in the women," said Rubin. "They tried hard and played well. I was satisfied with the level of play.

"I don't go into any match saying it's easy — I just take it as it comes," he said.

"I knew we were up against tough singles players," he said. "Smith recruits for tennis, whereas UMass doesn't. UMass is pretty strong on what we have.

"Smith has always had a number one singles girl. For our number one girl to do as good as she did, it was a good match."

Sophomore Martha Awiscus said she was pleased with her game today.

"My nerve kept me really going. I wanted to make her move, and I did. I stayed on my toes throughout the whole match. I was really psyched."

Singles player Carolyn Mooney said she had heard Smith was really good.

"I felt Smith was a pretty tough team," she said.

The next match will be at Mt. Holyoke next Wednesday at 4 p.m.

Rubin said he plans on keeping his singles players' game and strategy set, while he hopes to strengthen the doubles. He said he views Mt. Holyoke as "being in the same class as Smith."

Doubles can't turn trick; netmen nipped again

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

Once again, doubles matches proved to be the downfall of the men's tennis team as two losses in three doubles matches gave the undefeated New Hampshire squad a 5-4 decision yesterday on the Boyden Upper courts.

After splitting the singles 3-3 UMass needed to win two of the three doubles matches.

Instead, the desired two matches went to the hungry UNH netmen, who now stand 3-0 on the season.

The results of the match are indicative of a weakness in the tennis team that has prevailed over the past few seasons: The failure to win doubles.

In both yesterday's match against UNH and earlier against Rhode Island, the Minutemen could not win the needed doubles matches.

If UMass could win every match in the singles competition then the doubles matches would be of little consequence.

However, to the tennis team's dismay, most matches are decided by the outcome of the doubles matches, as was the case yesterday.

In the singles matches the Minutemen came close to making up for their doubles deficiency.

Adam Rosen went three sets only to lose in a nine point tiebreaker 5-0. A tie-breaker is incorporated into a match after each player has won 6 games in a set. The first player to win five points wins the set 7-6.

Rosen lost to Jeff Arrts 4-6, 6-3, and 7-6 in what proved to be the pivotal match of the afternoon.

UMass was ahead 3-2 on wins by Alan Green over Andy Harrison (6-3,6-3), Ricky Sharton against Sam Richards (0-6,6-3,6-3) and Steve Heyl over Jeff Lynch (6-4,3-6,6-3) at the time of Rosen's match.

If Rosen had won UMass would have clinched the match with the lone doubles win.

However, this was not the case and the Minutemen needed two wins in the doubles. As fate would have it, they fell one short.

The sole win was by the third doubles team of Heyl and Sharton over Richards and Lynch of UNH (6-3,6-4).

Rosen and Kalan lost to Aarts and Harrison (6-4,6-4) while last hopes Green and Barnhart succumbed to Scott Taylor and Mark Weber 6-3 and 6-4.

Defeated in the singles were Barnaby Kalan, who went three sets with Taylor (2-6,6-2,6-4), Jimmy Barnhart (7-6,5-3 in tiebreaker, 6-0, to Mark Weber) and Rosen.

Next Wednesday the Minutemen face UConn at home at 3:00 p.m.

We wanted to cover

Emmylou and Loudon, too

Emmylou Harris
and the Hot Band
Loudon Wainwright III
Academy of Music,
Northampton
Friday, Sept. 17th
(second show)

by Mary Harris Levitan

The Academy of Music is fast gaining a reputation. Audiences and performers all seemed to get off on the theater's atmosphere. Last Friday night's show with Emmylou Harris and Loudon Wainwright III was the latest example of Academy Magic.

Wainwright nearly brought the house down during the first half of his act, as each song got more and more outrageous. When the audience had grown accustomed to his presence, however, a gradual change took place. He reached an emotional peak with the crowd fairly early, and he did well to sustain his momentum and keep his act loosely tied together.

Compared to Wainwright's looseness and questionable sense of identity, Emmylou Harris and the Hot Band came out fresh and reassured, like a well-oiled machine. They certainly were not mechanical however, as their music made the sun shine despite the weather.

Harris and the very cool and capable Hot Band played their tight country-rock material with devastating ease. Harris has a beautiful and delicate voice that requires the right harmony and instrumental arrangements, and her band knows exactly what is required of it.

Opening the set with "Amarillo," "If I Could Only Win Your Love" and Dolly Parton's "Blue Ridge Mountaintop," Harris quickly asserted that she was in top form. Her last Boston appearance, back in February, was somewhat of a disap-

The Art Overview

Art is abundant in the Pioneer Valley. The various towns of the Valley have made art available to the public through museums, galleries, libraries, and craft centers. Each of the Five Colleges in the area are represented by museums and galleries which house permanent exhibitions as well as visiting artist collections. Thanks to the Five College bus, these exhibits are readily accessible for viewing and free to the public. It is the purpose of this article to introduce the many art opportunities this area offers with the hope that they will be explored and enjoyed.

Where to begin? UMass hosts a number of galleries located at different parts of the campus. The New Africa House, Herter Art Gallery, and Student Union Art Gallery display the works and student and local artists. It is not uncommon to find innovative and exciting works of art at these galleries. The Fine Arts Gallery, located in the Fine Arts Center, houses a unique collection of contemporary drawings and prints. Thanks to the charm and uncanny acquisition talents of a splendid gentleman named Walter Kamys, the University Gallery has obtained many of their drawings at no cost. Drawings compose roughly eighty per cent of the collection as they are one of a kind and more desirable for collection than a print or lithograph.

Perhaps the most extensive Western art collection of the area is to be found at the Smith College Museum of Art. This museum contains an exquisite collection of 18th and 19th century European and American art. Also represented at the museum is Egyptian, Roman and Greek art. If your passion is 17th century Dutch Art, the museum possesses a few gems from this period in art. The museum also has a selection of modern masters including a huge wall panel by Frank Stella.

Directly across from the Smith Museum is the Hillyer Art Library which displays works by the Smith students. The library itself contains an excellent assortment of art books and art reproductions.

The Mead Art Gallery located at Amherst College has a very good American Art collection. One can also find examples of Asian, Oriental, and European art. The Bicentennial Exhibit which is on view through September 27th is outstanding and not to be missed. 1976 is the year for American art. Paintings that are often tucked away in museum basements have been dusted and cover many of the museum's walls.

Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley is the home of the John and Norah Warbeke gallery. There is a broad selection of ancient and Asian arts as well as a collection of Medieval panel paintings, sculpture and manuscript books. Visiting artists and students are also represented in their collection.

Hampshire College, the youngest of the five colleges has two art galleries on their campus. The Library Gallery is presently exhibiting a photography exhibit called, "Sheehan's Cafe", a photographic essay of a bar environment. The Centrum Gallery is the other place to view art on the Hampshire campus.

For those wishing to study various art forms, the Pioneer Valley offers courses throughout the year. The University Crafts shop located in the Campus Center has an extensive range of crafts to be explored. Tools and friendly crafts persons are there to assist you six days a week. The City Art Guild and Handworks Gallery of Northampton and the Leverett Crafts Center are three other crafts centers in the area.

Art is all around us, waiting to be taken in for our pleasure, thought and growth. A free hour, morning or afternoon is all you need.

pointment. There was a lack of emotion and a sense that everything sounded just like the records.

This time there was no lacking for emotion-charged songs and a general sense of unity within the band. The set has changed, with the addition of the Louvin Brothers' gospel song, "The Angels Rejoiced In Heaven Last Night," sung by Harris, guitarist Rodney Crowell and bassist Emory Gordy (who plays dobro on this song). Harris recorded this song with Gram Parsons during the Grievous Angel sessions. Also new, besides Parton's song, was a straight-out country rocker from the forthcoming album called "It's Alright 'Cause It's Midnight and I Got Two More Bottles of Wine."

On an emotional level, Harris' music is eloquent. Songs like "One of These Days" and "Till I Can Gain Control Again" are poignant examples. Sometimes, as in "Too Far Gone," she is gentle almost to the point of being fragile. Then she roars back with "Feeling Single — Seein' Double" or "Wheels" and she's on her own.

Perhaps Emmylou's more confident outlook has developed from a long stretch of touring. The band has been on the road since February, with only a three-week "rest" in L.A. to record tracks for the new record.

Constant playing certainly has changed the role of lead guitarist Albert Lee. Lee stepped into the large shoes of the inimitable James Burton, and was slow to develop on his own within Emmylou's band. He was barely noticeable during her February show. Friday night, however, he was showcased in four extended songs, including "Bluebird Wine" and one of his own songs, which he sang (Harris on acoustic and harmony). The song is a lightning fast country rock number and Lee went to town with amazing dexterity and taste, especially during the prolonged ending where he played nearly every country song-ending imaginable, only to wind back up again and play an even more imaginative ending. Lee's influence lets a once-complacent band rock out a little.

Maybe the most enjoyable aspect of the show was seeing Emmylou and all of the band members, and Loudon Wainwright, enjoying themselves and appreciating the audience just as the audience was appreciating them. There are some people in this area that say it is the Academy of Music itself that brings out the best in everybody. I'm inclined to agree; I've seen it happen before, too. If you haven't caught a show there yet, make a point to do it soon.

' The CIA will be closed tomorrow, it's Lucky Luciano's birthday.'

by Spencer Vibbert

When you meet him he's a cross between an aging shoe salesman and the proprietor of a local delicatessen. The pouchy cheeks, the heavy black-rimmed glasses, the ever present cigar, and of course the twinkle in the eye. He looks like he would be at home in a slightly soiled apron, belly bulging, leaning on his counter swapping stories with customers late into the evening. You have to talk a while to this genial self-effacing gentleman before it sinks in: he is Art Buchwald unquestionably the most popular political humorist in America, and probably the most widely read columnist as well.

To hear him tell it, life is a bowl of cherries. He gets paid enormous sums of money to make fun of politicians three times a week. He is carried in over 500 newspapers including Pravda and Izvestia. He will tell you how easy life has become since Watergate and the sex scandals. ("Nowadays all I have to do is open the front page of the paper, write my column, and I'm on the tennis courts by 10 a.m.") It takes him no more than an hour to write a column, and he always has a table reserved for his mid day meal at Washington's Sans Souci restaurant. He refuses to re-work columns put into book form, yet they usually sell upwards of twenty thousand copies in hard cover and another one hundred and fifty thousand in paperback.

If that isn't enough he was once told by Thurber he bore "a striking resemblance to the late Rudolph Valentino," and the late, great dean of American journalists, Walter Lippmann, called him "one of the best satirists of our time." Surely there was a time when Buchwald wasn't on top of the heap, (he now collects a whopping four thousand dollar lecture fee, and is at home as much with college audiences as Rotarians). But, as he puts it, characteristically, "I consider myself a cruise director on the Titanic; we may not get there but I'm going first class."

Born October 20, 1925 in Mt. Vernon New York the son of a curtain manufacturer Buchwald spent most of his childhood in orphanages in Queens with his three sisters. He entered the Marines at age 16 with a falsified birth certificate because, as he put it "I was afraid the war would be over before I got in it."

After three and a half years in the Pacific he took his discharge papers to the University of California at Los Angeles where, by virtue of the G.I. bill, he could edit the college humor magazine. ("Whatever the campus administration did, I opposed it.") Apparently the expatriate urge in Buchwald was great however, and before he could graduate he took a two hundred and fifty dollar war bonus and bought a one-way ticket to Paris. It was in Paris, first as a leg-man for the overseas edition of the famous New York Herald Tribune that Buchwald found fame and fortune.

His column "Europe's Lighter Side" was an immediate hit in Europe. According to one biographical note he "marched in a May Day parade in East Berlin, chased goats up and down the mountains of Yugoslavia, and climbed trees to get a better view of the races at Longchamps. He once traveled all the way to Turkey to get a firsthand impression of a Turkish bath."

By his own admission Buchwald once made a trip from Paris to East Berlin in a chauffeur-driven Chrysler to show the Communists what a "bloated, plutocratic capitalist really looked like." He remembers it was the first time the people had seen an American automobile; "they swarmed me trying to work the windshield wipers and the push-button windows."

It is generally agreed that by 1962 the editors of the Tribune realized it was time to bring Buchwald's nonsense back to America where it belonged. The adjustment was apparently easy; he had already become a veritable "institution" according to Time and had enjoyed a large readership on both sides of the Atlantic. The column he writes today is virtually the same he began in the early sixties. It is most always political in nature and only rarely in a totally serious vein. (He was moved to write a straight piece on the shabby treatment afforded Vietnamese refugees, as well as a July 4th column on what America meant to his immigrant father.)

Quite often Buchwald's method is to take a complex issue and by way of his own inverted logic drill holes through it. Thus he advocates "gun stamps" for the poor who can't afford sophisticated weaponry and must make due with often misfiring Saturday Night specials. The food shortage is dramatized by the popular hostess on Martha's Vineyard who serves her guests meat, but it is noticed, is mysteriously missing a child the day after each party.

Buchwald enjoys nothing more than reconstructing conversations between administration members. Conversations between Martha Mitchell and Helen Thomas, Nixon and his daughter Julie, high level Pentagon officials:

> The President was sitting in his Oval Office when Henry Kissinger walked in.
> "Say, Henry these photographs of the moon are fantastic."
> "They're not photographs of the moon, Mr. President, they're the latest aerial pictures from South Vietnam."
> "Vietnam?"
> "Yes, sir. There are now fifty-two million craters in South Vietnam. By the end of the year we should go over the one hundred million mark."
> "That's great, Henry. But I don't see any towns in the photographs."
> "Here. You see this series of rock outcroppings? That was a town. And over here, this bleak, flat, open space — that was a town. And here where this giant hole is — that's a provincial capital."
> "Well, you could have fooled me. There doesn't seem to be much green in the photographs."

Politically Buchwald is classicially liberal, though he eschews the term. As the excerpt above indicates, his views on Vietnam and Watergate are well known. He would say satire is certainly as powerful as unadorned moral indignation. He is openly suspicious of New Deal liberalism and doubts that government can solve every problem. (He recently reversed himself on the Kennedy health care bill, fearing another red tape morass as he describes the equally altruistic Environmental Protection Agency.) Buchwald has a healthy respect for bureaucratic incompetence. "The first thing you have to know is that the further you live from Washington the more you think things are under control...you get suspicious of any real change in Washington because it's always the same people running things...administrations change but government bureaucrats don't."

He gets over two hundred letters a week ranging from fan mail to students wanting help on term papers to form letters from The American Rifleman's Association. He got so much flak for his "gun stamps" proposal that he now believes in registering typewriters rather than hand-guns. "My secretary answers the mail and I write the columns."

Even if there is a seemingly imperturbable quality about Art Buchwald, there are a few things that make him bristle. He detests voter apathy and tells a bitter-sweet story of having to go to the post office to get registration forms for his three voting age children, only one of whom actually mailed the form in. He has a fear that many young people are without ambition and in a private moment he blames himself. "Why should he (my son) work? He's got a pretty good life at home as it is."

Not all critics are fans of Art Buchwald. Some bemoan lapses of grammar and syntax. Others see him flailing about noticably when at a loss for a solid idea. He doesn't care for elegant phrasing or heavy re-working and, some say, suffers from comparisons to Thurber and S.J. Perleman. Yet it must be admitted he is in a class by himself. Beside him Russell Baker is a shade too patrician, Arthur Hoppe only diversionary, and Nicholas Van Hoffman unnecessarily malicious. When asked if there is room for another Buchwald the authors replies he hopes not. He feels that only to the extent that people are better informed is there a market for satire. He admits the hey-day may have been the later sixties and early seventies; before the American people were so throttled by scandal that lesser issues no longer excited them. "Americans have a very short attention span." Of the competition, Buchwald speaks highest of Gary Trudeau, the creator of the Doonesbury comic strip. "It's my favorite comic strip," Buchwald exclaims, knowing full well that as go Trudeau's fortunes, so go his own.

Speaking philosophically Buchwald says, "I don't think one person in this country can change thinking...change is a cumulative, emotional effect. You only try to make people laugh and think at the same time...political humor comes out of fear, fear of larger than life figures: Lyndon Johnson, Henry Kissinger, the more powerful they are the easier it is to make fun. That's the trouble with Gerry Ford — no one thinks he's powerful."

Buchwald admits he's been offered television shows, both network and public, but claims he doesn't care for the medium. He prefers the column three times a week and the forty-odd speeches he gives a year. His newest collection, just released, Washington Leaks pictures him wading fully clothed in the reflecting pool at the Lincoln Memorial. He acts as if he could go on forever; shattering events do not shatter him. "I am an optimist, otherwise I wouldn't fly Alleghany airlines."

Early Tuesday afternoon he is met in Hartford and driven to UMass. Upon entering the Campus Center Coffee Shop he is immediately swarmed by campus media. He takes it all in stride, slowly stirring his coffee, reaching for another cigar. Does the school newspaper still carry his column? He is told it does not and he replies that it is better that way. The newspaper should develop its own writers.

Soon he will be jabbed and parried by aspiring satirists and journalists in a room in the campus center basement. Occasionally he will sit back and laugh at one of his own remarks but for the most part he is business-like and professional. He tries to answer every question. He is called a "cat journalist." No one including the questioner knows what a "cat journalist" is, but Buchwald promises to look it up.

Later he arrives at a buffet in his honor at Alumni Hall. He has changed from a soft corduroy jacket to a blue plaid suit. He eats unceremoniously, inquiring once if there's a knife available to cut the roast beef. After dinner he relaxes with a cigar, occasionally answering questions. He asks if there's a t.v. to watch the evening news. Told there is no t.v. in Alumni Hall he shrugs an o.k., it doesn't matter.

He is slightly apprehensive about the speech. How many will show up? Do college kids come out for political speeches anymore? He tells how he came to UMass six years ago in the height of the Vietnam unrest, and spoke to a group numbering in the thousands at Curry Hicks gym.

All one thousand nine hundred and forty seats in the Fine Arts Center are taken a half-hour before show time. He takes the floor with both hands raised overhead in the Nixon V. Thunderous applause. He runs through a well-rehearsed litany of one-liners, column pieces and spoofs. He is interrupted by applause 26 times.

On and on it goes, right into the question and answer period. As good a stand up comic as Mort Sahl but with a Jersey accent reminiscent of John Mitchell.

The Harvard Business School, we are informed, is responsible for the oil crisis. ("They're the ones who taught those sons of shieks how to screw the United States.") Asked to comment on Nelson Rockefeller's recent one figure gesture to a crowd Buchwald replies, "A picture usually tells a thousand words, but in his case it told two words."

Buchwald leaves the audience with a serious word about the absence of tanks and bayonets in Washington the day Nixon resigned from office and a new government was installed. He has told this one before. It bears repeating.

After the speech Buchwald marches through a parade of well wishers to the Top of the Campus lounge where yet another round of questions is to begin. He is obviously thrilled the speech went so well. It is time for the victory cigar.

Upstairs tables are pushed together. The speaker is asked to hold forth once more. He is the slowest beer drinker the Top of the Campus has ever entertained. Art Buchwald could go on talking forever.

The 1976-77 Season of the Theater Department's University Ensemble Theater of UMass will feature a wide range of comedy, drama, and opera in its two theaters in the UMass Fine Arts Center, the large Frank Prentice Rand Theater and its more intimate counterpart, The Curtain.

Two of Britain's most renowned playwrights of the last decade will open the Ensemble Theater's 22nd season. The late Joe Orton's wild farce WHAT THE BUTLER SAW, to be performed October 8-16, has been the object of enormous controversy on both sides of the Atlantic. It will be followed by the award-winning comedy ROSENCRANTZ AND GUILDENSTERN ARE DEAD by Tom Stoppard, who won last year's Tony Award for Best Play for TRAVESTIES. The Stoppard play, an ingenious behind-the-scenes look at the minor characters in HAMLET, will perform November 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, and 13.

Henrik Ibsen, the man who revolutionized world drama around the turn of the century, will be represented by his most spectacular masterwork, PEER GYNT, which carries a young man across the length and breadth of Europe in his search for fulfillment. PEER GYNT will fill the stage of the Rand Theater with fantasy and music, December 9-14.

1977 will begin with the Gertrude Stein - Virgil Thomson collaboration THE MOTHER OF US ALL, February 24-25-26 and March 3-4-5. It is an opera staged as a pageant, exploring the life and work of Susan B. Anthony through her interaction with several great Americans, including Daniel Webster, Ulysses S. Grant, John Quincy Adams, and Stein and Thomson themselves. Like all of Gertrude Stein's work, THE MOTHER OF US ALL is challenging, imaginative, and above all, highly entertaining.

This extraordinary series of exciting theater is available through inexpensive subscription. While a single ticket for any of the plays will cost $3.50 at the box office, $17.50 will purchase admission to all seven plays, an average of a $1.00 savings per seat. Patrons may also choose five of the seven productions for a total subscription price of $14.50. Special subscriptions are available for students

Theater Box Office, Monday through Friday from 1 to 5 p.m., for a subscription brochure and season calendar.

Additional information on the entire season may be obtained by calling 545-3511, or patrons may stop by the Rand

The work of three acclaimed American writers will round out the University Ensemble Theater season. Lanford Wilson's THE HOT L BALTIMORE (March 11-19) is a moving exploration of the lives of several drifters and no-accounts, whose temporary haven, the run-down Hotel Baltimore, is about to face the wrecking ball. Lorraine Hansberry, author of the landmark play A RAISIN IN THE SUN, went further in her study of protest and commitment in THE SIGN IN SIDNEY BRUSTEIN'S WINDOW, scheduled for April 8-16. And the seventh and final production, may 4-11, will be the world premiere of a yet-untitled play by Michael Melton, who received great acclaim for the April 1976 production of CHINA PRINCESS.

Feets, all Kinds

Although the month of September is devoid of any imminent dance events there are nonetheless several groups which will be performing soon.

First on the agenda is the Faculty Concert presented by the "University Dancers" on the eves of October 7-9 at 8:00 in Bowker Auditorium.

Included will be several new works performed and choreographed by faculty instructors with members of the company in attendance.

Working dedicatedly since the start of the semester, both faculty and students are sure to provide an entertaining and polished evening of dance.

Tickets are now on sale at the North Physical Education building for $1.50.

Coming our way October 30 will be the versatile "Sounds On Motion" contemporary dance company at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 8:00.

Tickets may be obtained two weeks in advance by stopping in at the Fine Arts Council Box Office which is open from nine a.m. to four p.m. and located in the Fine Arts Council building.

The renowned "National Festival Ballet of Spain" will also appear at the Concert Hall on November 19 at 8:00.

Again tickets will go on sale two weeks prior to the event at the Fine Arts Council Box Office.

Relative to the Christmas spirit and tradition is the adaptation of "The Nutcracker" to be presented by the Boston Ballet on the fifth and sixth eves of December.

Tickets will go on sale the week of November 24 for this enchanting and popular classic at the Fine Arts Council Box Office.

Incidentally, all of the Arts Council dance events are 4, 3, and 2 dollars with the exception of "Sounds in Motion" with tickets selling for 5, 4, and 3 dollars. (It's a good idea to go for tickets early to insure seeing the performance of your choice.)

Doors to the Concert Hall open one-half hour prior to each performance and there are no cameras or recording devices allowed inside.

If you have any questions regarding these events, call 5-2323 for NOPE, and 545-2511 for Fine Arts Council information.

Duke in Overdrive

There is a certain unneasurable space that all rock bands must travel in their transformation from a good local band to one of national potential, and as evidenced by Friday night's performance at The Hatch, Duke and the Drivers are very close to completing their journey.

On the surface Friday night's performance seemed to contain no concrete differences from any of the other countless performances I'd witnessed the band deliver. The fifteen song, two hour set possessed all of the raunchiness, energy, and power which over the past few years has propelled this six man outfit to the forefront of the New England music scene. As usual, the crowd response was somewhere in the vicinity of a small scale riot, with people dancing on tables, chairs, or any small piece of floor they could find. Yet, beneath this wide spectrum of similarities there persisted one subtle difference, and that difference was maturity.

And Friday night they filled The Hatch. After a fairly unassuming set by Sweet Meat, the band took to the stage to a tumultuous ovation from the jovial crowd. It was hot, and sure to get a lot hotter as they began to spew their driving rhythms through the room. They kicked it off with "I Need Your Loving" and then went right into "Rock 'n' Roll High," and with these two numbers they established an energy level from which they were never to descend. For, that is the key to their success, and it is also where they differ from the other bands of the Boston area. Where the Geils Band and Montgomery Bands draw their influences solely and directly from the blues of the South Side of Chicago, the Drivers fuse together the same broad blues base with the power and bitchiness of the Detroit rock bands

And about this time in the set it became apparent why they are called a funk band. They seared their way through "I Ain't Particular" and "Handyman," complementing double power chording from guitarists Sam Deluxe and Cadillac Jack with tight, functional rock harmonies from vocalist Rhinestone Mudflapps and keyboardman Tom Swift. This is a band which lacks the outright dynamics of an individual vocalist or the virtuosity of any single member musician, but the meshing of all their talents in direct relation to the material they have chosen is faultless.

The Drivers continued to pile thundering rhythms, building up to what was to be the peak of the show. By the time the band changed into "Money," "Rolling On," and "What You Got" the room was awash with moving bodies. The whole band shone on "What You Got" as the cascading rhythm work of guitarist Cadillac Jack, bass, and drums drove the band at a punishing rate, and guitarist Sam Deluxe took his best lead of the night. Though the guitar work of the entire night was far from flashy, it was effective, and never more so than on "What You Got." After one encore "I Got the Will" the band returned for one last rocker, and then allowed the audience to drift drained and happy out into the rain, and even though the Duke wasn't there again, he sure would've approved.

uhs a new program for Student Dependents

For the first time, a comprehensive health program for dependents of students will be available. Students who have paid the basic health fee may enroll their spouses and children at the University Health Services. Dependents will receive the same comprehensive package of services that is currently provided to students for an additional fee of $55 per semester. This is an inclusive fee and includes coverage of the spouse and all dependent children.

Parents may receive care for their children from one of the primary physicians and-or nurse practitioners or they may choose the pediatrician and pediatric nurse practitioners who are available for comprehensive child care. In addition, the program provides unlimited physician and nurse practitioner consultation as well as specialty consultation, including gynecology and pre-natal care. Inpatient care at the University Health Center is provided, as is 24-hour emergency coverage. Other dental services are available on a copayment or fee-for-service basis as time permits. Health Education services include Cold Self-Care, and programs in alcohol, human sexuality and women's health just to name a few.

The basic plan described above is designed to interface with the supplemental health insurance plan to provide total coverage for the student and family. Students and dependents enrolled in the basic health plan are urged to also enroll in the supplemental insurance plan for an additional premium of $56.50 per year for the student and $42.50 per quarter ($170 per year) for the dependents. Services covered include hospital care, surgery, delivery, termination of pregnancy, and emergency care when travelling. Please remember, however, that services other than life threatening emergencies must always be authorized in advance by a Health Services physician. Dependents who prefer not to enroll in the basic plan must pay $52.50 per quarter ($210 per year) for the supplemental insurance.

Lynyrd Skynyrd
One More From the Road
(MCA)

For this, their fifth release, the boys from ol' Skynyrd (so named in honor of their hated high school gym teacher, Leonard Skinner) have decided to unleash a two record barrage of live material recorded at a three day series of Atlanta performances. To call the set anything less than superb would be, indeed, quite an understatement. It definitely must rank right up alongside the Peter Frampton and Harry Chapin live double albums as the best of this ilk for 1976.

To begin with, the band has re-added a third guitarist. After the loss of Ed King, Skynyrd recorded Gimme Back My Bullets with only two guitarists, Allen Collins and Gary Rossman. The new man unveiled here is Steve Gaines. His best work is to be found during the rendition of Jimmie Rodgers' "T for Texas." This number really gives Gaines the opportunity to show off what he can do; his playing style is so similar to that of Dickie Betts that one would almost swear that Allman Brothers were what was being listened to. In any event, "T for Texas," with the Allman sound to it, is one of the album's highlights. Billy Powell's piano even sounds like that played by Brother Chuck Leavell. Also worth noting is that lead vocalist Ronnie Van Zant's raspy voice sounds more than just a little bit like Gregg Allman's.

Of course, this album would not be complete without live versions of Skynyrd's two biggest hits, "Sweet Home Alabama" and the show's grand finale, an eleven and one-half minute version of "Free Bird." Definitely the pièce de résistance, "Free Bird" enables Collins, Rossington, and Gaines to get down, stretch out and jam. All three axes blaze in much the same manner as they do on the preceding piece, a version of Robert Johnson's "Crossroads" which really burns.

Other top-notch tunes performed here include, among others, "Workin' For MCA" (the album's opener), "The Needle and The Spoon," "Searching," and J.J. Cale's "Call Me The Breeze." Honestly, there is not a single "dog" track on any of the four sides. Skynyrd definitely lives up to their reputation of being a fine live band capable of providing the best in Southern rock. Indeed, with the recent demise of the Allmans, they rank up at the top with Marshall Tucker in the scheme of Rebel rock 'n roll.

One More From the Road, therefore, showcases the true talents of the rowdy Skynyrd crew from start to finish. In terms of grading, Lynyrd Skynyrd receive a "fyne tyme guaranteed for all" A.

TOWER OF POWER
Ain't Nothin' Stoppin Us Now
(Columbia)

What we have here is a band that's tight enough and has enough potential to be the next Earth, Wind, and Fire. They've got the harmonies — both vocal and brass, some nice percussion work, and a capable tenor sax player in Lenny Pickett. The lead vocals by Edward McGee are not great, but they're good enough. The one department they lack in, the one that just may "stop them now", is writing. The lyrics are simple and repetitive, which is all right if all the tunes are catchy, but some of these aren't. 'Can't Stand to See the Slaughter' is downright awful, and 'Ain't Nothin' Stoppin' Us Now' and 'Make Someone Happy' are a little too bouncy. The other seven songs are all fine, and in some cases outstanding.

'By Your Side', their AM hit, is as nicely arranged and sharp a song as you'll find in modern R&B. Pickett's Jr. Walker-like tenor solos fit perfectly. 'Doin' Alright' and 'Deal With It' are pleasant ballads, and 'You Ought to be Havin' Fun' is just bouncy enough. McGee gets to show off his voice on 'Because I Think the World of You' and 'While We Went to the Moon', and sounds as smooth as can be. On 'It's So Nice', the whole band sounds like they're singing, forming one of the nicest group harmonies I've heard in some time.

Tower of Power is a group to watch, and Ain't Nothin' Stoppin' Us Now, marred as it is, is definitely an album worth having.

—Greg Tarlin

ORLEANS
Waking and Dreaming
(Asylum)

This album is best greeted with little expectations and great activity. Two listenings and you hear all that is there, but because of the slick hooks and vocal arrangements it never grates on your ear. Waking and Dreaming follows a logical progression, one that I should have anticipated from the band's success with the single off of the last album, 'Let There Be Music'. That song you may recall, became a commercial. The music on this album is entirely commercial with the lyrics contributing no great insight revelations, merely an insipid melange of cloying emotions.

Strong songs are 'Still the One', of course. It's at least as good as 'Music', maybe better. 'Waking and Dreaming' takes a while to get moving, but finishes with another good melody. And 'Reach' is easily digestible too.

What is wrong here is that as a group Orleans hasn't budged one inch from the comfortable and profitable middle of the road niche they began to slip into last year. They still can cut loose musically and the addition of Jerry Morotta frees Wells Kelly a bit. Both play drums, Kelly is also there on occasional keyboards and one distasteful throwaway vocal, 'The Bum'. Amusing, and only mildly, the first time and not so after that, the inclusion of 'The Bum' is a serious lapse in taste.

As past performance on record and live can attest, Orleans can do a lot more. This album will probably sell the best of their three available. One can only hope that with larger bank accounts, they will stop dreaming and get back down to practicing craft, not con-outs.

—Craig Roche

Blood, Sweat & Tears
More Than Ever
(Columbia)

Were it not for the distinctive voice of David Clayton-Thomas and the name Blood, Sweat & Tears on the album cover, one would be hard-pressed to identify this as a BS&T creation. However, it is just that. The current group, long since removed from the original lineup, resorts to almost nothing in the way of the dynamic brass arrangements which so successfully marked the band's past work. The two lonesome exceptions to this new failure are to be found in the songs "Hollywood" and "They." Both have the fire and spirit which is so lacking in the remainder of this album's material. The lush, sentimental ballads, such as "You're the One," are not to be raved about, nor are they to be hissed at; they are plainly mediocre. The most positive aspect to this disc is the vocal job turned in by Thomas. His voice is strong, tender, soothing, rocking; depending on what is needed to match the mood of the song he is singing. Unfortunately, his female backups add next to nothing.

Blood, Sweat & Tears will never again be the strongly influential group which they were in the late sixties, that much is evident. Still, they should be able to please more than a few sets of ears with More Than Ever, despite its shortcomings. It earns a "this effort might've been a bit better had the group put a little more blood, sweat, and toil into it" C+.

First debate seen by 100 million

PHILADELPHIA [From Collegian Services] — President Ford and Jimmy Carter, in their first of three debates, sparred, sometimes sharply, on nuclear power, amnesty for Vietnam draft evaders, and the pardon of Richard Nixon.

From the stage of the antique Walnut Street Theater, the White House rivals argued the issues and their records in a nationally televised confrontation that will shape the campaign ahead.

A nationwide audience, expected to reach possibly as many as 100 million viewers, watched the first of three televised debates between the presidential candidates.

Their meeting was sponsored by the League of Women Voters. It was the first debate between presidential candidates since John F. Kennedy and Richard Nixon matched words in 1960.

About 800 to 1,000 people demonstrated outside the theater as Ford and Carter arrived for their debate. Represented among the group were the Socialist Workers Party, the National Organization for Women, a group calling for justice in South Africa, and several demanding minority party candidates be included in the debates.

The debate was interrupted about nine minutes before its scheduled end when the audio feed broke down. During the debate Carter was asked if he considered nuclear power unsafe.

Carter, noting he is a former nuclear engineer, replied that some nuclear safety measures "have been forgotten," and he ranks that source below greater use of coal, mandatory conservation and expanded use of solar energy.

He specifically listed such safety procedures as placing atomic reactor cores below ground level, tightly vacuum-sealing each entire power plant and placing independent experts in each power plant 24 hours a day.

"Shift from oil to coal, emphasize research and development on coal use and also on solar power, strict conservation measures — not yielding every time to special interests that put pressure on the President, like this administration has done — and then atomic energy only as a last resort, with the strictest possible safety precautions, that's the best overall energy policy in the brief time we have to discuss it," Carter said.

Ford defended his policy in this regard, saying he sent Congress in 1975 the first comprehensive energy program ever set forth by an American president, taking in a full range of alternatives.

1000 sign SW petition

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

Fear of injury from the bottles, weights, and other objects that have been thrown from Southwest's towers has prompted area residents to circulate petitions supporting administrative efforts to remove offenders from the University.

The "Southwest Endangering Behavior Petition" has been signed by more than 1000 Southwest residents since it began circulating on Wednesday, and is to be presented to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery next week.

"Things are going to move slowly until someone is killed," Ann Bolger, one of the four Washington tower staff members who wrote the petition, said. According to Bolger, the staff members, all of them students, had met repeatedly during the last few weeks before deciding on the petition as both "an educational procedure and show of unity."

She said the petition would be given to Bromery in the hope he would pass it on to "anyone in the position to do something about it" who would then discuss the matter with representatives of Southwest's 5,600 residents.

One of the area's most immediate needs, Bolger said, is for welded screens in all windows, and especially in the lounges. Many of the objects thrown, she said, have come from the lounges of John Adams and George Washington towers.

In separate incidents last week, two ten-pound weights were tossed out of Washington upper, which has a weightlifting room on its 19th floor. The weights, which travelled at an estimated speed of 70-80 miles per hour, were dropped at 6:45 p.m. and 10:30 p.m. One hit a car windshield and the other broke on the pavement of the "pyramids", a popular resting spot for area residents.

In a third accident, a Thoreau resident required medical attention when he was knocked unconscious by a roll of toilet paper thrown from Kennedy.

Police said there have been no arrests, nor has any individual or individuals been identified. Campus police Captain Robert G. Joyce said the fact that the majority of objects have come from the same spot — the south side of Washington tower — would seem to indicate that the acts are the work of one person.

He also said that the incidence of objects being thrown from the towers are greater than usual this year, "as far as damage goes."

"In other years, it was basically just toilet paper and beer cans," he said. This year, objects thrown include a cinderblock, bottles, and the weights.

"Anything larger than a paper airplane can kill someone," Paul Rannenberg, John Adams head of residence said.

"In the past, the head of residence has been put into the role of policemen," he continued. "Now our only effective means of control is peer pressure."

Faculty proposal criticized

A proposal to bring the Division of Continuing Education under the jurisdiction of the Faculty Senate brought sharp criticism from the presidents of the Graduate Student Senate and the Student Government Association at a Faculty Senate meeting yesterday.

The proposal, to be voted on in October, and the subsequent rebuttals, were made at the senate's semi-monthly meeting at the School of Business Administration.

The proposal calls for the establishment of a council to preside over public service functions of the University, which includes the Division of Continuing Education, and was presented by the Rules Committee of the senate.

Michael R. Federow, president of the Graduate Senate, told the group, "The Extension Council will control the student fees that currently go to the Division of Continuing Education, the Summer Session, and the proposed extension service, as well as the University money already allocated. The second level of money that Acting Provost Dean Alfange indicated, is taking student services and programs, now run and paid for by students, and putting them outside our control."

According to Federow, due to the wording of the federal labor laws governing the formation of the Graduate Student Employees Union, there are also complications in changing the jurisdiction over student employees.

A third argument he used related to governance policy.

"The Wellman document on governance, as mandated by the trustees, requires that students have active participation in all issues relating to academic matters. This is besides the fact that student services are specifically reserved for student control. The proposed Extension Council had no student members on it. This was a direct violation of the trustee policy," he said.

The Extension Council's duties under the proposal should be to provide advice to the directors of the Division of Continuing

No AAUP bid for Mass status as lobby agent

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

The American Association of University of Professors (AAUP) has not yet filed as a lobbying organization at Beacon Hill, according to a state house official. AAUP is one of the organization vying to represent UMass faculty here and at the Boston campus in collective bargaining.

In a letter to a UMass professor, John J. McGlunn, deputy secretary for Public Records at the state house, said that AAUP "has not registered as an employer of legislative agents, nor has it filed as an organization lobbying without a paid legislative agent."

The Massachusetts Society for Professors (MSP) is competing with AAUP to represent faculty in collective bargaining. MSP does have a lobbying agent through the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) which represents 60,000 state secondary teachers, according to MSP President Larry S. Roberts.

AAUP President Joseph S. Larson said last night that lack of a lobbying agent now does not at all affect AAUP's ability to represent faculty in collective bargaining.

Larson said that AAUP can form a lobbying organization if they do represent faculty in collective bargaining. Larson added that the one lobbying organization set up by AAUP would be more affective than the large organization used by MSP.

Roberts argued that AAUP has not suggested enough dues to support a separate lobbying agent. He added that the use of MTA is beneficial since it does represent state employees while AAUP already largely represents faculty at private institutions.

"It makes one wonder how AAUP would represent faculty at public institutions," said Roberts.

NEAG announces move to Knowlton

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

Northeast Area Government (NEAG) offices will be moving in the near future from their temporary quarters in Thacher House to Knowlton House, NEAG president John Weisse announced last night.

Physical improvements such as painting and the purchasing of new furniture must be completed first. One room will be used for open meetings by the body on Thursdays from 6 to 8 p.m. The annex will be used as administrative offices for NEAG.

In order to make residents more aware of the government and its activities, Weisse said, a rotating schedule of meetings will start next week, with some dorms in the Quad hosting the meetings for two weeks in a row. A few dormitories do not have the space to accommodate the group.

NEAG meetings for the next two weeks will be held in the main lounge of Mary Lyon House at 6:15 p.m.

Revenue sharing allotments of $250 will be given to each of the nine dorms in the Quad, said Weisse. These funds are to be spent as each dorm deems appropriate. He warned that this may be the only allotment for the school year, and should be spent accordingly.

In other action, the group discussed a planned meeting between students, faculty, and administration to "determine where communications have gone wrong," according to Weisse. As now planned, it would occur sometime in late October and would include a series of speaches and discussion groups, said Weisse. He asked for a representative for the Northeast area to attend this meeting.

Organization of a Northeast area hay ride for mid-November to be sponsored by NEAG has started. Those interested in participating are asked to see their dorm representatives for details.

Elections set for Monday

By JAMES ODATO
Collegian Staff

Popular elections of Student Government Association (SGA) senators and bi-election of the Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors (BOG) is to begin next Monday and Tuesday, but a problem with a University computer may make vote-casting procedures very difficult.

The Board of Governors advise Campus Center management on policy decisions, allocate space in the building, and review and approve the Campus Center budget. The SGA is a political body who represent students and voice student opinions and needs to the administration.

Nomination papers of 88 people have been filed for senate seats. Of the possible 120 chairs, 31 have not been sought by candidates. There are openings in some BOG residential districts, but the major race is in the at-large governor slots.

Karl Allen, chairperson of the SGA's Governmental Affairs, who is running for elections, said the computer they had planned to use to count ballots is not functioning correctly, and student housing lists cannot be obtained. The housing lists are essential for vote casting procedures because they list student names, identification numbers, and residences.

According to the election officials instruction sheet, the housing list must be checked off as a student votes so a person cannot vote twice.

Allen said he is trying to obtain a copy of housing lists from heads of residences at various dorms.

"If we can get a list from each head of residence the only problem will be keeping track of commuter students," he said.

As commuter voters fill out ballots, election officials will have to check student identification cards and record names and numbers. This system, Allen said, may add 12 hours to the voting processes.

Allen said according to Ruth Green, liason officer between the administration and senate, International Business Machines (IBM) personnel are checking the computers, located in Whitmore, for malfunctions. Allen said they are confused with the computer's performance.

"Everytime they try to get the list from the computer, they can't get past the A's," Allen said, referring to the first initial of students' last name.

Commuter balloting will be in the lobby outside of the Hatch. Hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

On campus voters may cast ballots from 4 to 10 p.m. in their respective residence halls.

Allen said he is optimistic about the next weeks turnout and said, "UMass is traditionally better in student election turnouts in comparison to schools across the country."

Sen. Bryan Harvey said 25 senate nominees are on the Independent Student Coalition. He said about half of them seek to represent commuters, and half are from the dormitory districts.

Sixteen persons have filed papers for the fifteen available Third World seats; 22 have filed for a possible 26 commuter chairs; and there are no candidates to fill Greek slots.

Several residential hall seats have no nominees. These include John Q. Adams lower, Butterfield, Cashin, Chadborne, Coolidge upper, Crampton, Hamlin, Knowlton, Leach, Mary Lyons, Melville, Thoreau, Van Meter North, Washington upper and Washington middle.

The major race in the BOG election is in the "at large" candidacies, as 12 people competing for seven positions. No nominees have entered for Central Residential Area and commuters.

Police in drunk driving course

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

Students haven't been the only ones going to classes this week. Thirty-one police officers, pens and notebooks in hand, have been attending a course since Monday in the use of a Breathalyzer machine, used to chemically determine alcohol levels in persons arrested for drunken driving.

The forty-hour course is being held in Dickenson Hall, Campus Police headquarters. Completion of the course today, which also deals with the state laws governing the use of the Breathalyzer, will legally certify the officers, enabling them to administer the test.

The officers are from police departments throughout western Massachusetts.

James Port, State Police Staff sargeant from the Boston headquarters, is teaching the course as part of the Federal Alcohol Project started in 1968.

In an interview, Port explained the need for enforcing the drinking and driving laws in the five-college area. He said, "There are between 14,000 and 15,000 arrests per year in Massachusetts for driving under the influence of alcohol. Sixty per cent of those people are under 25 years old or college age."

"This figure is on the rise, he said, "kids are doing less drugs, and more booze."

According to UMass Public Safety Director David L. Johnston, drinking is indeed on the rise at UMass. He said yesterday that campus police took 91 intoxicated students into protective custody in 1975, compared to 32 students in 1974. He said the figure is up to well over 100 in the first eight months of 1976.

Johnston said arrests for drunken driving on campus are fewer, but also climbing. All UMass police are certified to use the Breathalyzer, he said.

Port told the police officers in class yesterday, that the Breathalyzer is extremely accurate, but it doesn't tell whether a person is drunk because people have different tolerance levels for alcohol. Instead, the Breathalyzer tells the amount of alcohol in the bloodstream.

Regardless of different tolerence levels the law states that anyone driving with an alcohol level above .10 is guilty of driving under the influence of alcohol.

The person found guilty must attend an eight week alcohol training and evaluation program.

Port said the State Division of Alcoholism is developing a separate program for people between 17 and 21 years old, geared to their "standards and values."

One police officer remarked "those kids, you name it and they'll drive under the influence of it."

Grad women meet

Is grad school devastating?

By MARY BETH ALLEN
Collegian Staff

"Graduate school can be one of the most devastating experiences there is," commented one woman in attendance at a female graduate student discussion group held yesterday afternoon.

"Isolation and support" was the theme of the discussion, sponsored jointly by the Everywoman's Center, the Women's Studies department, and the Graduate Student Senate. Beate Riesterer and Julia Demmine, both whom are active in campus women's causes, led the group. They were aided by Mary Lou O'Neil of the Everywoman's Center and Arlene Ryan of Women's Studies.

The session began with each woman introducing herself and giving some background about her academic and personal life, in an attempt to uncover common goals and problems.

"If other women knew of the resources available, they wouldn't need to feel along and desperate," said Riesterer.

"We're going out into the field and dealing with very old school men, who don't like women coming into their domain," said Susan Solayanis, a graduate student in geology. "These men are used to treating women like secretaries or bedmates."

Another woman mentioned that her colleagues seemed to "depart from the real world." She said, "It frightens me how tied up people become in their work."

The "super-woman" syndrome was another cause of concern for the women present. "Where is the 'average' female grad student?" asked Solayanis, pointing out that women are judged by criteria far harsher than is used for the male graduate students.

"Very cut-throat," was how one woman described her reaction to graduate school, and everyone agreed that the "incredible a strain of competition" was one of the hardest things to deal with.

"I was overwhelmed by the intellectualism," said one woman, echoing feelings in inadequacy that many of the women said they had experienced at first.

Riesterer voiced concern over sexual exploitation of women in graduate programs, adding that there is little legal recourse for women mistreated in such a manner.

"When it is a question of a female graduate student against a male professor, forget it," she said.

The session became quite emotional, with women crying in relief to discover that many other women experienced the same fears and problems as themselves. Another topic of common understanding was the difficulty that an older woman, often divorced or with children, faces when she attempts to return to school after a long absence.

The group will meet again on Oct. 7, at 4 p.m. in the 6th floor at lounge at Thompson Hall. There is still room in the group, and interested women are welcome to attend.

NORTHAMPTON — Members of the Puerto Rican community of Northampton went on radio to talk about recent experiences related to discrimination and brutality perpetrated against them by some members of that city's police department.

According to the participants, the radio program, broadcasted last week, was instrumental in drawing out a large number of Puerto Ricans to a community meeting the following evening. The meeting was the first ever held in the Puerto Rican community of this city, which numbers 600.

The incidents of discrimination and brutality have been taking place in the last few weeks. Police indifference to an incident in which various Puerto Rican women and their children were threatened by a white youth with a loaded rifle as well as a beating by police of a Puerto Rican youth who was arrested for borrowing a van from his job without permission, are among the cases.

After discussing their experiences, community members brought forth possible solutions to the present situation and elected an ad hoc steering committee.

The steering committee will organize a series of activities which will address the specific problem of this working class community.

The one-hour program, in which the denunciations were made, is entitled "Que tal Amigo" and is directed by Julio Torres and Sonia ViVos.

Marching band presents 'Tommy'

By BOB DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

The UMass Marching Band will be making its first television appearance since 1972 when it takes the field at Harvard Stadium on Saturday.

According to Dr. John A. Jenkins, director of bands, the Marching Band was urged to attend the Harvard game by the Athletic Department and also by the UMass Alumni Association.

"Mr. John O'Connell, director of the Alumni Association, urged the band to make the trip to Harvard as a representation of the University for the alumni," Jenkins said yesterday.

Jenkins said he made the decision to bring the Marching Band to Harvard because of the strong requests received from the Alumni Association and the Athletic department.

"They (the Athletic department) said they would like us to be there because the game would be on television," said Jenkins.

Jenkins indicated that a close liason had been formed between the production staff of the American Broadcasting Company (ABC) and the Marching Band, in order to insure that the band's presentation would be the finest possible and that it would receive the best possible coverage by ABC.

The Marching Band will present a halftime show based on Peter Townshend's rock opera "Tommy". The show features Diane Luciani, Marching Band Feature Twirler, in its finale of "See Me, Feel Me-Listening to You". The "Tommy" show, which was also performed last year, was selected for the television appearance, said Jenkins, because it received such a fine ovation at Alumni Stadium last year.

"We've tailored it for television production," said Jenkins. "We feel we have a classic."

The trip to Harvard is one of three road appearances for the Marching Band this season. Each road trip decision is based on two considerations, according to Jenkins, such as the availability of financial resources and the amount of student's time expended. Each road trip commits a Marching Band member from 7 a.m. until 9 p.m. on the day of the trip.

Jenkins added that the next time the Marching Band will make an appearance at UMass will be on Friday, October 22, at 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall of the Fine Arts Center, for the Multi-Bands Pops Concert. The Multi-Bands Pops Concert will be part of the UMass Homecoming celebration.

Amherst businesses open on Friday evening hours too

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

Students, workers and others who are not normally able to do their shopping in Amherst during regular business hours are now being afforded an extra opportunity to do so.

Since the end of August, yellow and blue signs have appeared in Amherst store windows encouraging passers-by to "Shop Amherst on Friday Nights", as part of a campaign by the Amherst Chamber of Commerce to bring new business into town.

Jim Lumley, head of the Chamber of Commerce, said he hopes this will be accomplished partly by convincing shoppers not to go to the stores on Route 9, particularly the Mountain Farms Mall.

Said Lumley, "You don't have to shop in the mall. Part of this is a fight to get back business from the mall."

Amherst shopkeepers began holding their stores open late on August 27. The date, Lumley said, was selected to coincide with the return of students to UMass and Amherst College, who "help to swell the population back," according to Lumley.

According to the Chamber of Commerce, which does not as yet have an exact list of which stores are participating, most stores in town are staying open on Friday nights with the exceptions of House of Walsh, Faces of Earth, and most of the Carriage Shops.

Carl Peterson, manager of Bolles Shoes, said "At this point, business is excellent." Like other stores in the area, Bolles Shoes had tried keeping later hours on Fridays, but without success. But response has been improving, Peterson said.

Although the experiment has been underway less than a month, the reactions of participating owners and managers have so far been favorable.

"The last two Friday nights I couldn't believe it," he said.

At Whole Wheat Trading Co., Michael Danoff said the business has had "a fairly nice turnout. There's a more relaxed atmosphere. It's nice to be able to cater to people who work all week."

At Archer Kent, manager Agnes Natowicz said the store had done "very well the first week. Its worthwhile staying open." Along with other managers. Nartowicz said she hoped business would continue at its present rate.

"If we could stay open like this all year, it would be great," she said.

At least one manager in town, however, is skeptical about the chances of stores being kept open beyond the next month. Steven Feldman of Faces of Earth explained his store had been open on Friday nights for the past four years, without enough business to properly cover the costs of additional heating, lighting and help.

"This year we just gave up," he said. Feldman said he would consider trying it again, but "we want to see them do this for a while and I don't mean three weeks."

He predicted, "They'll find the business is not there and they're going to give up."

Lumley said he had talked to Feldman and called Feldman's remarks "a case of sour grapes. It is working and will continue to work."

Bottle Bill

Students interested in distributing Bottle Bill information tomorrow at the Eastern States Exposition in West Springfield are asked to meet at 9 a.m. in front of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research (PIRG) office on 233 North Pleasant St., located in the Carriage Shops in Amherst.

A van will take the students to the fair but extra transportation is still needed for the leaflet distributors, according to MassPIRG representative Susan Kaplan.

Jewish New Year starts tonight at dusk

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

The Jewish New Year, Rosh HaShanah, beginning tonight at sundown and lasting two days, marks the beginning of a period known as the "10 days of repentance," and culminates in Yom Kippur — the Day of Atonement.

Marked by prayer, mediation and self examination, this is one of the holiest times in the Jewish calendar. It is a time for examining one's life in the past year and for cleaning the slate in order to start anew.

According to Jewish tradition, there is a heavenly Book of Life in which God inscribes those who merit continued life for the next year. To be intered into the Book Of Life, one must do "Teshuvah", which means literally means, a turning away from destructive and harmful patterns and a returning towards healthy and better ways of acting.

Rosh HaShanah is a serious holiday, but not a sad one. The opportunity for starting fresh in the new year is one of hope and expectation.

On campus services will be held at the Chabad House, 30 North Hadley Road, opposite the Whitmore administration building, tonight and Saturday night at 7:00, and Saturday and Sunday mornings at 10:00. Free meals are served after each service.

Other services will take place in the Student Union Ballroom tonight at 7:00 and Saturday and Sunday mornings at 10:00.

Birth of a 'nation'

By MIDDY E. FIERRO-LOPES
Special Correspondent

"Grito do Lares," Cry of Independence: Sept. 23, 1868.

"Grito" means "scream" and Lares is a town in the northwest of Puerto Rico.

The nineteenth century marks the birth of the Puerto Rican nation; a sense of Puerto Ricaness crystalizes. This national awakening takes, politically, two roads: a reformist one and a separatist one.

In the history of the separatist, or independence movement, of Puerto Rico, the Grito De Lares symbolizes the will of our people to become free and independent.

Under the leadership of Dr. Ramon Emeterio Betances, emerged throughout the island secret societies which had the goal of organizing the revolution.

It was Betances who conceived and planned the Grito de Lares, an act of rebellion against Spanish imperialism, on Sept. 23, 1868. Betances knew that the fundamental problem of Puerto Rico was colonialism, and that only with armed revolution would the oppressive ties with our motherland, Spain, be severed.

This inspired Betances to say, "The big ones are big only because we are kneeling. Let's stand up." Betances represents to Puerto Rico the revolutionary spirit that Jose Marti represents to Cuba.

Originally the Grito de Lares was to take place Sept. 29, but due to a human indiscretion the plans of an armed insurrection got to the ears of the Spanish army, who immediately and effectively strangled the revolution.

The Spanish soldiers also prevented Betances, in the Dominican Republic at the time, to arrive to Puerto Rico with a libertarian force of 3,000 men. Naturally the Spanish government initiated a period of repression against the revolutionaries.

The date of the insurrection was changed to Sept. 23 and was led by Manuel Rojas, a Venezuelan and Matias Brugman, a North American.

Even though the Grito do Lares was a failure militarily, it was a success in that it came to be a symbol of our struggle to grasp our inalienable right of becoming free and independent, of Spain in the nineteenth century, and of the United States in the twentieth century.

'foolish not to'

Most watch debate

By GARY McWILLIAMS
and JAY SARET
Collegian Staff

They sat silently as the television flickered, small groups huddling in dormitory lounges staring intently at the screen. They listened and watched because, as one student put it, "you'd be foolish not to."

In a random survey last night of students on campus, the Collegian found that most were not watching the debates. Students contacted said they thought the candidates had avoided all the issues and spoke a lot of rhetoric.

The Bluewall and Hatch bars enjoyed better attendance than the Presidential debates, but for those who watched the debates provided an opportunity to clear up uncertainties and confirm the beliefs they held.

Most, like Lisa Musante, of Morre House in Southwest, found the debate reinforced previously held sympathies for the candidate they already supported, but felt the debate helped further explain the positions of the two candidates.

"I knew Ford's been wishy-washy in some areas," said Musante. "Yet I didn't know much about Carter." She said she "definitely" would watch the two upcoming debates to eye the two's positions on certain issues.

Burt Clark, of Brooks dorm in Central, agreed the debate reinforced his opinion of Carter.

"Carter impressed me," said Clark. "There's a spirit of change about him. Ford seems defensive; attacking Carter rather than proposing anything of his own."

Most of the students questioned supported Jimmy Carter, applauding his position on a pardon for Vietnam draft resisters and citing Carter's proposed programs to create jobs for the unemployed as a sign of his leadership, an attribute many feel President Ford lacks.

"Carter comes across 100 per cent for the people," said Melvin Hall, watching the debate from Webster House in Orchard Hill. "If what Ford says is true, about saving money from welfare and taxes, he'll have to use it up in unemployment benefits. Carter is talking jobs. He's won this part of the debate."

Both candidates projected a well-informed image, according to students. Yet listeners were split on the reliability of the various figures cited by both President Ford and Governor Carter.

Many worried whether the profuse facts and figures offered by the candidates were not an attempt to cover "weak" spots in their arguments.

Clark said, "The figures are irrelevant to a lot of people wathcing tonight." He said the candidates might be trying to "impress" the listeners with their ready use of facts which supported their own positions while contradicting the opponents.

In the phone call survey, Alan Micale of John Adams said, "Id much rather listen to the Four Seasons than to Ford and Carter. At least I know who I'm going to vote for," said an anonymous student from John Quincy Adams, "Ford looked much better than Cater."

The listener's preference for a candidate changed remarkably their view of identical responses. Mark Rourke of Brett House in Central, said he, a Ford supporter, felt that the President was more specific in his responses to questions, while Melvin Hall rated Carter's responses overall better than Ford's.

★ Presidential debates start

On Nixon's pardon, Ford said he was fully justified in pardoning President Nixon, but would not consider total amnesty for Vietnam War resisters.

Carter responded that it is "very difficult for President Ford to explain the difference" between the pardon of Nixon and his failure to afford draft resisters the same treatment. "I don't advocate amnesty, I advocate pardon," Carter said, repeating his earlier stand. "Amnesty means what you did was right. Pardon means what you did — right or wrong — was forgiven."

Ford, asked about his decision to pardon Nixon shortly after he took over the White House from him, Ford said in light of circumstances at the time he was "fully justified" in taking the action.

But he said he would not reconsider his judgment regarding the estimated 90,000 young Americans who either fled the country or deserted the armed forces during the Vietnam conflict.

On the Nixon pardon, Ford said "when I took office, this country was in a very, very divided condition," there was "hatred" and people "had lost faith in their government."

On Vietnam draft evaders amnesty, Ford said, "Mr. Carter has indicated that he would give a blanket pardon to all draft evaders," Ford said. "I do not agree with that point of view."

Carter said three times as many deserters as evaders were excused under the Ford amnesty plan, and "now it's the time to heal our country after the Vietnam War."

Carter said people are not concerned simply about amnesty for Vietnam resisters or deserters, but about a justice system filled with inequities.

"The big shots who are rich, influential, are rarely sent to jail," Carter said, while "those poor with no influence are."

The bulk of the demonstrators outside the theater were women carrying signs or candles demanding the right of women to have abortions.

Others carried placards and chanted slogans. One sign said: "Hunting for jobs, not for war."

One big yellow and red sign of the Socialist Workers Party said, "We won't be stepped on by the elephant or kicked by the donkey." Peter Camejo, the party's presidential candidate said, "I think that all points of view should be heard."

As Ford's limousine passed an intersection, the President waved, but received some boos from the demonstrators, located just across the street from the theater. Most were orderly, and a police helicopter circled periodically.

Nata Chandler, the Philadelphia president of the National Organization for Women (NOW) said the demonstration was to say to the candidates, "Keep your rhetoric out of our uterus."

Police on horses, on foot and some with dogs — their number virtually equaling the number virtually equaling the number of demonstrators — kept the demonstrators peacefully behind wooden barricades.

Originally, police and the Secret Service sought to seal off a corridor around the 167-year-old theater from pedestrians and pickets.

But a federal court, on a petition from the Socialists Workers Party, NOW and other groups denied permits, directed that one corner near the theater be made accessible to protestors.

Chants, amplified by loudspeakers, included:

"We want jobs, not hot air, Democrats or Republicans, we don't care."

"Open up the debates, let all views be heard."

News in Brief

Nuke concerns

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Most incumbent state lawmakers are concerned public safety is threatened in at least some area of nuclear safeguards, the Connecticut Citizen Action Group said.

The group said yesterday only seven per cent of incumbent legislators who replied to a survey were unconcerned about any nuclear safety issues.

Seventy three per cent of the 107 legislators responding expressed concern over public safety, according to the CCAG's General Assembly Project survey that will be released next week.

Forty-four incumbents seeking re-election did not return the survey. Of the 107 who did, 21 did not answer the nuclear safety question.

Concern over long term disposal of nuclear wastes was cited most often by the legislators. They split almost evenly over whether more nuclear plants should be built in Connecticut or New England.

Twenty-nine legislators declined to answer the question regarding more nuclear plants, the CCAG said.

Salmon's 'hard line'

MONTPELIER, Vt. [UPI] — Vermont Gov. Thomas Salmon, seeking to unseat Republican Sen. Robert T. Stafford in November, said yesterday the United States should take a "hard line" against white minority governments in South Africa and Rhodesia.

That action should include economic sanctions, but not military intervention, he told a news conference.

Salmon attacked Stafford for voting against bills to cut off U.S. aid to military governments such as Chile. He said the United States must distinguish between "just and fair nations that deserve our aid, and international bandits we should scorn."

Salmon also called for a $5 billion cut in defense spending and elimination of the B1 bomber, but said he would be "exceedingly cautious" in making "major" overseas troop reductions.

Resources jeopardized

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [UPI] — Development beneath the oceans is jeopardized without an "integrated and comprehensive" national ocean policy, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology expert said yesterday.

Alfred A.H. Keil, dean of the school's engineering department, said greater domestic use of ocean resources off American shores requires increased involvement by the federal government.

"Only an integrated and comprehensive ocean policy will assure a coherent approach by the nation toward greater domestic ocean use," Keil told the 5th annual Sea Grant Lecture and Symposium.

More radar clocking

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Drivers on Connecticut highways will be clocked by more radar patrols in a major crackdown on speeders and reckless drivers, starting Oct. 1, State Police Commissioner Edward P. Leonard said.

Leonard said the aim of the drive will be to reduce traffic deaths on state highways by five per cent a year.

He said increased surveillance would include more radar patrols and more car safety spot checks.

Leonard denied the announced stepup was initiated because of a rebuke from federal highway officials that Connecticut has among the highest speeds in the country and does not to enough to enforce the 55 mile per hour limit.

"We're going to save lives whether people like it or not," he said.

S. Africa announces multiracial sports

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — Sports Minister Piet Koornhof yesterday announced sweeping changes in South African sports policy, permitting multiracial sports at all levels and mixed racial teams to represent the country abroad.

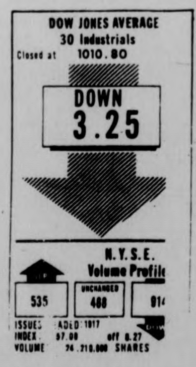
The announcement ended decades of segregation in sports and was designed to reopen the door to South African sportsmen in international contests.

Koornhof said the decision was approved yesterday by the federal council of the ruling National Party, the highest party policy-making authority in the country.

It came amid the worst racial unrest in South African history.

At least 376 persons have been killed in 14 weeks of nationwide rioting against the governments racial apartheid policies.

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger visited South Africa last weekend for talk with Prime Minister John Vorster on black majority rule in Rhodesia and also criticized the apartheid strict segregation policies of South Africa.



NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices settled back a bit and trading slowed on Wall Street as investors awaited tonight's televised debate between President Ford and Jimmy Carter.

Brokers said the market was probably due for a pause anyway after the sharp swings of the past two sessions.

Saxe, jurors tour bank robbed six years ago today

BOSTON [UPI] — Susan Saxe and the jurors who will decide her fate on armed robbery and murder charges yesterday toured the bank she is accused of helping rob exactly six years ago.

Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin earlier denied a defense motion to dismiss the charges because of the effect of pre-trial publicity on the jury. He also granted a prosectuion motion to bar all witnesses from the courtroom until they are called to testify, including Ms. Saxe's lesbian lover, Byrna Aronson.

"We have no indication...that the jury we selected is, in fact, of no opinion about the case," Ms. Saxe's attorney Nancy A. Gertner told McLaughlin who screened 192 prospective jurors during seven days of jury selection.

"Never in the history of this commonwealth has a more extensive search been conducted," McLaughlin said, adding if the defense was doubtful about any of the jurors they could have used their five remaining peremptory challenges to dismiss them.

Ms. Saxe, wearing a white cotton blouse with embroidered collar, listened intently and took notes at her seat in the locked defendant's dock while Ms. Gertner argued that the number of prospective jurors admitting a bias was significantly fewer than those persons surveyed by the defense last winter.

Approximately 50 per cent of the prospective jurors were excused for bias. A survey conducted by the defense in support of several pretrial motions earlier this year claimed that 76 per cent of the propective jurors interviewed in Suffolk County felt Ms. Saxe was guilty.

Ms. Saxe sat impassively as the clerk read the three indictments against her; one for taking part in the murder of Patrolman Walter A. Schroeder and two for participating in the 1970 armed robbery of $26,585 from the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Co.

The jury, Ms. Gertner and her partner Thomas G. Shapiro, and prosecutor John T. Gaffney boarded a chartered bus for a tour that took them past two Beacon Street apartment buildings allegedly used by the bank robbers and then to the bank. At the bank, where they were kept well separated from reporters and photographers, the group inspected the inside and outside of the building.

Ms. Saxe went along in a black station wagon in the custody of three court officers.

In a surprise move earlier in the day, Gaffney, in asking that all witnesses be barred from the courtroom, disclosed he had subpoened Ms. Aronson as a possible witness in the case.

Ms. Aronson, who is not charged in the indictments, was with Ms. Saxe when the 27-year-old Brandeis University honors graduate was arrested last year in Philadelphia.

State court rejects insurance request

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts Supereme Court has rejected an insurance industry request to reconsider its refusal to allow retroactive increases in 1976 and 1975 auto insurance rates, it was learned yesterday.

In a final decree, the court rejected a second appeal by the companies of a decision last December by Insurance Commissioner James Stone granting the industry an $58 million rate increases, about $300 million less than the amounts ought for 1976 and retroactively for 1975.

In August, the court upheld Stone's decision including his refusal to reopen 1975 rates and his use of what the court called a "radically different" approach to use of investment income in setting rates.

Under the new approach, Stone required companies to sell bodily injury coverage at a four per cent underwriting loss. The commissioner said companies could afford to pay out $1.04 for every $1 taken in, and still make a profit, by investing premium dollars wisely.

The portion of the August decision dealing with investment income was appealed by the insurance industry 10 days after the ruling. In the appeal, the companies asked the court to conduct a new hearing.

When the request was filed, spokesmen for the insurance industry said they did not expect the court to reverse it's decision, but hoped the court would clarify its language on investment income.

The rehearing request was turned down without explanation.

No further apppal in the case is possible, which means motorists cannot be surcharged for 1975 and 1976.

Meanwhile, Stone announced Thursday that a hearings would be held Oct. 20 on his department's proposal to expand the number of territories which will be used in determining auto insurance for next year.

Rockefeller, Albert quip-- good humored, but 'racist'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Unaware their banter was being recorded, House Speaker Carl Albert and Vice President Nelson Rockeffer yesterday traded good humored — but slightly racist — quips as they waited for the president of Liberia to address a joint meeting of Congress.

"Are there many Liberians that are mulattoes" Albert asked Rockefeller as they waited on the speakers rostrum for President William R. Tolbert Jr. to be escorted in.

Rockefeller replied in a low voice: "Most are strictly black."

"But they got a class system," he added, recalling Liberia's creation by American slaves repatraited to Africa in 1847.

"The blacks who went back to Liberia took on all the characteristics of southern whites, And they treated the local blacks..."

His voice trailed off.

Albert responded: "And they never let the local blacks in on anything!"

Rockefeller interjected: "Oh, no. They slightly change their speech, but only slightly."

Albert continued the thought, saying, "but only slightly..."

Then Rockefeller spotted Sen. Edward Brooke, (R-Mass.), leaning on a cane and vigorously shaking the hands of members of the diplomatic corps as they filed into the chamber.

Brooke is the first black to be elected to the Senate since Reconstruction.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., one of the more conservative members of Congress stood beside Brooke, and also welcomed the arriving diplomats.

But Rockeffer exclaimed: "Ed Brooke is a one-man receiving committee!"

"Yeah," quipped Albert. "He'd be a slave if he were there!"

Under the rules of the House, reporters are prohibited from recording or broadcasting private conversations in the speaker's lobby.

However, the microphones before Albert and Rockefeller were turned on prior to Tolbert's formal speech, apparently because the joint meeting was 30 minutes late getting started.

Tolbert was not in the House chamber when the exchange took place.

Officials of the House Radio Gallery and the House Correspondents Gallery were outraged that a recording had been made and passed around among the news media.

Westfield freshman 'hazed out', left

WEST BOYLSTON, Mass. [AP] — The father of an 18-year-old Westfield State College freshman who was the victim of a campus hazing incident says his son will not return to the school.

Ralph Pendleton, a teacher, said school administrators and not students are responsible when hazing is allowed to get out of hand.

His son Jeffrey left the school last Thursday, after allegedly being dragged from his room by other students who held his head in a toilet, then kicked him as he ran back to his room.

The school has launched a probe of the incident.

Pendleton said he wants "the public to know what the administrators of a tax-supported colleges condone."

"There is every indication to us that the administrators were aware this type of thing was going on when my wife and I went to college," said Pendleton. "They even put a name to it, holding his head in the toilet, 'swirling'. I'd never heard that term."

Pendleton, who earlier said he was considering court action, said he has left the matter in the hands of an attorney who represents the college's student senate.

According to Pendleton, the campus police said a group of 50 male and 50 female students took part in the hazing incident involving his son, but school spokesmen stressed that only 15 or 20 students were involved.

He also said his son's stereo set, radio and bed were broken during the incident and commented "that's not your run of the mill hazing episode."

Jeffrey has received a telegram from 10 student organizations at the college, including the student senate and student union, apologizing for the hazing, Pendleton said.

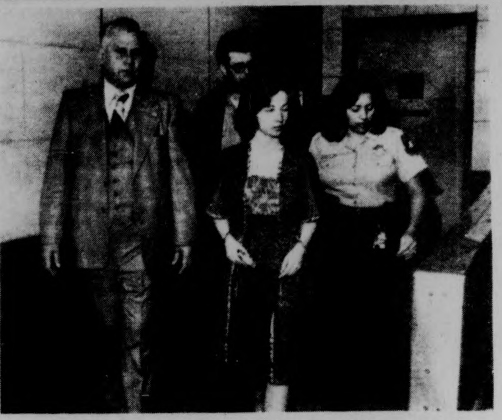
Abortion decision

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — In a decision that strikes down one of the last barriers against abortion in Connecticut, a three-judge federal court has ruled state officials cannot veto abortions sought by minors who are wards of the state.

The judges said the right of minors to abortions with a doctor's approval "is grounded in the Constitution as firmly as that of an adult woman."

The ruling, handed down Wednesday, affects only pregnancies less than 12 weeks old and does not give every minor, regardless of age or maturity, the power to ask a doctor to terminate a pregnancy, however.



BERKELEY, Calif.: Emily Harris leaves the Oakland Hall of Justice en route to arraignment in Municipal Court in nearby Berkeley on kidnap charges in connection with the abduction of Patricia Hearst. Mrs. Harris' husband, William, was also present at the arraignment and both pleaded innocent to the charges.

Serious crime rises slightly

[AP] — Serious crime rose slightly in 12 New England cities during the first six months of this year but crimes of violence declined, according to FBI figures released yesterday.

The 12 cities are all those in the six states with populations above 100,000. They showed an increase of 2.4 per cent in the total number of seven kinds of serious offenses known to the police in the first half of 1976 compared with the same 1975 period.

But the same cities showed a decline of 8.3 per cent in the total number of four kinds of violent crimes.

There were 99,048 serious offenses, including 9,107 crimes of violence, in the period measured by the FBI Uniform Crime Reports.

The FBI compiles figures for murder and non-negligent manslaughter, rape, robbery and aggravated assault. The nonviolent offenses listed are burglary, motor vehicle theft and other kinds of theft.

Bridgeport, Conn., showed the biggest increase in total crime, 17 per cent.

The most common crime of violence, robbery, declined everywhere except in Bridgeport, where the number of robberies rose from 210 to 223. In Hartford, the number of robberies was almost the same, 607 in the first six months of 1976 and 610 in the 1975 first half.

Here are the cities and the figures. The first table shows the number of total crimes for the first half of 1976 and the percentage increase or decrease; the second shows the number of violent crimes and the percentage increase or decrease.

Innocent plea

LITCHFIELD, Conn. [UPI] — Peter A. Reilly, 21, pleaded innocent yesterday for the second time in connection with the slaying of his mother, Barbara Gibbons, almost three years ago.

Reilly was originally charged with the Sept. 28, 1973 murder of his 51-year-old mother in their Falls Village home and was convicted of manslaughter in 1974.

After Reilly's 1974 conviction, he was freed on $60,000 bond raised by a local citizens group and sympathetic Litchfield County artists such as writer William Styron and playwright Arthur Miller.

Judge John A. Speziale, noting the discovery of new evidence in the case, said in his ruling March 25: "It is readily apparent that a grave injustice has been done and that upon a new trial is is more than likely that a different result will be reached."

LONDON: U.S. Secretary of State Dr. Henry Kissinger smiling happily on steps of Ten Down Street yesterday on his arrival from his 10-day African shuttle, to report to Prime Minister James Callaghan (L) and Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland (R). (UPI)

Kissinger leaves Africa with warm feelings, hope

NAIROBI, Kenya [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger left Africa yesterday "with warm feelings and a sense of hope" that his 10-day shuttle will succeed in bringing black rule to Rhodesia peacefully.

Leaders of the white supremacist regime in Rhodesia met at the same time to decide their final response to plans for negotiations to bring majority rule to the country. Mozambique voted the first black criticism of Kissinger's shuttle mission.

Before leaving for London, where he was to meet with British leaders, Kissinger reported to Kenyan President Jomo Kenyatta on his weekend talks in Pretoria with Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith and South African Prime Minister John Vorster, then relaxed by shuffling through a few African dance steps.

"I briefed him on the American actions on bringing together, or attempting to bring together, the various groups in southern Africa and to make progress toward a peaceful solution based on justice and human dignity," Kissinger said.

"I was very satisfied with my talk and I leave Africa from here with warm feelings and a sense of hope."

Kissinger and Kenyatta met for 46 minutes at the Kenyan president's country farm at Nakuru. Although Kenya has no direct stake in the southern African peace talks, Nairobi has developed into one of the United States' staunchest allies in black Africa.

The two men watched almost 100 colorfully dressed African dancers perform, then Kenyatta led Kissinger onto the dance floor.

Clearing a space among the dancers, Kenyatta took a spear and a shield from one of them and handed them to the secretary. Kissinger took a few shuffling steps.

"Any of you who have seen my dancing before will know that I need a lot of technical assistance," Kissinger called out to watching reporters.

In Lusaka, Zambia, Mozambique Vice President Marcelino dos Santos said yesterday his country has "no interest" in Kissinger's plan for negotiations to bring a black government to power in Rhodesia within two years and still supports "armed struggle" to overthrow the white minority regime.

Mozambique thus became the first of the "front-line" states of southern Africa — the black nations that have supported the guerrilla war against Rhodesia to speak out against the Kissinger mission shuttle.

Cosmonauts end flight

MOSCOW [UPI] — Two Soviet cosmonauts ended a relatively brief but technically demanding space flight yesterday with an on-target soft landing in the Central Asian Republic of Kazakhstan.

Moscow Radio interrupted a program of music to announce the Soyuz 22 had set down at 10:42 a.m. 3:42 a.m. EDT 93 miles northwest of Tselinograd after eight days in earth orbit.

Col. Valery Bykovsky, 42, the commander, and civilian flight engineer Vladimir Aksenov, 41, "feel well" and their mission "has been fully carried out," the official Tass news agency said.

The Soyuz 22, originally designed as a backup vehicle for last year's joint Apollo-Soyuz flight, tested the cosmonauts' skill by giving them an increased share of control.

One year remains for federal workers

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — A state agency yesterday decided 2,500 persons paid by the federal government who work for the state, cities and towns and nonprofit agencies have one year left on their present jobs.

For many in the program the year is a one-year reprieve, because a prior state decision would have allowed persons who had already been paid by the federal government for a year to be removed from the payroll.

The Office of Manpower Planning in the State Labor department Thursday was duplicating a memorandum to be mailed today to municipal officials clarifying the status of employes under the federal Public Service Employment program.

On Sept. 8, a memorandum was sent out stating the maximum length of participation in public service employment should be 12 months and a person's employment before Oct. 1, 1976 could be counted in that time.

'Gaping loopholes' in laws permit many to build bombs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Two bomb experts said yesterday almost anybody can find the ingredients for a bomb to blow up people and property because of "gaping loopholes" in federal and state law.

"Relatively new compounds that form powerful explosives are available at the corner drugstore," Arthur Cunn of the Nassau County N.Y. bomb squad said in testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Internal Security.

Cunn and Lt. William Poe, supervisor of the Explosive Control and Firearms Unit of the Louisiana State Police, told the committee there was a "tremendous proliferation in the use of illegal explosives," and inadequate law is a problem.

"Our state laws must define exactly what comprises a bomb and what is an explosive. Present statutes should be constantly updated in keeping abreast of current technology," Cunn said.

Poe, 34, a 10-year veteran of the Louisiana State Police, said "gaping loopholes" exist in federal laws and "there are thousands of pounds of surplus military explosives sold throughout the United States... in many cases in bull form."

"This means a 50-pound ball of C4 plastic explosives is sold in a plain brown cardboard box with no commercial markings and no control numbers such as serial number or date code," Poe said.

This type plastic was believed used in the murder in Washington Wednesday of Orlando Letellier, former defense and foreign minister of Chile and Chilean ambassador to the United States.

A 25-year-old researcher also was killed when Letellier's car was blown up in a downtown intersection. Police said plastic device was fashioned under the car directly beneath Letellier's seat, so as to maim him as much as possible.

Cunn said he has investigated hundreds of bombings and deactivated explosive devices in his 20 year police service. He recommended regulations for:

—Centralized listing of stolen or missing civilian or military explosives.

—Funding of schools and seminars for bomb technicians available to all law enforcement agencies.

—Pooling of intelligence by federal, state and local authorities.

—Ending jurisdiction disputes in bombing investigations.

Primary irregularities gave Lorber vote

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — There were "widespread irregularities" in primary voting which game Richard Lorber the Democratic senatorial nomination this week, Attorney General Julius C. Michaelson said yesterday.

It is not yet known if the irregularities constitute fraud, said Michaelson as police and a top state prosecutor began investigating Lorber's 100-vote upset victory over two-term Gov. Philip W. Noel.

"There certainly have been widespread irregularities," Michaelson said. "Now whether or not those irregularities constitute the crime of fraud is something that I can't prejudge until I've seen the investigations of the state police and other parties involved."

Michaelson scheduled a news conference for 9:30 a.m. Friday.

Lorber Wednesday snatched the Democratic nomination from Noel after an expensive media campaign and a grueling week-long recount of machine and paper ballots. The final vote total was Lorber 60,118, Noel 60,018.

Noel is awaiting the outcome of the investigations before deciding whether to ask the state courts to order a new primary. He said he will seek to void the election "if the investigations show substantial fraud."

Providence detectives and Assistant Attorney General Albert E. DeRobbio poured over pads of yellow paper yesterday in the dusty bowels of the Board of Elections building, comparing machine totals to slips signed by voters at the polls.

Providence Mayor Vincent A. Cianci, a Republican, Wednesday alleged 2,937 more votes were noted on ward tally sheets than counted on voter signature slips.

State police Det. Joseph Miranda said the discrepancies were "not that bad — just a couple which could be manual."

Many such "manual" discrepancies between the actual machine count and the handwritten tally sheets were corrected during a board recount under the careful watch of attorneys for both candidates.

However, a preliminary check of 27 of the 170 Providence voting machines revealed 52 more votes cast than there were signature slips, Providence police Lt. Philip W. Bathgate said.

In a separate development, Lorber's campaign records showed Patricia Holland — a notary who Monday admitted notarizing some 150 shutin ballots outside the presence of individual voters — was a paid Lorber employe in July. The ballots were disqualified and impounded by the board.

Miss Holland Monday testified to the board she was a volunteer last spring. Lorber's campaign finance records showed she received $898.44 from the Lorber camp during July.

Noel said Wednesday the woman notarized 1,931 of 2,251 signatures submitted on Lorber's nominatin papers. Miss Holland testified she followed state law in notarizing the Lorber papers.

She also testified she did not work for Lorber in the last two months but yesterday admitted she helped record voting results primary night.

Miss Holland testified Monday she notarized the shutin ballots at the request of Victor Mourachian, Jr., a losing candidate for representative in the 1st District of Providence.

Ford Motor shows signs of strike's end

DETROIT [UPI] — The first noticeable signs of progress toward ending the Ford Motor Co. strike surfaced yesterday while the U.S. auto industry reported the fourth highest mid-September new car sales total in history despite the 9-day-old labor dispute.

"We're inching along and accomplishing some things in the noneconomic areas," a Ford spokesman said. A United Auto Workers spokesman agreed there had been a "perceptible change" in the atmosphere in the bargaining suite since Wednesday.

The four American companies sold 184,201 cars, up 8 per cent on a daily average from last year. Analysts said the Ford strike, which started midway through the Sept. 11-20 period, cut sales by "a few thousand" cars.

Ford said its sales topped year-ago levels by 17 per cent and were the third best ever for a mid-September period. General Motors sales were up 5 per cent, and Chrysler increased 15 per cent. Ailing small car specialist American Motors slipped 40 per cent below a year ago.

For the first time since Monday when formal bargaining resumed to end the walkout by 170,000 workers, Ford spokesmen briefed newsmen on the status of the talks.

The negotiators met in a main-table session during the morning and then broke up into sub-committee meetings to handle the noneconomic matters. The two aides agree those issues must be settled before tackling the key economic items of wages and the union's demand for more paid time off the job.

A union spokesman cautioned newsmen against becoming overly optimistic that the strike, which began at midnight Sept. 14, would end soon.

"It's obvious that the talks have not heated up yet to the point where we can see the end," he said.

The walkout should have no real effect on total auto sales until some time in October, analysts said. But several Ford dealers surveyed by UPI indicated the very mention of the word "strike" scared some potential customers into delaying a purchase.

"I think we're going to see the real effects just about Oct. 1 when the new car announcements come," said Bob Grappone of Grappone Ford in Concord, N.H. "I think in another seven days we're really going to feel it."

In Dallas, where Friendly Chevrolet is right across the street from Miracle Ford, there also was little effect seen in the first week of the strike.

"We haven't had any increase in Ford shoppers," said Mark Eddins of Friendly Chevrolet. Sales manager Chuck Donnell of Miracle Ford said business actually picked up after the strike started.

"We've got plenty of cars in our inventory," Donnell said. "So far, the strike hasn't gone far enough to affect the public's buying."

But in St. Louis, Tom Casaveley Ford reported business off 50 per cent and Sunset Ford said sales were about 20 per cent below expectations.

Shortages should be eliminated

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Shortages of polio vaccine should be eliminated in a few weeks, Congress was told yesterday but one senator said unimmunized children in the cities are "a keg of dynamite" of the crippling disease.

A Senate health subcommittee also heard testimony from several witnesses that polio is so controlled in this country that more cases occur from vaccine than from "natural" infection.

Dr. Jonas Salk, developer of one of two vaccines which made it possible to reduce the cases from 38,476 in 1954 to seven in 1974, said "the major cause of polio" in the United States now is vaccines.

But Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., said many children are unprotected from polio. "We've been going downhill in childhood immunizations in this country and I want to find out why," he said at the hearing on vaccine shortages.

"We are sitting on a keg of dynamite" of unimmunized children, Bumpers said.

Dr. Harold Ginsburg, professor of microbiology at Columbia University blamed "the problem of the delivery of medical care in the cities."

Parents are not educated to the health needs of children, the vaccine is not readily available, and to get it parents may have to leave their jobs and sit for hours in clinics, Ginsburg said.

Mirror image

Along the long hall two mirrors are flanked on opposite walls of the hall. When one looks into one of the mirrors, the other mirror behind reflects their image endlessly in a long, narrow hallway view. As I stand before one of the mirrors, I can see all the reflections of me produced by the mirror in back. Reflected with hollow mirror edges around my face, they seem to change as they become smaller and smaller, further away.

Somehow each image, getting smaller looks younger and more innocent wearing expressions from views which are only memories now.

And now I see from the bottom ridge a new face and expression coming up. I'm scared.

Looking back to my last reflection, I feel so many reminiscences. My soul seemed ready to explore as much as it possibly could then, even sunrises at five in the morning seen while driving to Ware to stuff Collegians. And old friends, all of us trying to interpret and blend in a new life.

Slowly we got used to the new structures and schedules and began to feel ourselves changing, excuse me Plato, "becoming."

And all the knowledge stuffed into our heads like shoeboxes stuffed with tissue paper...rehashed so that now this old expression seems to have reached the end of its comprehension (perhaps the new face is needed?)

Now suddenly nothing is really new anymore, just new for "new people" and I know I'm not new anymore. And I feel sad pulling away from that old identity, but I can't just hold onto memories (perhaps the new face is needed?)

I know that old expression must go, but it hurts.

And I find myself slipping away from the old organization. I'm in something new now: somthing which seems so over my head I wonder if I've not yet drowned in its complexity and newness. It's not a home yet.

All the old sites bring back memories and there is that "at home" feeling. And then I know it's time to unleash from all those old memories and that old image grinning at me in the mirror. The image produced from the mirror behind must come up, the old one phasing back, must become smaller.

Somehow this new face is a new identity unlinked to any organization, anyone, anything. Something unbound to anything loved except the self. And that hurts and makes me look back awhile longer.

Somehow this new face produced by the mirror behind will stand alone almost the way it will for the rest of my life (even though the mirror in back will produce other new faces and this new face will ultimately fall behind, behind with the old faces...)

Along the long hall two mirrors are flanked on opposite walls of the hall. When one looks into one of the mirrors, the other mirror behind reflects their image endlessly in a long, narrow hallway view. As I stand before one of the mirrors, I can see all the reflections of me produced by the mirror in back: reflections showing how, yes Plato, I'm "becoming" as I begin to fully realize my own, separate, identity.

Repression in Northampton

By VICKY HERNANDEZ
and JUAN ROSARIO

Recently, some Northampton and state policemen have manifested the same racist and classist attitudes which permeates the police departments of Springfield and Holyoke. The police, in a time frame of two weeks, have dealt with the Northampton Puerto Rican community in an unjust, brutal, and callous manner.

Puerto Rican women and their children have been threatened by a white youth with a loaded rifle and no action is taken by the police because the youth "did not kill anyone." A Puerto Rican youth was brutally beaten by two state troopers. Three Puerto Rican men, having coffee and engaging in conversation in Spanish at the local Dunkin Donuts, were forced to leave the shop without justification. Three Puerto Rican youths, who were sitting in their parked car, were searched and arrested without a warrant for allegedly siphoning gasoline from a truck. The owner of the truck reports that he has "no proof that gasoline was NOT taken from the truck." Guilty until proven innocent.. One of the young men who was arrested for siphoning gasoline told one of the policemen, who had testified against the youth in court, that he (the policeman) was not with the arresting officer at the time they were arrested and that he should tell the truth. The officer, feeling threatened and offended by the youth's statement, arrested him on the spot. Bail was set at $1,000 and the youth remained in jail for a week. In the meantime, an arson burned his car.

Let us look at the chain of events of some of the problems that have come to our attention.

On the warm afternoon of August 11th, in the Florence Heights housing project, many of the Puerto Rican and North American women residents were outside watching their children play. With no apparent provocation, a white youth ran toward some of the Puerto Rican women and threatened to kill them and their children. Continuing with the verbal threats, he entered one of the apartments and returned with a rifle. He continued with his threats and charged aggressively toward the children. His attention was drawn by a dog at which he shot and missed. The frightened Puerto Rican women and children, (the only ones he chased), ran to their apartments. The youth continued yelling threats to kill all Puerto Ricans and started roving the complex. Meanwhile, someone had called the police, who arrived about fifteen minutes later. The police asked the youth questions, took his loaded rifle and allowed the youth to walk away. The women, in shock and disbelief of the polite police treatment of an assailant, came out of their apartments to explain to the officer the full extent of the threat to their lives. They asked the officer why he had not arrested the assailant, and he responded with the question, "He hasn't killed anyone yet, has he?" The policeman reiterated that the youth, "ONLY threatened to kill all Puerto Ricans."

Two nights later on August 13th, a Puerto Rican youth who had borrowed a van from his place of employment without permission, was pursued by state troopers in Hadley. The Puerto Rican youth, who is about 5'4" was arrested and beaten by two state troopers, each six feet tall. The trooper did not read him his rights, but continued to abuse him by such racist statements as: "Why don't you go back to where to belong you fuckin spic?"

The following night, several Puerto Rican men were at Dunkin Donuts, drinking coffee and conversing in their native language. Feeling disturbed by the presence of Puerto Ricans, the manager called the police. The police promptly arrived and ordered the men to leave. The men responded that they had paid for service and that they were not going to leave until they had finished their coffee. The policemen then told the waitress to pour the coffee into some hot cups because they wanted the Puerto Rican men out of there. The men refused to accept this treatment and proceeded to finish their coffee under the manacing presence of the "servants of justice." Angered by the Puerto Rican men's refusal to obey their unlawful orders, the policemen followed one of the men who left in his car and charged him with speeding.

On August 15th, in the parking lot outside Phase Two discotheque, three Puerto Rican youths were sitting in their car, waiting for the rain to stop. The windows became fogged and one of the youths went to the car's trunk to get a cloth to clear the windows. Upon re-entering the car, the police pulled up alongside them and proceeded to interrogate them. The police ordered the car's owner of the car to open the trunk and found among other junk, an EMPTY milk container and a rubber hose. They were arrested and charged with larceny under $100 for siphoning gasoline from a truck whose owner originally stated that no gasoline was missing, and later changed his statement and said that he has "no proof that gasoline was NOT taken from the truck."

The pattern of harassment, provocation and intimidation of the Northampton Puerto Rican community by some members of the police department is clear to that community which is subjected to arbitrary police unlawfulness. It is also quite obvious that the police have adopted the double standard system used in Springfield and Holyoke to convince Puerto Ricans that they don't belong in Northampton after the crops have been harvested.

The repression is intended to convince the growing Puerto Rican community that all that is wanted of them is their back breaking labor in the field and that they have no business staying in this community. The Puerto Rican community is aware that their labor is being exploited by those seeking profit. They are determined to stay in Northampton, even in the face of repression. The economic exploitation of Puerto Rico by the same multinational companies that exploit them here gives them no other alternative but to remain here at least until Puerto Rico is free, free of all the socio-economic conditions that forced them to come to Northampton.

At this moment, Puerto Ricans in Northampton have their backs against the wall. They cannot return to Puerto Rico even though they want to. They are determined to provide food, housing and clothing for their families. If the police, in their attempt to coerce the community to pull up stakes and leave, continues with the harassment, provocation and unjust, brutal and callous treatment of Puerto Rican families, it is possible that the community will respond in a similar manner which other of oppressed Puerto Rican communities responded in Holyoke and Springfield. You can take food from peoples mouths for just so long before they decide to do somthing about it.

We urge all working class and progressive people to join our Puerto Rican community today at 9 a.m. at the District Court in Northampton.

Debate delusions

"The people of the United States want a Republican President" — Gerald R. Ford on the ability of a Republican President to curtail the lavish spending of a Democratic Congress.

Whether or not the President was correct in his estimation of the pitfalls of two-party politics seems mute in light of the fact that only representatives of the two major political establishments were invited to last night's first debate of Presidential candidates sponsored by the League of Women Voters', education fund.

A basic fault of the two-party syndrome that has evolved in the United States was clearly evident last night. I would assume that the close to 100 million persons that were expected to view this first of three Presidential debates saw what I saw ... that these two candidates offer nothing but a choice between two evils.

The debates were intended to focus on domestic and economic issues. For the most part the candidates kept to these issues, and spent the great majority of the evening discussing the topic of taxes.

For those persons most interested in the subject of taxes, middle and low income Americans, neither candidate offered substantial reason for optimism (although both candidates exuded of it) because of the way they seemed to side-step the issues. Carter refused to deal in specifics when asked how he would lower taxes without cutting programs and Ford only pointed to the Democratic Congress in response to why taxes have not been substantially lowered during his two years in office.

Ford seemed to blame Carter for the overspending of the Congress to which Carter replied: "If I am responsible for the Democratic Congress, then President Ford is responsible for Watergate, which he was a part of." Score ten points for Jimmy.

Ford refused to side-step the issue of amnesty, which could prove to be a blunder. When asked how he could justify the pardon of President Nixon and not the pardon of draft evaders, Ford said that he had given them their chance to forgive their "sins" to the American people and only 15 thousand had obliged.

Both candidates seemed to imply that the other was lying, which I see as altogether possible. Carter said that since Ford has been in office there has been a decrease in corporate taxes from 30 to 20 per cent and that there has been an increase in the payroll tax of the average citizen from 14 to 20 per cent. Ford refuted this and in fact said something nearly opposite. Who should the voter believe through the double talk? Probably neither.

One can talk of the candidacy of the Udalls and the Harrises and the Jacksons and the Wallaces and Halls and the Reagans and other viable candidates that might have been, but as the race is now, the United States people are either going to elect Jimmy Carter or Gerald Ford as their next President and there doesn't seem to be anything the concerned citizen can do about it.

And the first Presidential Debate last night proved it.

Cops rude to gays

To the Editor:

On Friday night, Sept. 17, friends and I were leaving the gay disco at Farley Lodge when we heard a loud crash. When we reached the parking lot we found that a police cruiser had backed into a parked car. When one of the people with me inquired whether or not they were going to leave a note or report the accident the reply was "Do you want to spend the night in jail? Keep walking straight ahead and don't look back."

I do not wish to imply that the officers acted this way simply because we were gay. I certainly hope that this was not the case. I am also not saying that the policemen did not leave a note or report the accident. They very well may have. What I am saying is that these policemen had no right to treat anybody, gay or not, in such a rude manner. I certainly hope that behavior like this will not be repeated in the future.

Recombinant DNA: Garden of Eden or forbidden fruit?

By GEORGE SCANGOS

Scenario I: Millions of formerly starving people are now well nourished thanks to the introduction into their intestines of a strain of the bacterium E. coli which can digest cellulose. The bacterium has been created by recombinant DNA techniques and breaks down cellulose into simple sugars which can then be utilized by humans. This enables those who harbor the bacterium to eat and get energy from grass, leaves, and even paper.

In a side result, the University of Massachusetts dining commons has reported that lunch volume is down 20 per cent. A spokesman attributed the decrease to hundreds of students who formerly read the Collegian during lunch. Since the introduction of the cellulose degrading bacterium, they read the Collegian — and then eat it. "It tastes as good as anything in the D.C. and fills me up" reported one rotund UMie. The Valley Advocate reported that sales were up to 50 per cent since the introduction of a chocolate edition.

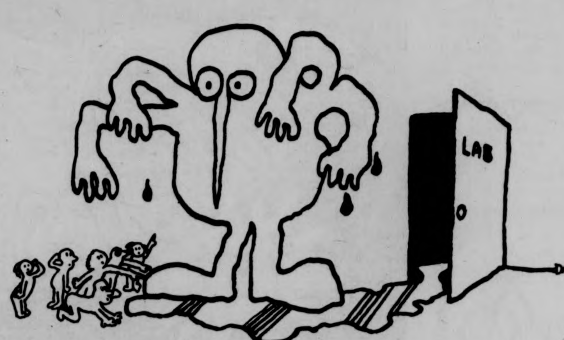
Scientists report, however, that they have recently learned that the cellulytic activitiy may be causing the bacterium to destroy the intestinal lining. Hundreds of deaths have been reported and there is no apparent way to get rid of the organism. Some experts are calling it the largest medical disaster in history.

Scenario II: A government spokesman reported last night that the huge oil spill off the coast of Rhode Island had been successfully cleaned up thanks to the spraying on the spill of hundreds of gallons of the bacterium Pseudomonas. Through recombinant DNA techniques the organism had been endowed with the ability to eat petroleum compounds. "Petroleum pollution of our waters is a thing of the past" the spokesman said.

In a related incident, eight major oil companies have reported that the organism has apparently found its way into their storage tanks. They report 30 per cent of their stored oil ruined. They claim that petroleum and its products, including some plastics, can now be stored for only very brief periods. They expect the price of oil to quadruple in the next month as a result of expensive new handling and shipping procedures.

Scenario III: A New Jersey based chemical company has reported the successful construction, using recombinant DNA techniques, of a strain of the intestinal bacterium E. coli capable of synthesizing insulin. They claim that the price of insulin will now drop to only 15 per cent of its former level and insulin will now be available to thousands of additional people.

Thousands of people in the surrounding communities have been hospitalized with severe diarrhea and dehydration. The insulin producing E. coli has been isolated from their feces and is strongly implicated in the disease. Public health officials see no realistic way of limiting the organism.



The above are three hypothetical but plausible consequences of the newly acquired ability to recombine the DNA (the basic celluar component which determines all the other characteristics of a cell) of any two organisms and to reintroduce this recombinant DNA into a bacterium, usually E. coli. The technique consists of taking a piece of DNA called a plasmid from E. coli, inserting into it DNA from any desired organism, and then reintroducing the recombinant plasmid into the bacterium, creating an essentially new organism. This technique promises to provide significant advances in many fields of biology but at the same time poses some potentially very serious risks for society. Should these experiments be done and who should decide?

Proponents of these experiments contend that any new organism which is created has almost surely arisen naturally during the millions of years of evolution. Since these organisms are not around today, they must be at an evolutionary disadvantage and therefore pose little risk if introduced into the general environment. Further, they contend that the development of sick strains of E. coli which can't live outside the laboratory strengthens this argument.

In addition, they propose to do the most dangerous of these experiments in specially constructed laboratories similar to that seen in "The Andromeda Strain". Thus they argue that if a dangerous organism is created, it probably won't escape the laboratory, and if it does, it probably won't survive. Each of these events is sufficiently unlikely, they claim, as to make the overall danger to society negligible compared to the advances which will be made.

Opponents of these experiments doubt that many of the organisms which can now be created have arisen in nature and therefore their fitness to survive outside the laboratory is unknown. Further, laboratories constructed to contain dangerous organisms in the past have often proved inadequate and some organisms harboring recombinant DNA will almost surely escape into the environment. There, they claim, the potential danger to human health and the environment is so great that we can't afford to take the chance, however, small.

Scientists have generally been unable to agree on the potential hazards and benefits of these experiments. Several conferences have been held to discuss the advisability of performing these experiments and the decision has been to proceed with some limitations. The National Institute of Health has recently published a set of guidelines which specify the conditions under which various types of these experiments may be performed.

Critics argue that the restrictions are not nearly adequate and that since scientists have a vested interest in these experiments, they cannot regulate themselves, just as the Atomic Energy Commission could not regulate nuclear power.

Who then should decide this, or any other biological hazard issue? Scientists have a vested interest and the public generally lacks an adequate understanding of the techniques. In this light, the Cambridge City Council recently passed a three month moratorium on recombinant DNA experiments. The members of the council were apparently confused by the conflicting reports they received from the scientific community and voted the moratorium to give themselves time to learn more about the issue.

Whether this represents a legitimate expression of public concern or a political ploy by Mayor Vellucci is not clear. In any case, Cambridge may provide an example of whether or not scientists and the public can sit down and reach a mutually satisfactory conclusion. If they cannot, the result will be relatively unfettered experimentation or a total prohibition. Neither is an especially attractive alternative.

Dealing with pornography

Last Easter Sunday, while driving a taxicab in New York City, I passed a certain movie house where a huge crowd waited to enter. The theater showed a movie called Snuff, which if you don't know, was a simulated re-enactment of a pornographic movie made in South America where a woman was actually dismembered and killed. The irony and box office success was that the actress in the original show thought she was starring in just another ordinary skin flick, and the movie exploited her genuine shock and terror when she was found she was to be mutilated and killed for the purpose of titillating an audience.

Since the government never allowed the original movie to enter the country, some fast buck artist created the simulation which the New Yorkers watched.

To compare the movie to an open sewer is to do an injustice to a sewer. While it was depressing to see the mob waiting to enter, it was not surprising, given the history of this century.

But the reaction of the New York liberals was fascinating. For years, they've defended the right to show anything a person wants to see on the grounds of libertarian freedom. However, this movie was too much for them; they wanted to ban it.

To paraphrase what Bertrand Russell said about wanton brutality, they wanted to think there was something else wrong with the movie other than the fact they didn't like it, but by their previous logic of permitting other forms of pornography, they lost any basis to ban this particular ofal.

Last week, Charlotte Allen correctly said that pornographic movies (or violent TV, for that matter) do affect public mores. Not long ago in Norfolk, Va., a demented sailor shot up a bar full of pimps and prostitutes after having seen Taxi Driver, a movie about a psychotic New York cabbie who performed a similar act.

It reminded me of a time when I was five years old playing cowboys and Indians, and I started hacking away at some kid with a butter knife. Hell, I saw the cowboys do it all the time on TV, and not only was I not old enough to know stabbing killed people, I didn't even know what killing itself was. I guess the only reason I remember the incident at all is because of the furious reaction of the kid's mother.

As the Jesuits say, sin is social. A person's sin does affect others. Can there be any doubt that even if pornography did not cause many criminal acts, that it does pander to and promote a lack of sexual respect? Doesn't this compel some men to attempt living up to a dominant, macho ideal, and some women to accept it as a norm?

Charlotte Allen faltered on the issue of who administers the censorship. The ancient Roman author Juvenal put the problem this way: He noted that the emperor had placed a squad of armed guards around his wife to insure her marital fidelity, and Juvenal wryly asked, "But who watches the watchmen?" Who wants the government to have the ability to censor pornography? Given this step, it is not much further along the continuum before the government censors anything critical of it, and in fact owns the media.

Ah, we have a dilemma, or to continue classical analogies, a Scylla and Charybdis. If we permit pornography, we exacerbate certain moral problems. If we ban it altogether, we risk the loss of certain liberties and-or the emergence of a Prohibition-like black market. Is there some solution?

Allow me to propose at least a partial solution. Let us set up a board of distinguished and respected clergymen from Catholicism, Protestantism, and Judaism, and grant them dictatorial powers to ban any movie or TV show as pornographic. Let their powers extend to violence as well as sex. Why a religious panel? Well, Mosaic Law has survived and flourished for 3,000 years. The ideals of Jesus have done the same for 2,000 years. The passage of time, if nothing else, has demonstrated the validity and value of Judeo-Christian morality. We could do no better, and far worse, to allow such a board to stop pornography, and we would also avoid the possibility of our government destroying freedom of the media.

There was one other interesting argument in last week's Polemic Poles. The admitted purveyor of pornography, Albert Sparks, defended dirty movies on the grounds that net proceeds benefit students. Well, I'd rather not be benefited, thank you; to me, acceptance of such money is akin to receiving the proceeds of the sale of stolen property.

★ Proposal hit

Education and programs in that division, provide proposals for all credit-free courses and programs at the University, propose admission standards of the division and its programs, and establish standards relating to the employment of persons to be employed in both credit and credit-free programs.

According to the proposal, the council will include one faculty member from each of the faculties of the College of Arts and Sciences, and one from each of the other schools and colleges. The composition also includes members of the faculty senate, directors of the Division of Continuing Education, one alumnus and no students.

Federow, along with Student Government Association President Jay A. Martus, proposed that three undergraduates and two graduate students be included on the council.

Because the Graduate Student Employees Union has filed for recognition, Federow said that federal labor laws prohibit any changes in the rules and regulations that apply to their employment.

He estimated that graduate students teach half the courses in the Division of Continuing Education. Before elections are held, the Union must have hearings with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission. The hearings have been scheduled for mid-October.

After the hearings, the commission will rule on the composition of the union, and then an election can be held. Federow said the Faculty Senate's action must be postponed until after the election.

In arguing against the proposal, Martus told the senate of an impending decision to reorganize the Fine Arts Council, now student-run, into the Cooperative Extension service, which would be under the jurisdiction of the Extension Council, if that council is created by the senate.

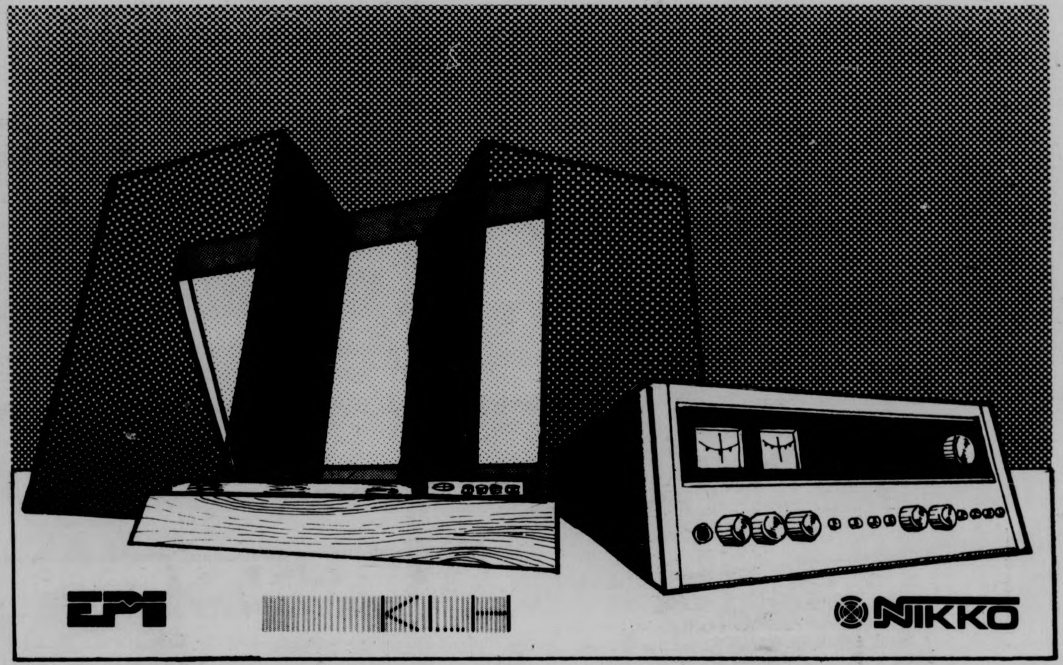
tech hifi's $525 system



This is a definite step up from the average home stereo. The heart of this system is the NIKKO 5055 stereo multiplex receiver. Chock full of goodies like: 18 watts RMS per ch., center tuning and signal strength meters, loudness compensation, it's dynamite. The KLH model 60 two speed manual turntable will really handle those valuable records with kid gloves. Belt drive, electronic cueing and a pilot light are just some of its features (includes wooden base, dust cover and magnetic cartridge).

Topping it all off a pair of EPI 100's, a two-way speaker system putting out a very clean pure sound, without coloration, distortion or exaggeration.

If you're willing to spend a few extra bucks, this is one stereo worth listening to.

Vocalists needed for opera-pageant

Auditions will be held from 3:30 to 5 p.m. for The Mother Of Us All, the Gertrude Stein-Virgil Thomson opera to be presented by the Departments of Theater and Music.

Singers in all voice ranges, male and female, are invited to sign up for an audition appointment at the Music Department Office, Fine Arts Center Rm. 273. The auditions will take place in Bezanson Recital Hall, FAC 248.

The Mother Of Us All is an opera set as a pageant, celebrating the life and career of Susan B. Anthony and the birth of the feminist movement. The last major work of Gertrude Stein's career, its cast features many historical figures including Lillian Russell, Daniel Webster, Ulysses Grant and John Quincy Adams, several fictional characters, and the composer and librettist themselves.

The Mother Of Us All, which will be performed Feb. 24-25-26 and March 3-4-5 will begin intensive rehearsals in December and will resume in mid-January. It is being directed by Vincent Brann, with musical direction by Dorothy Ornest and Ronald Steele.

Mt. Holyoke hosts artist recital series

The Artist Recital Series (ARS), a subscription series of four concerts, open to the public, will be given for the ninth consecutive year on the Mount Holyoke campus. Series tickets are now available through the Music Department at the College. The ARS, administered and organized by students, tries to bring performers to the community who are outstanding artists and also accessible financially. Series tickets, worth four admissions, are $10.00, with a sponsor ticket available at $15.00.

The variety of performers this year include The New England Woodwind Quintet, Malcolm Bilson, forte-piano, and Richard McKee, bass-baritone. The concert dates are Oct. 1, Oct. 17 and Feb. 6.

For series tickets, checks should be made out to the Artist Recital Series, and sent with name and address to Music Department, P.O. Box 18, Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Massachusetts.

A series ticket is limited to four admissions during the season. Ticket holders may use their tickets for each of the four concerts, or more than one admission for a single concert.

'Tashi' to herald FAC chamber series

Tashi (Tibetan for good fortune) brings together four of the country's leading young instrumentalists for a first-time appearance at UMass Tuesday, Oct. 5.

The concert, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, is the first in the UMass Arts Council's Chamber Music Series.

Since its debut in New York in 1973, Tashi has been hailed for unusual programs and exciting performances throughout North and South America, Europe and the Far East.

Composed of Peter Serkin, piano; Ida Kavafian, violin; Fred Sherry, cello; and Richard Stoltzman, clarinet, a major feature of Tashi is the expandability of its musical personnel.

Guest string and woodwind players often appear in compositions of all periods for a wide variety of instrumental combinations.

The program Tuesday Oct. 5, will consist of Cello Sonata by Debussy; Clarinet Trio K. 498 by Mozart and "Tashi" by Wuorinen.

Tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, 545-2511, at $5, $4, and $3 for the general public; one-half price for UMass students, and $1 off the regular price for senior citizens and students.

Clark Terry replaces ailing Count Basie

It has been announced that Clark Terry, one of the country's most popular jazz musicians, will lead the Count Basie Orchestra when it appears in concert at the Fine Arts Center at UMass Friday, Oct. 1, as the first event in the University's Arts Council's Contemporary Music Series.

Basie, who suffered a mild heart attack two weeks ago, is recovering at his home in Los Angeles and will rejoin his band later in the fall.

Terry, who played with the Basie Orchestra in past years, is an exponent of the Basie style, and is considered to be one of the finest trumpeters ever to perform on the American stage.

Tickets for the concert are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Survey Project needs volunteers

Project PULSE, the student attitude and opinion survey project on campus, still has several openings for work-study students to work as telephone interviewers on Wednesday evenings. The work is interesting and provides experience in working with people. Applicants must have 3-6 hours available for work on Wednesday evenings from 5:00 to 11:00.

Interested students are welcome to stop by the PULSE Office, 229 Whitmore, or call 5-2687 or 5-2640.

Continuing Ed. Workshops

Space is still available in many of the Credit-Free Workshops offered by the UMass Division of Continuing Education.

Most workshops begin next week.

A new workshop, Automobile Mechanics, has been added to those already published in the Continuing Education's fall catalog.

Although Auto Mechanics has been offered before, the present workshop emphasizes a unique philosophical approach which demystifies automobiles so that those with little or no knowledge can understand mechanical operations. Auto Mechanics meets for 10 weeks, on Monday evenings from 7 to 10 p.m.

Finger Spelling and Sign Language offers participants instruction in the manual communication which is used by most deaf people in this country.

Other workshops include such foreign languages as French, German, Italian, and Spanish, which are taught with emphasis on elementary grammar and common phrases; Alternative Energy and Methane Gas; Circus Arts, which focuses on exercise, mime, juggling, and character development; and Writing Well, a workshop which is appropriate for any person interested in developing an individual style or mode of expression.

Registration for any of the more than 60 workshops is at the Continuing Education Records Office in the lobby of Hills House on the UMass campus.

Also offered is a credit-free workshop in math.

It is appropriate for students taking math, statistics, or science courses; or those who are avoiding otherwise appropriate career choices except for a deficiency in math.

Math Learning Skills will offer help not only in learning math itself, but also in other areas needed for success in math such as: understanding the basic concepts behind the formulas; dealing with anxiety and fear about math; developing problem-solving abilities; solving word problems; how to ask questions and to persist in question-asking until your question is answered.

The workshop will meet every Wednesday evening from 7:30-9:30 beginning Wednesday and will run for eight week. The fee for the series is $15, which includes the registration fee.

Registration takes place in the Continuing Education Records Office, located in the lobby of Hills House on the UMass campus.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Friday, September 24 — Born today, you are not one to indulge in gossip or even in idle conversation aimed at nothing in particular. You tend to feel your time wasted when you are not engaged in gainful activity, and this includes mere talk. Your conversation must yield "truths," solutions to problems, directives and so on; you have no desire to gain through talk rest or relaxation or even the exercise of a sense of humor. Your seriousness tends to keep you from enjoying the little things in life, and your failure to realize what you are missing only serves to add the insult of ignorance to the injury of solemnity. You need to learn to take pleasure from simple, non-productive things.

You have a high regard for conventions, for rules and regulations, for tried and true methods. You recognize, however, the value of progress and you realize that without change, progress cannot occur. Thus you sometimes find yourself caught on the horns of a true dilemma: how to make progress without going against one or more of those "institutions" in which you believe. You find your solution in terms of your own common sense: what benefits the whole is necessarily good.

Both arts and sciences have a claim on your imagination. Indeed, you are one of those fortunate persons who may not have to make a choice between the two, for you may well be able to work in one or another scientific field and to employ the results of your efforts in highly creative ways to achieve an artistic effect.

Saturday, September 25

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — An amiable morning directed solely at getting old friends together on a new footing. Work toward goals of long standing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If you can read the conscience of a friend, you will be able to direct your actions to please him or her. Otherwise, you take your chances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make new plans for joint ventures with family and friends. You may not be able to act much today -- but you can cogitate considerably.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — This is a Saturday for making headway on at-home projects of long standing. Don't allow children to stand in the way of progress.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Take care that a hidden clause in a new contract does not bring calamity where you were expecting gain. Look at the small print over carefully.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Financial worries are lessened by the speedy action of friends. Make sure that you praise others for their quick thinking on your behalf.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — An opportunity to make the kind of contacts you've been hoping for should arise during afternoon hours. Don't overlook a chance for spiritual growth.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Though you may find it difficult to please every family member, you can satisfy the majority -- and yourself too.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — All should turn out well for you this Saturday, if you are careful to explain your position even as you act upon it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can advance career goals this Saturday by taking advantage of an opportunity to impress influential people.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Unless you are conservative in your spending at this particular time, you will suffer from a lack of funds when you need them in the near future.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Concentrate on your own financial advancement. An opportunity early in the day may go unnoticed unless you are expecting it.

Rozelle fines Noll, three players from opening game

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — National Football League commissioner Pete Rozelle has fined Pittsburgh coach Chuck Noll, Steeler defensive tackle Ernie Holmes and two Oakland Raider defensive backs for their actions in the teams' bitterly-contested opening season game.

An NFL spokesman refused Thursday to disclose the amount of the fines against Holmes and Raider defensive backs George Atkinson and Jack Tatum, but said they were "for actions on the field in the Sept. 12 Pittsburgh-Oakland game."

The Raiders, trailing 28-14, stormed back to win the game 31-28 in Oakland.

Noll's fine was presumably levied for comments he made the next day when he used the word "criminal" to describe the play of the Oakland defensive secondary.

"Noll has been fined for conduct detrimental to the game," said the NFL spokesman.

A Steelers' spokesman had little to say regarding the fines.

"We have no statement to make, which we never do regarding fines or disciplinary action taken by the league," the spokesman said. "It's a private matter between the individuals involved and the league."

The spokesman said the league itself normally does not issue statements regarding fines, but did so in this case because of the previous publicity generated.

But Atkinson was reportedly assessed $1,500 and Tatum fined $750. No figure was mentioned regarding Holmes and Noll.

Atkinson was penalized for whacking Steeler wide receiver Lynn Swann on the head, a play in which he suffered a concussion. Tatum drew a personal foul penalty during the game and was fined for unsportsmanlike conduct.

Noll, aware that Rozelle would take issue with his comments about the play of Oakland's defensive secondary, blasted the Raiders for the play that sidelined Swann. Noll, in addition to using the word "criminal," sent Rozelle film clips of the game.

In the American Conference title game in January, Swann was caught in a headlock by a Raider defensive back and slammed head-first into the frozen artificial surface at Three Rivers stadium in Pittsburgh.

He had to be carried from the field, missed the remainder of the game, won by the Steelers, and was a question mark for the Super Bowl until just before gametime.

Swann went on to win most valuable player honors in the NFL title game.

A.L. owners back Oakland in action against Cardinals

CHICAGO [UPI] — American League owners unanimously endorsed yesterday a protest by the Oakland A's that the St. Louis Cardinals, represented by August Busch, were guilty of tampering with baseball's prospective free agents.

"The American League unanimously feels the way the Oakland Club does and the league did when our message was transmitted to the commissioner," League President Lee MacPhail said.

The endorsement came at a special league meeting to discuss a big agenda covering "every item the clubs have indicated beforehand they wanted to discuss," MacPhail said.

Among them were negotiation rights for players who will become free agents at the end of the season and A's owner Charles O. Finley's comment that "if you draft any of my players, you will face legal action."

Every major league club can talk to the free agents who are not involved in the playoffs immediately at the end of the major league season. The discussions can concern only the "merits of their contracting with that club and simply indicate an interest in that player," MacPhail said. "They can't actually negotiate monetary terms or agree on contracts or anything of that nature until they have negotiating rights to the player."

Finley pointed out that all major league teams could "begin talking and muddying the waters the day the season ends." He added, "This is America. I don't know how they can rape by ball club."

"I paid good bonuses and good salaries and brought these players up and now they can go to another team and get up to $500,000 bonus money. How can I afford that?

"That's why I wanted to sell those players. I could see the handwriting on the wall. I don't have the money to get in a bidding war."

MacPhail telegraphed commissioned Bowie Kuhn on Sept. 16 lodging an official protest on behalf of Oakland for "a violation of major league rule (G) by the St. Louis Club," pointing out that Busch had been quoted that he was seeking authorization from the Cardinals board of directors to spend $3-4 million to sign free agents.

His telegram said that unless the published reports were erroneous "an immediate hearing be held to determine whether the St. Louis Club is guilty of tampering and whether or not they should be declared ineligible to select any of the players named in the negotiations rights draft." Kuhn has asked Busch to submit a copy of his statement to the press for Kuhn to study and there was one report that Kuhn had requested a tape of a session in which Busch made the statement.

MacPhail said any free agents could negotiate with as many as 12 teams which draft him plus his original team, but that clubs would be limited in the number of free agents it could sign depending on the number of players in the pool.

Sox win 10-3; Pirates stay alive

BOSTON [UPI] — Bill Lee tossed a nine-hitter for his first complete game in more than a year and four players powered home runs Thursday to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 10-3 rout of the Milwaukee Brewers.

Lee,5-7, struck out two and did not walk a batter in going the distance for the first time since Sept. 9, 1973, a 3-2 loss to Cleveland. Jack Heidemann accounted for one of the runs off Lee with a ninth inning homer.

Rookie Jack Baker led off the second inning with his first major league homer for Boston and Bob Montgomery, who also had a sacrifice fly in the first, lofted a two-run homer two outs later to finish Bill Travers, whose record evened at 15-15.

Jim Rice, who extended his hitting streak to 10 games while batting .500 on a 20-for-40 spree, blasted his 24th homer of the year in the fifth with one man on and Dwight Evans hit his 16th with a man aboard in the eighth.

It was Boston's 10th victory in their last 11 games and lifted the Red Sox to the .500 mark for the first time since July 15.

The Red Sox now travel to Baltimore in what was originally to have been a major series. Although the Orioles are still within striking distance of the Yankees, its chances remain slim. Rick Wise will be looking to capture his 14th victory of the season for the Red Sox, with Wayne Garland slated to hurl for the Orioles.

CHICAGO [UPI] — Ed Ott's double scored Rennie Stennett from first base with the winning run in the 10th inning yesterday and gave the Pittsburgh Pirates a 5-4 triumph over the Chicago Cubs.

The victory moved the Pirates to within 5½ games of first place Philadelphia in the National League East with only nine games to play. philadelphia host St. Louis Thursday night.

With one out, Stennett singled to center and Ott followed with his double off reliever Darold Knowles, who dropped his seventh game in 12 decisions. Dave Guisti picked up the win in relief of starter Larry Demery and Bruce Kison, making only his second relief appearance, pitched the 10th inning to gain a save.

The Clubs, who rallied back from a four-run deficit to tie the score with four runs in the sixth inning, blew a chance to win the game in the last of the ninth inning when Rookie Jerry Tabb was thrown out at the plate when he attempted to score from second base on an infield hit by Jerry Morales. The throw from shortstop Frank Taveras on Morales' hit got away from first baseman Willie Stargell but Stargell recovered in time to throw out Tabb at the plate.

The Clubs four-run sixth inning rally began when Mick Kelleher was hit a pitch and Tabb walked. Demery retired the next two batters but Bill Madlock and Morales hit consecutive run-scoring singles and Larry Biittner climaxed the rally with a two-run double.

Veeck hires clown as 1B coach

CHICAGO [UPI] — Bill Veeck announced Thursday he has hired baseball clown Max Patkin to coach first base for the Chicago White Sox in their weekend series with the Oakland A's.

Patkin, a 6-foot-5 former minor league pitcher, has been entertaining baseball fans for the past 20 years, the White Sox president said. One of his best acts is mimicking the opposing first baseman while he works the first base coach's box.

White Sox officials said Patkin first entertained for Veeck when he owned the Cleveland franchise.

The White Sox are in last place of the American League West, 25½ games behind Kansas City. A spokesman said Patkin will "add a little life" to the series with the second place Oakland team.

Harriers home tomorrow against Eagles, Bruins

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The men's varsity cross country team will have its first and only home meet of 1976 tomorrow when it takes on Brown and Boston College at 12:15.

In their two opponents, the Minutemen face two very dissimilar foes. BC is 1-1 on the year, having lost to Providence and downing New Hampshire. Unlike past years, BC has no front runner and no real team depth, either, and should not prove to be much of a stumbling block to the Minutemen.

Brown, on the other hand, is 0-1, its loss coming against St. Johns of New York by a 26-31 score. They are a young team led by a fine trio of strong harriers. Harvey Barlow has placed for two years in the New England six-mile in track, and was a New England champ in cross country in high school. Sean McCracken was New England two-mile champ in high school. Both are juniors. Sophomore Herb Leavelle was a Kentucky state cross country champ in high school. Brown is a good dual meet team, but will probably lack the overall depth to beat UMass.

UMass, recently ranked third in the New England cross country poll, based on last year's team and whatever information the coaches have on incoming people, is physically intact for this meet. However, coach Ken O'Brien is holding several runners out of the meet to keep them fresh for upcoming races. Included in this category are Tom and Matt Wolfe, Frank Carroll and Chris Farmer.

"We're going to use John McGrail as a barometer," O'Brien said, "since we know he's in good shape. If we can get five or six kids within 40-45 seconds of him, and all around the 26-minute mark, I think this would show a real good level of condition. "That's a real good effort on our course, because of the terrain," he added.

Right now, 12-14 runners have all looked good in pre-season training, which will make for close competition on Saturday. The captain of the team, McGrail, will probably be the top finisher for UMass. Mike Quinn and Lou Panaccione, both sophomores, had good track seasons and will bear watching.

"Everyone seems to be at least as good as they were last year, and in some cases there's been improvement," O'Brien said.

Assistant coach Arnie Morse added, "I think it's going to be a case where our depth wins it for us, even though Brown has a slight advantage in that they've had a race already."

"We'll win," O'Brien stated emphatically, "We won't screw around with that."

UMass will be off and running in tomorrow's home meet. (Staff Photo by Stuart Eyman)

Freshmen harriers to face Brown, B.C.

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

"The philosophy we use with the freshman program is one of development." The words of freshman cross country coach Arnie Morse pretty well sum up the attitude if not the achievements of the UMass freshman cross country team, the "farm team" for the varsity.

To deal with recent history for a moment, the freshmen of a year ago won both the New England and IC4A championships. Mainstays of that team, Mike Quinn and Lou Panaccione, among others, are now on the varsity roster. According to Morse, this year's team is about three times as good as that outstanding squad.

The junior Minutemen will get a chance to test their mettle tomorrow against the sub varsity teams from Brown and Boston College. The meet should be an easy one, since most teams don't have the depth to match UMass, and must elevate their best runners to the varsity.

Morse predicted a shutout, with a trio of Mike Morris, Jay Legere and Bob Martin leading the way. Closely following this group should be Craig Bloodgood, and in turn, probably Marc Duprey and John Bonsignore.

"I would imagine this is just going to be a test under racing conditions and possibly separate individuals," Morse said "Workouts are great, but races are better," he added.

The runners will take the gun at 12:00 noon right outside the North Physical Education building, and will run a 3.8 mile course through the orchards to the northeast of campus.

It's a better movie than 'Blazing Saddles' or 'Young Frankenstein'. —Rolling Stone

All UMass final?

Rugby team to host tourney

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Rugby team will host the second annual Yankee Conference rugby tournament this Saturday on the playing fields west of Boyden gym.

This tournament, which is to the ruggers what the Beanpot trophy is to the football team, will feature rugby teams from Vermont, URI, Conn, BU, Maine and UNH.

Rugby chieftain Robert "Doc" Lawrence believes that URI will be the toughest opponent for UMass in the tourney.

"Candidly, I think URI will be the toughest, although UConn did beat us last year and UNH always fields a very tough team," Lawrence said.

The Minutemen take an 0-0-1 record into the tournament, as they were tied by the Harvard Business School, 14-14 during the last minute of play last Saturday.

At times during the fierce competition in Cambridge, the UMass pack punished its Ivy League counterparts and threatened to drive them into the murky depths of the Charles River.

Kelley Atterage put the UMass squad into a quick lead as he blocked a Crimson kick, snatched it out of mid-air, and romped 50-yards on the games first scrimmage. Atterage's effort stunned the opposition with its suddenness.

Later, the tenacious UMass scrum drove Harvard back over the goal line. Bob Hopley stumbled upon the loose pigskin to record another UMass tally.

Mike McClay, who played a strong game defensively, accounted for the third try. The UMass forward wall played well with hooker Mark McCabe and wing forward Hugh Chester-Jones.

Unfortunately, the very articulate Rick Lopes suffered a hamstring injury and his status for the tournament remains a day-to-day proposition.

"I'm really surprised we played as well as we did," commented acting co-captain Rick Fioravanti. "Actually we outplayed them and should have won. In the latter stages we suffered a mental collapse which led to a defeatist attitude. Nevertheless, I remain extremely optimistic for our chances in the Yankee tournament," he continued.

In last week's "B" tilt, Harvard emerged victorious, 19-13 in spite of Frank Kenney's truly outstanding performance. UMass preserved a 9-8 "C" tilt victory in the late stages, and romped in the D match, 16-6.

Rugby is a club sport at UMass and must raise money to meet its rising financial obligations. In order to raise money, this weekend's tournament will feature gala festivities in which refreshments, T-shirts and bumper stickers will be sold.

In order to balance off the tournament, UMass will enter two of its teams into the tournament. Needless to say, confidence reigns supreme in the ruggers camp.

"Looks like an all-UMass final. We will maim all opponents," said second-row man Andy Sirica.

The usually loquacious Jeff Stefani was unavailable for comment, but Chuck Trippi, a rugby rookie reiterated, "A good time should be had by all concerned."

Booters host Maine in YanCon match-up

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The Minuteman soccer team will attempt to even their record at 1-1 as the Black Bears of UMaine invade Boyden Field at 11:00 tomorrow morning. Last year the Minutemen routed Maine 7-2 in what coach Russ Kidd called "our best effort of the year."

UMass cannot take this game lightly, however. Coach Kidd explained, "It's very important for us to win in our conference. Last year, for example, Connecticut, the number seven team in the country, entered its last Yankee Conference game with the chance of falling to third place. As far as we're concerned, there are no easy conference games."

Although it lost its opening game to Boston University, Maine should be particularly tough this year. The Black Bears certainly won't want to make the six hour trip back to Orono with a loss such as last year's on their minds. Co-captains Ted Woodbrey and Rusty Keene lead a group of eleven returning lettermen. Woodbury, an All-New England selection last season, is one of the top forwards in the Yankee Conference. All in all, the revenge motive along with the addition of several young quality players should make Maine a strong opponent for the Minutemen.

Of course, after a tough loss like Wednesday's UMass will be very psyched for tomorrow's battle. The Minutemen will be in better shape physically than they were against Bridgeport.

"We're finally overcoming our rash of preseason injuries," Kidd said. "As happens at the beginning of every soccer season, we had all kinds of ankle injuries. We're now in better shape than we've been since we came up here."

One important returnee from a sprained ankle is halfback T.J. O'Brien. He played during the overtime period of the Bridgeport game, but he was not at full strength. "T.J. means an awful lot to us at midfield," Kidd said. "I put him in for about five minutes in the overtime Wednesday, but he wasn't really ready. He should be all right for Maine, though. With him back, it'll allow us to use our strongest line-up."

The starting line-up will be basically the same as Wednesday's. The forwards will be Dave Tagliavini, Tony Biladeau, Bob McChesney and Joel Mascolo. O'Brien will join Andy Moore at halfback and Mike Parsons, Ed Niemiec, Larry Aronson and Steve Macaulay will man the fullback positions. One significant change will be in goal, where Mark Hanks will start. Mark Hodgdon started the Bridgeport game. Choosing between two such evenly matched goal tenders is probably Kidd's most difficult decision before each game.

Kidd noted one aspect on which the Minutemen must improve in order to defeat Maine. "We have to sharpen up on our free kick situations," he said. "We blew at least two or three scoring opportunities against Bridgeport because of improper execution of direct, indirect and corner kicks. If we had capitalized on those free kicks we could have won the game.

"Bridgeport has a hell of a team," he added. "That game should have given us the confidence needed to play well Saturday."

Eleven o'clock may be an early starting time for a soccer game, but you can be sure that both the UMass and the UMaine teams will be wide awake. And yes, soccer is a good cure for a hangover for all of those going to the game.

Men golfers face tough foes in Yale Invitational tourney

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The men's golf team travels to Yale University this weekend for the big three-day, 54-hole Yale Invitational Tournament. Going with the linksters, will be hopes of regaining the winning touch they lost last week in Stowe.

On hand at Yale will be the best schools in New England, in addition to some national powers. The University of Miami, North Carolina State, Yale, Central Connecticut, and of course UConn, will be the teams to watch out for.

Each team is allowed to bring five men, with the best four of five scores being counted on each day of competition.

Heading the delegation from UMass, will be the red hot Jim McDermott. McDermott took low medalist honors at Stowe, and is the proud owner of back to back 71's. Joining McDermott will be senior co-captains Bob Sanderson and Tim Diskin, both coming off fine 74's at Stowe.

Rounding out the team for UMass will be freshmen Flynt Lincoln and Ron Laverdiere. Laverdiere hopes to rebound from the 82 he shot last week, and regain the form he had in his first match, when he fired a 76. Flynt Lincoln's hand, which may have caused him trouble at Stowe, seems all right now, and Lincoln thinks it shouldn't bother him.

Coach Gaudette is looking for a big weekend from his men, but he really does not know how well his team will do. "We had a great match down in Rhode Island, and we had a fair match last week in Stowe. How can I say how well we're going to do this week?"

"Regardless of how well we play, this will be an excellent tournament for us. It will definitely make us a better team for the New England's and the ECAC," said Gaudette.

"If we play badly here, we'll gain from knowing that we need to improve, and work harder. If we win, or if we play well, we know that we are a good team by who we have beaten here. This tournament will be a very good experience for us."

Women linksters set with two invitationals

The UMass women's golf team will play two Invitational matches this weekend as part of its fall schedule. The Mt. Holyoke Invitational will be played today and Saturday, and the UMass Invitational will be played at Hickory Ridge Country Club Sunday and Monday.

Six women from UMass will participate in both matches with Debbie McCulloch holding the number one spot for the team. The Minutewomen are being coaches by Jane McGahan, a newcomer to the UMass coaches.

Penn State and Boston College, along with Mt. Holyoke will be the main competition in the Mt. Holyoke tournament. The match will be the first important one of the season.

Concluding the weekend will be the UMass Invitational which begins at 1 o'clock Sunday and will continue at 8:30 Monday morning.

The outcome of this weekend could foreshadow just how successful the Minutewomen will be this season.

Game on ABC TV

Gridders set for Crimson

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

In a game destined to be one of the key New England match-ups of the year, the UMass football team invades Harvard Stadium tomorrow at 1:30 to do battle with the Crimson of Harvard before an estimated 20,000 fans at Harvard Stadium and an ABC-TV Northeast audience.

The game has all the makings to create a classic 60 minutes. The contest pits a Yankee Conference power in UMass against an Ivy League power in Harvard; the conservative veer offense of coach Dick MacPherson and the Minutemen against the multiflex, always-in-motion offense of innovative coach Joe Restic and the Crimson; and finally, the less publicized, sometimes obscure image of UMass vs. the prestige and tradition of Harvard.

The ingredients are different, but the outcome has been the same for each squad — success. And in matching success vs. success, oddsmakers have installed Harvard a 2½ point favorite on the basis of it being the home team.

Both teams enter the contest with perfect slates. UMass swept its two opponents, with Maine its most recent conquest, 24-3. Meanwhile, Harvard, favored to capture its third consecutive Ivy title, stands at 1-0 with a 34-10 slashing of futile Columbia in the Crimson opener last week.

As to the importance of the game and the impact a Umass win might have, coach MacPherson said it best: "Harvard has people all over the world. Harvard people will open up the New York Times - European edition Sunday morning, and they'll be looking at that score."

Realizing this, UMass has had no trouble getting up for the Crimson. "If anything, we've had trouble getting the players down,"- MacPherson said.

"We've just got to get over the Harvard mystique, and the TV cameras, and just concentrate and play our game," added the coach. "It's a game between two real close teams."

The Crimson attack will be led by senior quarterback Jim Kubacki, who was fourth in the nation last year in total offense. His southpaw aerials will be targeted toward two superb senior receivers, tight end Bob McDermott, and split end Jim Curry. McDermott, All-East last season, suffered a slight knee injury last week but will be ready. He, along with Curry, a second-team All-Ivy League, snared Kubacki passes for touchdowns against Columbia.

When not passing, Kubacki will either run it himself, or hand off to backs Tommy Winn, or Mark Taylor. Winn rushed for 68 yards on 14 carries in the opener. Taylor injured his knee, and with his status questionable tomorrow, Chris Doherty may fill in.

With last year's entire offensive line lost by graduation, Harvard's front was considered its weak link, but MacPherson shunned that thought. "Their offensive line doesn't have the experience this year, but they've got the athletes. And I'll take the athlete over experience every time." With a smile, MacPherson added, "We've got both."

On defense, the Crimson return five starters to their line, plus four other lettermen, marking a unit with depth and experience — and athletes.

"Harvard just has some greatly skilled people," MacPherson said. Depth will never be a problem for them."

Depth has remained an important factor for UMass also. Defensive stalwarts Steve Telander and Todd Holt are definitely out, and co-captain John Toner most likely the same. Telander and Toner have yet to play this year, while Holt reinjured a knee operated on last spring. Junior Vic Jeffries will start at Holt's cornerback spot, and may be severely tested by the Harvard passing game.

"He played well for us last week and had an interception," MacPherson said. "Going on that, I think he'll be all right."

The offense will remain the same as running backs Rich Jessamy and Billy Coleman, among YanCon leaders after two weeks, hope to duplicate their Maine performance. QB Brian McNally will again round out the backfield.

"We can't worry about Harvard, about its offense, and all its motion," MacPherson stated. "We've got to take care of our own store and we'll be all right."

The last Harvard—UMass game was in '73, with the Crimson a 24-7 victor, revenging a 28-19 loss the previous year.

"Harvard is just a great game for us," MacPherson said. "We should play it every year. It really excites our students, and they'll be there.

"We're competitive with the Ivy League as past performances have shown. We can play with them."

On the bulletin outside the UMass locker room under the heading "Word for the Day" it read, "BEAT HARVARD."

TV cameras, mystique, match-ups, and the past all aside, that is the focal point for the Minutemen tomorrow.

Metawampe's Grid Picks

What can one say! After a near perfect week on the soothsaying field of honor, and with the heat of summer long last given way to the beauteous autumn, Wednesday night was a time for celebrating. My pigskin prognostic powers and the pecuniary thrill of being able to turn off the air conditioning, combined to give us a festive mood. Those electric bills are murder!

Previously, on Tuesday night, a vote had been taken on whether or not to hold an Indian Summer. Despite strong opposition from the underarm deodorant bloc, the vote ended 17 for, 149 against, with three abstaining. The deodorant contingent warned that the local economy would suffer if cooler weather brought drier armpits before a profit could be burned. "We're Sure," they added.

Nonetheless, such trivial issues need not concern us now. The fact is, "I'm Sure":

MASSACHUSETTS 21 - HARVARD 13
Restic dresses many player,
Still, Crimson really don't have prayer.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY 23 - NORTHEASTERN 19
This game battle to find top dog,
Terriers leave Huskies in partial fog.
(The injun's headdress is too tight.)

DARTMOUTH 16 - NEW HAMPSHIRE 15
Both clubs hungry, lean and mean,
Wildcats drown in sea of Green.

BROWN 37 - RHODE ISLAND 14
Loss of Bateman makes Bruins less aesthetic,
But lowly Rams still terribly pathetic.
(Call a doctor, the Great One's finger is stuck in the dictionary.)

CONNECTICUT 22 - YALE 17
Lack of practice makes Bulldogs suffer,
This early in season Huskies tougher.

MAINE 28 - CENTRAL CONNECTICUT 13
Since victory makes good rhyme and reason,
Black Bears schedule one doormat a season.

BOSTON COLLEGE 34 - TULANE 7
Eagles receiving national press,
Why Tulane still funds football no one can guess.

MICHIGAN 27 - NAVY 3
Midshipmen set sail for Ann Arbor,
Never make it out of harbor.

Desavtel too much, scores four goals, stickers dropped, 7-1

SPRINGFIELD — The UMass Women's Field Hockey team ran into a tough Springfield College club and came up on the short end of a 7-1 score yesterday.

The Minutewomen could not stop the Chief's Denise Desavtel, who scored the first four goals. UMass trailed 3-0, until Sue Kibling scored to bring the visitors to within two goals. Unfortunately, UMass could not manage another goal as the Chiefs were just too powerful.

"Springfield was just beating us to the ball," said UMass Coach Judith Davidson. "Our defense was not marking close enough. It gave Springfield time to maneuver the ball."

One advantage Springfield has was that it was used to playing on Astroturf.

"It made the game faster. We weren't used to it," said Davidson.

"The team really hung together," she added. "We had some bad breaks, even though we did make a lot of fundamental mistakes."

The UMass junior varsity overcame a 2-0 halftime deficit to defeat the Springfield sub varsity 3-2. Julie McHugh, Fran Cornaccoli and Pat DeCaire scored for the winners.

The Minutewomen will be in action tomorrow again when they host college sports day.

University suspends vandalism suspect

By RICK GUREGHIAN
and PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

A Southwest area sophomore has been suspended indefinitely from the University for allegedly throwing a cinderblock from the window of his dormitory lounge.

David McDonough, 19, of Belmont, Mass., was officially suspended from the University on Friday. University officials said last night that McDonough has until noon today to vacate his room.

The ninth floor resident of George Washington dormitory is alleged to have thrown the cinderblock from his floor's lounge window in the early morning hours of Sept. 11th.

Witnesses allege that McDonough was involved in a poker game on the morning of the incident, and, angered at losing money in the game, threw the cinderblock out the window. McDonough, although unavailable last night for comment, is alleged to have told University officials that he accidentally knocked the cinderblock from a ledge in the ninth floor lounge.

The suspension has been termed "indefinite," but University officials said last night that the suspension may last for one semester, or carry through the full school year.

In recent weeks, the Southwest area has been beset by numerous reports concerning objects being thrown from the windows of high-rise dormitories.

On Sept. 16, near-tragedy unfolded when a University student was hit on the head by a roll of toilet paper tossed from a window of John F. Kennedy tower. The student, Steven Rodman, was momentarily knocked unconscious, and spent three days in the University infirmary under precautionary measures.

Although Southwest officials have been decidedly mum concerning the accident it has been revealed that they have been conducting an in-house investigation of the McDonough incident sicce they first learned of it more than two weeks ago.

Sources have told the Collegian that pressure was exerted on those students involved in the poker game to name the perpetrator.

It is nuclear if any criminal complaints will be filed against McDonough.

NW Road endorsement due

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Town Selectmen are expected today to certify an article submitted Friday by the UMass administration asking the town to endorse the construction of the Northwest Road.

The UMass article was one of five submitted to the town on Friday, concerning plans to resurrect northern portions of the defunct Northeast Bypass.

Deadline for submitting articles was 4:30 p.m. on Friday.

Each article needed a minimum 100 signatures of registered Amherst voters to be included in the town warrant that will be presented at the Oct. 18 town meeting.

Articles are included in the warrant only after the signatures are certified.

The UMass administration Friday submitted a proposal for the construction of a $1.5 million road between North Pleasant Street and Route 116. The proposal includes extending Commonwealth Avenue north to the new road and on through to North Village.

In addition, the Amherst Chamber of Commerce submitted an article to see if the town will endorse a road connecting East Pleasant Street to North Pleasant Street just below Presidential apartments.

Together these two roads form much of the northern section of the Northeast Bypass which was defeated at the Amherst Town Meeting last May.

Plans for the Northeast Bypass stemmed from university plans to re-route traffic around North Pleasant Street to eliminate what it saw as a safety hazard to pedestrians.

Richard H. Minearof Amherst, a vocal opponent to bypass plans, submitted two articles to go on the town warrant Friday in opposition to road construction plans.

Minear's articles call for the town to oppose construction of the Northeast Bypass or any part thereof and to appoint a seven member committee to study designs of the Northeast Bypass proposals if approved by the October town meeting and report back in May 1977.

Richard D. Harper of Amherst is sponsoring an article to appoint a seven member committee to study specific traffic patterns on the UMass campus and in North Amherst.

Harper's proposed committee would also report back in May 1977.

According to the University and Chamber of Commerce articles, both the Rte. 116 — North Pleasant Street and the North Pleasant Street — East Pleasant Street connectors would be built and payed for by the state Department of Public Works.

According to a seven-page report released last week by the University coordinator of Community Relations Gerald Grady, the University's proposed road would belong to the University after built and UMass would pay for its annual maintenance.

According to the report, "The new proposal represents a reasonable compromise between the Northeast Bypass, which was defeated in May, and no action whatsoever."

The report also presented plans by the University "to place restrictions on entering Governors' Drive from the East, and Stockbridge Drive from the North," as well as, "rerouting University buses to use Stockbridge Road," in an effort to reduce North Pleasant Street traffic.

"The improvement of Governors' Drive, Commonwealth Avenue, and Stockbridge will create a transportation circle around the core of the campus which will provide a better bus route," the report stated.

Other road changes currently planned by the University include the installation of traffic lights at the intersections of Commonwealth and Massachusetts Avenues, University and Massachusetts Avenues, and elsewhere, according Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Reverend Quigley chat with an Amherst official at the 1975 Amherst "Community Day".

Amherst readies for third annual Community Day

By MARY ANN MAYNARD
Collegian Staff

It is easy to forget there is more to Amherst than UMass. Well, there is, and if you enjoy football, food, entertainment, and-or gambling, this Saturday will be a good time to find out about the real Amherst.

On Saturday, Oct. 2, the third annual "Community Day" will take place on the Amherst Common.

The event sponsored by the Amherst Chamber of Commerce, provides an opportunity for newcomers to meet friends, neighbors and town officials, according to James Lumley, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

Community Day is an enlargement of the Amherst newcomers dinner which was held annually in the Student Union Ballroom for the benefit of the new folks in town.

In 1974 the Chamber of Commerce decided to have an outside affair in which the whole community could come together to refresh or start friendships, and meet their town officials.

Those serving the food, drink, and selling tickets are all prominent figures in the town of Amherst. Last year UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery was stationed at the beer booth, along with the presidents of Amherst and Hampshire Colleges.

The day will begin with the Amherst College vs. Bowdoin College football game at 1:30 p.m. on Pratt Field.

While those intersted in view the football game, there will be a children's fair on the Common and an arts and craft fair in the Herter Hall Art Gallery sponsored by the University Women.

After the game a chicken barbeque will begin on the Common. Also, local entertainment, such as the University Faculty Oompah Band, the Senior Citizens Chorus, a trupet demonstration, clowns, magicians, and a six year-old Amherst fiddler, will be there.

The tickets are $5 and include a ticket to the football game, a chicken dinner, and a raffle ticket for an expense paid two week vacation in the Caribbean. Besides the trip, 100 prizes, including a color television and a citizen's band radio, will be raffle off. The prizes are all donated by the Amherst merchants.

Video Project provides spectrum of instruction

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Video taping workshops, on aspects ranging from sending beginners out to do a little taping on portable taping systems to teaching more advanced people about lighting and production techniques, will be conducted by Mary-beth Santarelli and David Lynn, education coordinators of the Student Video Project.

"Video taping is just like audio taping but with visual capabilities," said David Skillicorn, managing coordinator of the project. "It's an electronic process rather than a photographic one that uses light. It makes possible instant playbacks of things that have just been taped."

"Anybody can do it, it's not hard at all," said Skillicorn.

The workshops will be held every Thursday night at the project's studio in Campus Center room 115 at 8:00.

The purpose of the Student Video Project is twofold; to make available resource so students can learn about video taping, and to enable students to go off and work on projects of their own.

There are currently about 30 members of the Student Video Project. "The more people involved, the more we can do," said Skillicorn. He said any interested student can attend orientation meetings which he holds every Tuesday at 3:30 p.m. in the project office, 406D on the second floor of he Student Union, or to call 5-1336.

The organization came into existence in 1969 and was funded by the Student Government Association. Twelve to 15 thousand dollars worth of equipment was purchased at that time, said Skillicorn. After that, interest dwindled.

"Last fall, the project came close to being scrapped," said Skillicorn. That is when he became involved, taking the initiative to find an available room for use as a studio and getting together a group of other interested students. Membership last fall was usually between 30 and 40, he said, and equipment loans numbered in the hundreds.

Their equipment consists of two cameras, a switcher, monitors, a lighting system, a microphone system, and an 8650 editing deck, in addition to four porti-pac systems which enable one to go anywhere without needing electricity.

Any University student can use the equipment as long as they demonstrate technical competence, Skillicorn said. Priority for equipment loans is given to members, except for one porti-pac system that goes out on a first-come first-served basis.

Archive distribution Coordinator Rita Russell makes arrangements for the project's shows to go out over cable television in Amherst, Sylvan TV, to be shown at the Blue Wall and in "side-walk" exhibitions. She is also compiling a video library. There will be a catalog of all available tapes put out in November, which any interested student will be able to view whenever they like. There are currently 200 to 250 programs available, including the Toward Tomorrow Fair, the Seabrook occupation, the Presidential debate, a documentary on WMUA, and the July 4th rally in Philadelphia.

Landscape improvement project sees SU area as 'top priority'

By CHRIS WOODCOCK
Collegian Staff

The area in front of the Student Union has been labelled as the top priority of the Campus Landscaping Improvement Program (CLIP), according to co-director Ed Simpson.

Simpson said CLIP is a long-term beautification project devised to take advantage of on-campus resources and personnel, since no capital outlay money has been made available.

"This is a program where over a period of time we will do our own campus planning," Simpson said, "hopefully getting campus support and maybe showing the state that it would be worthwhile for them to help."

The principal funders of CIIP are the Alumni Association, which will donate $5000 over a two or three year period, along with UMass administration and the provost's office.

Although CLIP is still in the designing stages, staff and students of the School of Landscape Architecture are working with the Planning Office, the Physical Plant, and Simpson to develop an overall planning criteria.

Due to the lack of funds and the awesome landscaping job facing them, Simpson said CLIP designers are identifying and developing individual project areas, instead of attempting to handle the entire task all at once.

"These project areas are designed not to be piece meal, but additive," said Simpson. "Those areas with the most traffic and those in the worst condition will be done first."

Simpson said the tract of land in front of the Student Union will be the first of these project areas to be landscaped.

"We hope to have the Student Union design completed by the spring," he said, "with the actual landscaping starting in late spring or early summer."

Simpson added that landscaping would bring radical changes to the area.

"The first thing will be to rip out that street, then the heavily trafficked areas will be paved. Shrubs and bushes will be planted in the less travelled areas," Simpson said.

Since the Student Union serves as a meeting place for students and faculty, Simpson said there is a need for an area where people can simply sit and talk.

This could probably be accomplished by utilizing benches of some kind,he said.

The Physical Plant grounds labor forces will handle the actual landscaping, Simpson continued, unless specific problems arise which call for outside help.

Simpson said that CLIP will take 10 years to complete and could take as long as 15 years, depending on how successful the directors are in obtaining financial and moral support for the project.

Baroque Radio faces problems

By CHARLES BARBER
Collegian Staff

Baroque Enterprises, which last year sponsored such films on campus as "Deep Throat," "The Devil in Miss Jones" and "Wet Rainbow", wants to use its profits to set up a radio station in Washington tower, but it is facing opposition from groups within the Southwest community.

The controversy, which began last February over the showing of X-rated films in the Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest.

Baroque Enterprises was set up last semester by Albert Sparks as a Recognized Student Organization. It does not receive any student funds. Sparks told the Collegian that his efforts to try and show x-rated movies as an individual had been frustrated by University regulations, and he therefore set up Baroque Enterprises "to promote cultural awareness of all kinds."

Sparks obtained permission to run a film series in Hampden last February, but when the nature of the proposed films became known in the community, some students requested that the Southwest Assembly should discuss the desirability of such a program.

The issue was duly considered, and the assembly passed a motion banning the showing of pornographic films in Hampden, on the grounds that they were sexist and oppressive.

Sparks said this motion inhibited his freedom of expression, so he took the matter to the Student Government Association Attorney General for review.

No action has been taken by the judiciary against the Southwest assembly to date, according to assemby chairperson Chris Durkin.

Sparks is now seeking a referdum on the use of Hampden for X-rated films, but this will not happen until Oct. 5 at least, since any referendum must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the assembly, which will not meet until then.

The essential controversy here is philosophical, according to Floyd Martin, associate director of Southwest, and Durkin.

The long-standing priorities of Southwest are combatting racism, sexism, and all forms of oppression, according to Martin, and he does not want an organization considered sexist by many people in Southwest to gain a foothold, let alone a mouthpiece in the community.

Both Martin and Durkin stressed the broad-base support for their position, including the Southwest Women's center, the Everywoman's Center, the Southwest Men's center, the assembly and the staff of Southwest, as well as many people in the community.

Martin expressed doubt that Washington students would actually have control over the radio station, and Durkin says that Sparks told him that the general manager would be from Baroque.

Sparks has not responded thus far to Martin's request for more detailed information concerning programming and student control of the station.

The Southwest Assembly has not taken an official position on the radio station, but Durkin says the general response he has gotten were that "we know where Sparks is coming from...we have enough problems here trying to get people to take responsibility for their community and its problems, what with alcoholism, dangerous objects flying out of towers, blatant sexism and racism. We don't feel we need Baroque Enterprises and their sexist attitudes."

Sparks denies that he is a sexist, and furthermore feels that the movies Baroque sponsored last spring were not sexist.

"To call these films sexist is as much of a value judgement as calling women inferior is", he said. Baroque only shows X-rated films because they draw a good crowd, he said, "Its purely an economic thing."

According to Sparks, Baroque is planning both films and live appearances by pornography stars. Whether any of these activities will take place in Southwest is still in doubt, however.

Martin said he feels confident that the community will be able to keep all Baroque activities out of Southwest.

One room damaged by blaze in Cance

Estimates of damage caused by fire in Cance dormitory on Friday night are not expected until mid-week, according to John Findley, Southwest area management coordinator.

Ron Call, Rod Smith, and Paul Achille were the occupants of the room. None were home at the time of the blaze.

Achille has a brother John who also lives in the Cance on the second floor.

"The room was a total loss however the fire was localized within the one room," said one witness.

Smoke blackened the walls and ceilings of the corridor. Firemen threw the still burning mattresses out the window as well as charred clothes, a couch, a chair and the burned remains of a wooden closet.

One of the residents of the room was said to have lost a new stereo system in the fire.

When asked what she thought of the fire, Barbara Fienman, one of the two sudent heads of residence in Cance replied, "Not much."

Water used to put out the blaze drenched the carpet outside the room and firemen used squeegees to push some of it back into the room.

Residents of the corridor were allowed to go back to their rooms accompanied by the resident assistant or one of the heads of residence to get what they needed for the night.

Marcy Lulbin of 328 Cance reported the fire when she "heard crackling noises", in the room located across the hall.

Smoke from the blaze could be seen across Southwest.

One of the firemen was concerned that the room above the fire had not been opened however it was later learned that the room was not damaged other than that from smoke.

Physical Plant personnel would not estimate the damage last night and would not comment on the fire.

The Department of Public Safety said last night that Officer Jon Schmitter responded to the fire at 11:29. In his report he listed the damage at an estimated $3000. "Just a lot of smoke and fire," said a department spokesperson.

Glen Fowler, the resident assistant of the corridor, refused to comment on the fire or the possible damages.

Outside the dorm a pile of burned furniture and clothes still remained Saturday morning. The ground was littered with bits of glass from the broken window.

The door was wedged shut on Saturday afternoon and was covered with blisters of paint.

The three-year old prohibition against merit salary increases at UMass originated with the presidents of state and community colleges and not the state Legislature, according to Senate President Kevin B. Harrington.

Joseph S. Larson, president of the Amherst Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) said Harrington's disclosure came during a meeting in Boston last week.

"Ever since we lost merit salary increases, we were told it was a legislative mandate," Larson said. "This was the first we have heard this is where it really originated."

Larson said that he and AAUP member Otto Stein and James Ludtke and a representative from the UMass-Boston campus met with Harrington to discuss the status of his reorganization plan. During the meeting, they brought up the issue of the merti increase prohibition.

Larson said Harrington told them the ban against increases originated over three years ago in a meeting in his office of the Ways and Means Committee and presidents of state colleges and universities to discuss budget proposals for fiscal year 1975.

The presidents told the legislators that they were seeking additional funding in three or four areas, including merit increases and additional administrative support. Members of the Ways and Means Committee told the presidents that there was not enough money to cover all the areas. Larson said the president then decided to drop the request for merit increases.

Howard White, special assistant to President Robert C. Wood, said he could not comment on the matter. He said Wood was still in Japan and was unavailable for comment until this week upon his return.

This is the third year in which the approved budget has included a provision prohibiting merit increases for UMass faculty.

Amherst readies for third annual Community Day

By MARY ANN MAYNARD
Collegian Staff

It is easy to forget there is more to Amherst than UMass. Well, there is, and if you enjoy football, food, entertainment, and-or gambling, this Saturday will be a good time to find out about the real Amherst.

On Saturday, Oct. 2, the third annual "Community Day" will take place on the Amherst Common.

The event sponsored by the Amherst Chamber of Commerce, provides an opportunity for newcomers to meet friends, neighbors and town officials, according to James Lumley, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

Community Day is an enlargement of the Amherst newcomers dinner which was held annually in the Student Union Ballroom for the benefit of the new folks in town.

In 1974 the Chamber of Commerce decided to have an outside affair in which the whole community could come together to refresh or start friendships, and meet their town officials.

Those serving the food, drink, and selling tickets are all prominent figures in the town of Amherst. Last year UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery was stationed at the beer booth, along with the presidents of Amherst and Hampshire Colleges.

The day will begin with the Amherst College vs. Bowdoin College football game at 1:30 p.m. on Pratt Field.

While those intersted in view the football game, there will be a children's fair on the Common and an arts and craft fair in the Herter Hall Art Gallery sponsored by the University Women.

After the game a chicken barbeque will begin on the Common. Also, local entertainment, such as the University Faculty Oompah Band, the Senior Citizens Chorus, a trupet demonstration, clowns, magicians, and a six year-old Amherst fiddler, will be there.

The tickets are $5 and include a ticket to the football game, a chicken dinner, and a raffle ticket for an expense paid two week vacation in the Caribbean. Besides the trip, 100 prizes, including a color television and a citizen's band radio, will be raffle off. The prizes are all donated by the Amherst merchants.

Video Project provides spectrum of instruction

By FIFI BALL

Video taping workshops, on aspects ranging from sending beginners out to do a little taping on portable taping systems to teaching more advanced people about lighting and production techniques, will be conducted by Mary-beth Santarelli and David Lynn, education coordinators of the Student Video Project.

"Video taping is just like audio taping but with visual capabilities," said David Skillicorn, managing coordinator of the project. "It's an electronic process rather than a photographic one that uses light. It makes possible instant playbacks of things that have just been taped."

"Anybody can do it, it's not hard at all," said Skillicorn.

The workshops will be held every Thursday night at the project's studio in Campus Center room 115 at 8:00.

The purpose of the Student Video Project is twofold; to make available resource so students can learn about video taping, and to enable students to go off and work on projects of their own.

There are currently about 30 members of the Student Video Project. "The more people involved, the more we can do," said Skillicorn. He said any interested student can attend orientation meetings which he holds every Tuesday at 3:30 p.m. in the project office, 406D on the second floor of he Student Union, or to call 5-1336.

The organization came into existence in 1969 and was funded by the Student Government Association. Twelve to 15 thousand dollars worth of equipment was purchased at that time, said Skillicorn. After that, interest dwindled.

"Last fall, the project came close to being scrapped," said Skillicorn. That is when he became involved, taking the initiative to find an available room for use as a studio and getting together a group of other interested students. Membership last fall was usually between 30 and 40, he said, and equipment loans numbered in the hundreds.

Their equipment consists of two cameras, a switcher, monitors, a lighting system, a microphone system, and an 8650 editing deck, in addition to four porti-pac systems which enable one to go anywhere without needing electricity.

Any University student can use the equipment as long as they demonstrate technical competence, Skillicorn said. Priority for equipment loans is given to members, except for one porti-pac system that goes out on a first-come first-served basis.

Archive distribution Coordinator Rita Russell makes arrangements for the project's shows to go out over cable television in Amherst, Sylvan TV, to be shown at the Blue Wall and in "side-walk" exhibitions. She is also compiling a video library. There will be a catalog of all available tapes put out in November, which any interested student will be able to view whenever they like. There are currently 200 to 250 programs available, including the Toward Tomorrow Fair, the Seabrook occupation, the Presidential debate, a documentary on WMUA, and the July 4th rally in Philadelphia.

Landscape improvement project sees SU area as 'top priority'

By CHRIS WOODCOCK
Collegian Staff

The area in front of the Student Union has been labelled as the top priority of the Campus Landscaping Improvement Program (CLIP), according to co-director Ed Simpson.

Simpson said CLIP is a long-term beautification project devised to take advantage of on-campus resources and personnel, since no capital outlay money has been made available.

"This is a program where over a period of time we will do our own campus planning," Simpson said, "hopefully getting campus support and maybe showing the state that it would be worthwhile for them to help."

The principal funders of CIIP are the Alumni Association, which will donate $5000 over a two or three year period, along with UMass administration and the provost's office.

Although CLIP is still in the designing stages, staff and students of the School of Landscape Architecture are working with the Planning Office, the Physical Plant, and Simpson to develop an overall planning criteria.

Due to the lack of funds and the awesome landscaping job facing them, Simpson said CLIP designers are identifying and developing individual project areas, instead of attempting to handle the entire task all at once.

"These project areas are designed not to be piece meal, but additive," said Simpson. "Those areas with the most traffic and those in the worst condition will be done first."

Simpson said the tract of land in front of the Student Union will be the first of these project areas to be landscaped.

"We hope to have the Student Union design completed by the spring," he said, "with the actual landscaping starting in late spring or early summer."

Simpson added that landscaping would bring radical changes to the area.

"The first thing will be to rip out that street, then the heavily trafficked areas will be paved. Shrubs and bushes will be planted in the less travelled areas," Simpson said.

Since the Student Union serves as a meeting place for students and faculty, Simpson said there is a need for an area where people can simply sit and talk.

This could probably be accomplished by utilizing benches of some kind, he said.

The Physical Plant grounds labor forces will handle the actual landscaping, Simpson continued, unless specific problems arise which call for outside help.

Simpson said that CLIP will take 10 years to complete and could take as long as 15 years, depending on how successful the directors are in obtaining financial and moral support for the project.

Baroque Radio faces problems

By CHARLES BARBER
Collegian Staff

Baroque Enterprises, which last year sponsored such films on campus as "Deep Throat," "The Devil in Miss Jones" and "Wet Rainbow", wants to use its profits to set up a radio station in Washington tower, but it is facing opposition from groups within the Southwest community.

The controversy, which began last February over the showing of X-rated films in the Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest.

Baroque Enterprises was set up last semester by Albert Sparks as a Recognized Student Organization. It does not receive any student funds. Sparks told the Collegian that his efforts to try and show x-rated movies as an individual had been frustrated by University regulations, and he therefore set up Baroque Enterprises "to promote cultural awareness of all kinds."

Sparks obtained permission to run a film series in Hampden last February, but when the nature of the proposed films became known in the community, some students requested that the Southwest Assembly should discuss the desirability of such a program.

The issue was duly considered, and the assembly passed a motion banning the showing of pornographic films in Hampden, on the grounds that they were sexist and oppressive.

Sparks said this motion inhibited his freedom of expression, so he took the matter to the Student Government Association Attorney General for review.

No action has been taken by the judiciary against the Southwest assembly to date, according to assemby chairperson Chris Durkin.

Sparks is now seeking a referdum on the use of Hampden for X-rated films, but this will not happen until Oct. 5 at least, since any referendum must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the assembly, which will not meet until then.

The essential controversy here is philosophical, according to Floyd Martin, associate director of Southwest, and Durkin.

The long-standing priorities of Southwest are combatting racism, sexism, and all forms of oppression, according to Martin, and he does not want an organization considered sexist by many people in Southwest to gain a foothold, let alone a mouthpiece in the community.

Both Martin and Durkin stressed the broad-base support for their position, including the Southwest Women's center, the Everywoman's Center, the Southwest Men's center, the assembly and the staff of Southwest, as well as many people in the community.

Martin expressed doubt that Washington students would actually have control over the radio station, and Durkin says that Sparks told him that the general manager would be from Baroque.

Sparks has not responded thus far to Martin's request for more detailed information concerning programming and student control of the station.

The Southwest Assembly has not taken an official position on the radio station, but Durkin says the general response he has gotten were that "we know where Sparks is coming from...we have enough problems here trying to get people to take responsibility for their community and its problems, what with alcoholism, dangerous objects flying out of towers, blatant sexism and racism. We don't feel we need Baroque Enterprises and their sexist attitudes."

Sparks denies that he is a sexist, and furthermore feels that the movies Baroque sponsored last spring were not sexist.

"To call these films sexist is as much of a value judgement as calling women inferior is", he said. Baroque only shows X-rated films because they draw a good crowd, he said, "Its purely an economic thing."

According to Sparks, Baroque is planning both films and live appearances by pornography stars. Whether any of these activities will take place in Southwest is still in doubt, however.

Martin said he feels confident that the community will be able to keep all Baroque activities out of Southwest.

Bottle Bill remains controversial

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

The economic and environmental impact of the Bottle Bill, which will appear as referendum question No. 6 on the November ballot, continues to be a controversial issue in Massachusetts.

The proposal advocates at least a five-cent refund on reusable bottles and cans, and prohibits detachable flip top cans.

While opponents claim prices will increase and jobs will be lost as a result of the bill, supporters cite long term financial gains and job "relocations."

A Federal Reserve Bank report released in March indicates it is unlikely the proposal will cause a "noticeable" increase in retail beverage prices and even suggests some prices might fall.

Joseph R. Gabrielle of Springfield, president of the Massachusetts Package Dealers Association, sharply disagrees with these findings.

He stressed that the extra labor needed to transport the empty containers from retailer to manufacturer will result in higher prices for the consumer.

Gabrielle, who represents 2,000 independent retailers in the state, also pointed out that "high-skilled" jobs in bottle and can manufacturing will decrease and more "lower skilled" clerks and transporters will be needed for the recycling process.

"It's not fair that the head of a household will be replaced by a kid who will settle for a less paying job," he said.

"The Bottle Bill is like trying to cure a brain tumor with an aspirin," Gabrielle added. "We shouldn't have to change the entire industry around just for a few sick slobs who won't pick up their own litter."

The report states although employment in the manufacturing of beverage containers would decline, jobs in bottling, bottle cleaning, collecting and transporting would expand, a net job gain of between 97 and 1380 jobs.

"This will more than affect the cost of making a sturdier bottle," said Jonathan Souweine of the Massachusetts Public Interest Group (PIRG).

Souweine claims that a reusable bottle can be used from seven to ten times in its lifetime. Initial cost of the container would be ten cents, while disposable bottles now cost four to six cents to manufacture.

"We must also remember that this country has a limited amount of natural resources," he said.

According to Souweine, manufacturing disposable bottles and cans use 44 per cent of all U.S. container glass, 5.6 per cent of the country's aluminum and 2 per cent of the steel.

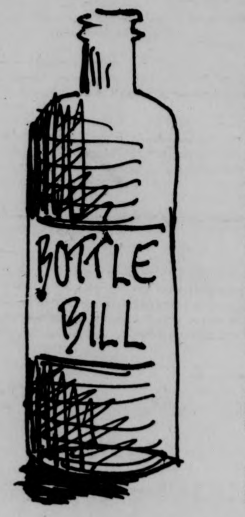
He said 50 to 70 per cent of the litter by volume in the state is caused by these beverage containers and $75 million is spent annually in Massachusetts to pick it up.

"The environment in America is in sad shape," said Mass PIRG representative Susan Kaplan.

"People must realize that implementing the Bobble Bill in this state will be a positive move toward cleaner living."

An area liquor retailer, who wishes anonymity, cites the proposal as "a double transaction that I'm only getting paid once for."

Estimating that he sells about 500 cases of beer a week, he added, "I don't have the space for filthy, dirty bottles with cockroaches. Why does the poor retailer have to pay to clean up our environment?"



Elisa Campbell, chairperson of the local chapter of the Sierra Club, a national environmental organization, notes that "the bill is not being passed for the benefit of the retailer."

"We're not trying to put anyone out of business," she said. "But by renting a bottle or can instead of buying it the consumer will save money and the state will be cleaner."

The Committee for Jobs and Convenience Containers recently reported with the state Office of Campaign and Political Finance that it had raised more than $667,000 for the anti-Bottle Bill crusade.

Some of the major contributers include the Can Manufacturing Institute of Washington, D.C., Pepsi-Cola Company of New York, and the Glass Container Company of California.

Kaplan estimated that the Committee for a Massachusetts Bottle Bill has collected less than $8000.

Pointing out close to 85 per cent of the anti-Bottle Bill revenue is from outside industries, she said large corporations are "worried."

Though Oregon and Vermont have similar bills, she said Massachusetts is the "most industrial and highest populated state" to introduce such a measure.

Calling their strategy "a medi blitz," Kaplan added, "It's important people are not swayed b propaganda. The large corporation are trying to sell the product, no tell the truth."

She said they are using deceptiv billboards, radio, and televisio commercials and leaflets to influence the public.

Bottle Bill Committee Treasure state Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. (D Oxford) recently stated outsid corporations will spend "millions o dollars on questionable advertisement claiming that the Bottl Bill will not reduce litter, when i will; that it does not apply only t beer and soda, which it does; an that it will create new jobs for th Commonwealth. which it will."

He compared this "advertisin strategy" to that used in Dad County, Florida, in 1974.

According to the Summar Report Dade County Bottle Ordinance, released last year, opponents of the Bottle Bill outspen the proponents by 150 to 1 an conducted "a misleading blanke media campaign" against th proposal.

The report said 44 per cent o these funds came from outside th state of Florida.

The measure was voted down 5 per cent to 42 per cent.

Aluminum monopoly at hand?

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Council on Wage and Price Stability said yesterday Alcoa, Reynolds and Kaiser are getting close to pinching off competition in their industry when they can raise aluminum prices during a recession.

But the council, a White House price-watching agency, fell short of saying the three corporations — which control 70 per cent of the aluminum industry — were guilty of any wrongdoing.

Aluminum is a basic metal used in products ranging from cars to household appliances.

The council discussed the strength of the industry giants in a study begun 20 months ago and reportedly released before the presidential election to avoid charges it was restrained for political reasons.

Acting Director William Lilley III denied at a briefing that the White House bowed to industry pressure and ordered deletions of controversial segments of the report.

Lilley said President Ford and White House adviser L. William Seidman expressed "no interest" in it in his dealings with them.

Administration sources, however, said there were "instances of pressure" from the Oval Office, especially in regard to sections of the report that dealt with breaking up aluminum corporations.

The council published 243 pages, but deleted another 350 pages from the original text, including references to proposals the three aluminum giants should be broken up to increase competition.

Lilley confirmed the proposals were made, but said they were removed for lack of evidence and industry actually is anticompetitive and because the effect of breaking up the companies had not been considered.

"The evidence was simply not there to sustain such a strong statement," he said. Experts from both industry and academia argued the divestiture statements should be removed, Lilley said, and "I think they were right."

Lilley also said the council did n pursue anticompetititiv developments discovered in th study, because that appeared to b "a task more appropriate for th antitrust division of the Justic Department." The council did n refer its findings to the Justic Department, he added.

Aluminum shipments dropped 3 per cent during the recession second only to the 35 per cen decline for zinc within the basi metals industry. But prices increased 5 per cent. Prices fo copper and zinc fell. Aluminum an steel prices rose.

The council in an earlier repor said the steel price increases were "justified." Although the study sai aluminum increases suggested antitrust activity, it noted aluminum production requires a higher investment of money than labor comapred with other industries. As a result, aluminum production costs continued to escalate despite widespread layoffs in the industry.

NYC church comes out vs. abortion

NEW YORK [UPI] — Cardinal Terence Cooke, head of the 1.8-million member Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York, said yesterday that while the church is neutral on candidates and political parties, it cannot be neutral on moral issues — particularly abortions.

In a rare address from the pulpit at St. Patrick's Cathedral, the cardinal emphasized that "the church is not endorsing or approving" any political candidates in this election year.

Study of Ford's funds denied

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Watergate Special Prosecutor Charles Ruff declined comment yesterday on reports his office is investigating whether laundered funds from two maritime unions were secretly paid to President Ford from 1964 to 1974 when he was a congressman.

White House counsel Philip Buchen told reporters he received no information from the special prosecutor's office that Ford is the target of an investigation into the financing of his congressional campaign.

"Our standard response to all questions in this matter since the Wall Street Journal story is no comment," Ruff said in a telephone interview.

The Journal reported last week that Ruff's office subpoenaed documents from the Kent County, Mich., Republican Committee and the party's county finance committee for campaigns dating back to 1964. Ford represented the 5th Congressional District, which includes Kent County.

The Journal also reported that Ruff has issued a second subpoena to the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, a maritime union headquartered in New York which was Ford's largest contributor when he last ran for Congress in 1972.

Buchen reportedly expressed surprise at reports that the special prosecutor's office was investigating whether funds from the maritime unions were laundered through the political committees and secretly given to Ford. He said he has received no information that Ford is the target of the probe.

Air crashes take over thirty lives

[AP] — An Air Force jet tanker, a Johnson & Johnson company jet and a private plane owned by a Denver law firm crashed within a six-hour period in three states yesterday, killing more than 30 persons, authorities said.

Air Force officials said there were five survivors in the crash of the Air Force KC-135 in Michigan which killed 15. All those aboard privately owned planes that crashed in Virginia and Colorado were reported to have died.

Officials in Virginia said 11 persons were aboard the Johnson & Johnson Co. jet which crashed at Hot Springs and a federal spokesman in Denver said the number of persons aboard the law firm plane that crashed at Steamboat Springs was undetermined. Initial reorts placed the number of casualties in that crash at six.

The Air Force said its plane crashed and exploded in a wooded area of Lower Michigan. Five injured survivors were admitted to a hospital. Four were reported in serious but stable condition and one was listed in good condition.

The plane, the military's equivalent of a Boeing 707, was enroute from K.I. Sawyer Air Base in the Upper Peninsula to Offut Air Force Base in Nebraska. Capt. Charles Pinkard of Wurthsmith Air Base, near the crash site, said the plane carried five crew members and 15 passengers.

The crash site was one mile from the nearest road. A helicopter was used to fly the injured 12 miles to Alpena General Hospital.

In Virginia, a jet owned by the pharmaceutical company with headquarters in New Brunswick, N.J., slammed into the side of a mountain and crashed short of the unway at Hot Springs, a resort center.

A state police spokesman said "there are no survivors."

A National Transportation Safety Board spokesman said the plane had been reported overdue on a 50-minute flight from Trenton, N.J. The Civil Air Patrol said the wreckage was sighted by helicopter about 1 p.m., but ground crews had difficulty reaching the scene.

He said weather conditions at the time of the crash were bad and the last report from the pilot indicated he was making an instrument landing approach.

The patrol said the plane went down about 500 feet short of the runway, which is located on the mountainside. The plane apparently crashed in extremely rough terrain, a spokesman said.

A five-member team from the NTSB was sent to investigate.

In Colorado, a twin-engine private plane crashed and caught fire shortly after takeoff from an airport at Steamboat Springs, a ski and summer resort community in northwesten Colorado.

A Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said all aboard were killed.

Thousands march protesting murder of Chilean diplomat

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Several thousand persons marched yesterday to protest to the murder of Chilean diplomat Orlando Letelier concluding with a funeral mass in which the widow of the late Chile President Salvador Allende and Sen. George S. McGovern, D-S.D., condemned the current Chilean government.

Letelier was murdered in Washington last week by a powerful plastic bomb placed under his car. Also killed was Ronni Karpen Moffit, a fellow researcher at the Washington-based "Institute for Policy Studies."

Targets of the march and speeches at St. Matthew's Roman Catholic Cathedral was Chile's military junta, especially its secret police - DINA.

Folk singer Joan Baez sang "Gracias a la Vida" Thank You to Life, and Michael Moffitt, whose wife died with Letelier, delivered a tearful and emotional speech in which he denouced Santiago's "fascist junta".

The Chilean government, in a note to the State Department, Saturday expressed "concern" over the memorial service and march, claiming it was a political act and "a genuine incitement" against Chile and U.S. - Chilean relations. The State Department acknowledged receipt of the note.

Hearst lead witness against the Harrises

OAKLAND, Calif. [UPI] — Patricia Hearst, beginning a 7-year sentence for robbing a bank with the Symbionese Liberation Army, is expected to testify today before a grand jury about the roles of SLA members William and Emily Harris in kidnaping her.

Miss Hearst, sentenced Friday for the holdup that took place 10 weeks after she was kidnaped, is scheduled to be the leadoff witness against the Harrises, who have pleaded innocent to a 19-count police complaint stemming from her abduction Feb. 4, 1974.

The 22-year-old newspaper heiress was to be brought to the Alameda County Courthouse here from the nearby, campus-like Federal Correctional Institution in Pleasanton, where the U.S. Marshal's office said she would serve out her term.

A grand jury indictment of the Harrises for the kidnaping would eliminate a preliminary hearing Oct. 7, where the accused couple would have a chance to cross-examine Miss Hearst, and move the case directly into Superior Court. The jury is expected to return the indictment.

The Harrises already have been sentenced to 11 years to life for a Los Angeles crime spree with Miss Hearst, who still faces trial for taking part in those events with them and spraying the outside of a sporting goods store with two machine guns.

Miss Hearst, who testified at her trial that she was terrified of the Harrises and participated in the bank holdup on threat of death, has "cooperated fully" with government agencies in discussing her companions while a fugitive, U.S. District Judge William H. Orrick said in sentencing her.

William Harris allegedly has been named as one of the men who took her from the Berkeley apartment she shared with her former fiance, Steven Weed, and police said Miss Hearst identified Emily Harris as driver of the getaway car.

Congress in final days

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Congress, shooting for adjournment next Saturday, heads into a week of tough votes on foreign aid, possible veto override efforts and a move in the House to expel one member.

The House, joining the Senate in the drive for final adjournment of the 94th Congress, set as its final business Friday a vote on whether to expel Rep. Andrew Hinshaw, R-Calif., for his conviction for taking bribes while he was the Orange County Calif. tax assessor.

Rep. Charles Wiggins, R-Calif., drafted a resolution which, if passed on a simple majority vote, would be the first expulsion since 1967 when Adam Clayton Powell was thrown out of the House for misuse of committee funds.

Before getting to the Hinshaw matter, the House planned to take up the foreign aid appropriations measure which totals $5.1 billion for the 1977 fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

As a contingency, a resolution that would continue funding at last year's level until March, 1977, of any program not getting its 1977 appropriations will come up after the foreign aid measure.

The contingency, or "continuing resolution," would also be in place if Congress fails to override President Ford's expected veto of the money bill for the departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare on his desk.

Ford may decide this week about signing the massive tax revision bill, a $3.7 billion public works employment appropriations measure and a one-year extension of the public service jobs program, the latter two being Democratic election-year programs to fight unemployment.

The Senate scheduled action on its version of a House-passed bill calling for a major change in unemployment compensation that would include an increase in the rate and base of payment which is used to determine the employer's payment into the jobless benefits program.

Lawmakers will join in major conference sessions to work out differences in the revenue sharing program that sends federal funds to states and localities and which expires Dec. 31, 1976.

Conferees will also try to get final agreement on a massive clean air act bill that includes an easing of engine exhaust standards for auto makers.

Another major measure before the House is a bill to require greater disclosure by lobbyists of their activities not only with Congress, but federal agencies.

Palestinian terrorist advance ends in combat

DAMASCUS, Syria [AP] — A Palestinian commando team captured a Damascus luxury hotel yesterday and held about 90 hostages until Syrian troops blasted them out in a bloody three-hour battle. The government said one terrorist and four hostages died and 34 hostages were wounded.

The commandos called themselves the "Black June" group, security officers said, in apparent reference to Syria's military intervention last June against Palestinian guerrillas in the Lebanese civil war.

The hotel operation marked the most spectacular Palestinian reaction so far to Syria's military backing for right-wing Christians bent on crushing the once-powerful guerrilla movement in Lebanon.

Red-bereted Syrian military police and plainclothes intelligence agents killed the commando leader and captured three others of the four-man band, a government statement said.

It was not clear if the hostages were killed before the Syrian assault on the hotel. The government statement said only, "The commandos killed four hostages, including three women, and wounded 34 others."

A government spokesman identified the four commandos only as members of the Palestinian guerrillaagroup Fatah. In Beirut, however, a spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organization, the umbrella group that includes Fatah, denied that any PLO members were responsible.

Moderate Palestinians in Beirut professed astonishment at the takeover, which came as the gurerillas maneuvered toward peace talks with Lebanon's new president, Elias Sarkis.

"Who could have done a thing like that at a time like this, in the middle of these delicate peace talks?" asked a Palestinian source.

Witnesses said a large crowd that has gathered on the fringes of the scene, in the heart of Damascus, broke into applause when Syrian troops led away the captive terrorists.

According to an account pieced together from witnesses and security officers, the commandos pulled up to the Semiramis Hotel on one of Damascus' main squares about 5 a.m. in a dark blue car with Lebanese license plates.

They asked for a room. When told none was available, they returned with submachine guns and grenades and, with the receptionist in tow, moved from floor to floor rousing guests from their sleep and taking them hostage, the officers said.

Someone tipped off police and the hotel was immediately surrounded, witnesses said.

The Syrian Special Forces Brigade took positions nearby. Military police and intelligence agents blocked exits, cutting off telephone and cable connections with the hotel, they added.

The terrorists, who had barricaded themselves on the top floor of the five-story hotel, blasted at the Syrian troops with submachine guns and lobbed grenades at them, witnesses said. The Syrians returned fire, pecking the gray stone facade and badly damaging several of the hotel's spacious rooms.

Several nations criticized by Amnesty International

STRASBOURG, France [UPI] — Amnesty International criticized three South American nations, Turkey and Great Britain for alleged suppression of human rights and declared 1977 "Prisoner of Conscience" year.

The international council of the London-based organization, concluding a four-day meeting in Strasbourg, also approved an annual report.

The 220-page report, released in London, said more than 100 countries have imprisoned persons for their beliefs in the past 12 months, on occasion carrying out torture and executions.

It cited "the detention or restriction of liberty of vast groups of political prisoners" in Asia and South Africa, the "drastic assault on freedoms of belief and expression" under India's state of emergency, and the use of torture and the growing number of kidnap-murders by "death squads" in Latin America.

The council released a separate statement which "expressed concern at the deteriorating human rights situation" in Argentina, Chile and Uruguay.

The council also said it regretted "the apparently negative response of the British government" to a recently-published report on the use of torture by British security forces in Northern Ireland in 1971.

It also "expressed shock" at last week's murder in Washington of Orlando Letelier, former Chilean foreign minister and U.S. ambassador under the Marxist government of the late Salvador Allende.

Letelier, adopted by Amnesty International as a "prisoner of conscience" while detained in Chile, was killed when a bomb blew up in his car.

The council said it was "disturbed at the recent mass arrests in Turkey of trade unionists who had been demonstrating against the establishment of extraordinary tribunals for political crimes" and urged their "immediate release."

Pilot's return urged

TEHRAN, Iran [UPI] — The Soviet Union has sent a formal protest to Iran demanding the return of a Russian air force lieutenant who fled last week in a small, nonmilitary plane, a Soviet embassy source said yesterday.

The defection of 1st Lt. Valentin Ivanovich Zasimov was the second by a Soviet pilot this month. On Sept. 6, a Russian flier landed his supersonic M1G25 in Japan and asked for asylum in the United States.

The Iranian government said Zasimov also asked for asylum in the United States. A U.S. embassy, spokesman said, however, that no official request for asylum had been received.

The Soviet source said Moscow sent a note to Iran demanding the return of Zasimov and the Antonov AN2 biplane he flew Thursday across the Soviet border to a little-used airport at Ahar, 50 miles northeast of Tabriz. The small plane is used to dust crops and deliver mail.

In the protest note, the source said the Kremlin reminded Iran of a treaty between the two countries in which they agreed to return defectors and property used in fleeing the Soviet Union.

Iran, a staunch ally of the United States, has been enjoying good if uneasy relations with its Communist neighbor on economic and cultural levels.

The duty officer at the Soviet embassy said he was unable to confirm what steps had been taken or were contemplated by the Kremlin regarding the incident.

He said as far as he knew, the situation was "under consideration." He said only the ambassador would know more, but the envoy "is very busy" and unavailable for comment.

The Soviets have sent several sternly worded protest notes to Japan warning of the "grave consequences" of Tokyo's refusal to return defecting air force Lt. Viktor I. Belendo and the highly sophisticated M1G25 Foxbat Belenko flew to Japan's northern island of Hokkaido earlier this month.

Pope's birthday speech has moral reminder

VATICAN CITY [UPI] — Pope Paul VI marked his 79th birthday yesterday with a pointed reminder to abortion advocates that for the Roman Catholic church human life is "already existent in the mother's womb."

In his message yesterday, delivered from his study window overlooking St. Peter's Square, the Pope thanked those around the world who has wished him a happy birthday.

"Now at the evening of our earthly days, we personally must be thankful, especially today, for all those who have given us their good wishes and for the long course of our years which have been full of goodness and friendship," the Pope told the 15,000 persons gathered in the square.

"More than ever at this hour, we want to testify to our sublime esteem for the life of man. We pray, and you all must pray with us, for every human life, which is already existent in the mother's womb.

"We pray for all women, who in the love and sadness of motherhood, discover their highest destiny."

There were no special birthday observances for the Pope, who suffers from painful arthrosis and has been saddened recently by front-page rifts in his ecclesiastical family.

Vatican radio, in a commentary on the eve of the Pope's birthday, said the pontiff was pained by the dissent. The Vatican newspaper O'Osservatore Romano in a front-page editorial called on all Catholics to rally around the Pope as the successor to St. Peter.

Ford travels south—Carter west

[AP]

President Ford launched the second phase of a political drive across Jimmy Carter's Southland yesterday while the Democratic presidential nominee campaigned in California, talking taxes and looking for the Mexican-American vote.

Ford rode a 153-mile motorcade from New Orleans across the Gulf coast resort area of Mississippi and Alabama in a mission aimed at showing that Carter, though a Georgian, has no hammerlock on the votes of conservative-minded Southern voters.

"The best way to win the battle of the cost of living is to reduce the cost of government," he told a crowd of about 2,000 persons outside the local library in Bay St. Louis, Miss.

"There are some people running for this office of President that want to add more and more spending, bigger and bigger deficits, more and more inflation. We're against that..."

For the first time on his Southern swing the President also raised the subject of defense spending, saying during a stop in Gulfport, Miss., that Carter's plans to cut the military budget would prove "disastrous."

Carter, meanwhile, appeared at a get-out-the-vote rally in San Juan Capistrano, Calif., where he blamed Republican mismanagement of the economy for rises in the cost of living and proposed a four-point program to reduce the burden of local taxes through revenue-sharing and other measures.

Politics

Carter said the cost of living has risen 14 per cent under the Ford administration and the American people are being asked by the Republicans to take this for granted. "They don't seem to care what it is doing to people all over America, in terms of cost of food and health care and property taxes," he declared.

Carter was heading next for Oregon after two days in California where he was accompanied at most steps by his erstwhile primary opponent, Gov. Jerry Brown, and won the endorsement on Saturday of Cesar Chavez, the California farm workers organizer and a leading spokesman for the state's large Mexican-American community.

Another of the events, on the first weekend Carter has spent away from his Plains, Ga., home since the fall campaign began, was a Mexican independence day parade in Santa Ana.

Also in California was Ford's running mate, Sen. Bob Dale, but he told reporters in Newport Beach that he would concentrate in the next few days on farm areas of the Midwest because the GOP ticket wasn't gathering the support it wanted in those areas.

"There are indications that in farm areas, we still have a great deal to do," Dole said. He said the assessment was based on poll results but gave no details.

Mondale attacks Ford's lack of world leadership

BALTIMORE, Md. [UPI] — Sen. Walter Mondale accused the administration yesterday of showing a lack of leadership in the world and a lack of concern for the disadvantaged in this country.

In speeches to a leadership conference in Washington and at a black Baptist church in Baltimore, Mondale said the Ford administration was failing to deal with the economy, the environment or the needs of the disadvantaged.

The Minnesota senator went out of his way in a speech at the Wayland Baptist Church in Baltimore to praise President Lyndon B. Johnson. His running mate Jimmy Carter got into trouble last week by criticizing Johnson.

"One thing about Lyndon Johnson, he felt for poor people," Mondale said, adding one of the high points of his life was the night Johnson outlined to Congress his request for the Voting Rights Act and aid to education to give every child a chance to learn.

"I never felt better about myself and my country than that night he Johnson said, 'we shall overcome.'"

Mondale called for "a new sense of humanity in America" and said this must begin by giving every able-bodied American who wants to work the right to have a job.

Mondale's receptions at the Babtist church and at the Time Magazine Leadership Conference in Washington was friendly.

At the leadership conference, he said the administration has "grown tired and indifferent," and not dealing adequately with the problems of the world.

"As a nation we can no longer afford to be guided by leaders whose vision of America's security is so insensitive to the profound changes which pose an ever-deepening crisis on this planet — lack of food, polluted water, energy waste, population growth, lack of development, destruction of the environment and the pressing need to create a more stable, more productive system of international economic security," he said.

"New American leadership must recognize that after 2 or 3 million years of human life on Earth, we have reached the point that we may be adversely altering our planet's life systems — the weather, the climate, the biological functions of the oceans, the great forests, our deserts and our prairies."

Dole focuses on disabled

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Bob Dole, his right arm crippled by a German shell in World War II, is using his role as candidate for vice president to promote the welfare of 30 to 40 million handicapped Americans.

He received an award for service to the disabled from the National Rehabilitation Association in Hollywood, Fla., last week and used that occasion, and an interview a few hours later, to reflect on his handicap.

Dole also urged a sign language interpreter be allowed to appear on the vice presidential debate between him and Walter Mondale, just as one appeared with him at the Republican National Convention and at many of his campaign stops.

Temporarily putting aside sharp political rhetoric, the Kansas senator, who spent 39 months recovering from total paralysis between 1945 and 1948, reminisced about his youth at the rehabilitation conference.

"When I was 18, 19, 20, my primary interest was how fast I could run and how well I could do out on the basketball floor — whether I could catch a football. That seemed to be the greatest goal in my life.

"Then suddenly I became a member of another class, when someone fed me and someone dressed me and someone turned me around. And I suddenly realized that there was not just Bob Dole — although I'd have to admit there was a lot of self pity in those early days.

"I couldn't understand why that was happening to me. I learned to understand that I was pretty fortunate ... We've all learned that it's ability that counts, not disability that counts."

Although an aide said Dole doesn't like to talk about his own problems, the senator talked freely about his experiences.

"I'm not used to it yet. I'm still embarrassed about it. You're reminded of it every morning. I don't have good feeling in my left hand and I have to see the button in the buttonhole to get dressed.

"Sometimes it takes quite a while to get a tough button up around this area," he said pointing to the collar of his shirt. "But I prebutton my sleeves and all those things."

Besides the shattered shoulder, withered arm and broken neck, Dole's recovery left him with only one kidney and a once-critical lung condition.

Dole's handicap gives him little trouble with the crowds he seeks out while campaigning, although he laughs that it takes him twice as long as any other politician to get through a line of people wanting to shake his hand.

Autographs present another problem, as an aide has to be at the ready with a clipboard to slip under Dole's good hand to provide support for writing.

GULF PORT, Miss. [UPI] — Reporters traveling with President Ford in his Dixie motorcade yesterday noticed two familiar-looking towels in the rear seat of the chief executive's limousine.

They were the same color and the same shape as those at the New Orleans hotel Hyatt Regency House, where Ford and reporters stayed Saturday night.

Land dispute focuses on race legalities

MASHPEE, Mass. [AP] — Are the Wampanoags still Indians?

That legal point may be crucial to a court suit filed by the tribe to recover some 16,000 acres of land in the two Cape Cod towns of Mashpee and Sandwich.

Attorney for two of the defendants in the suit have raised this tricky question. They claim the Indians have evolved into a mixed race because of inter-marriage with blacks and mulattos and therefore lost their legal status as a formal Indian tribe by the late 18th century.

The Wampanoags are basing their suit on the Indian Non-Intercourse Act of 1790, which states that no land can be taken from Indians without congressional approval.

The tribe contends the Cape Cod land was taken away from them without such approval. But if they can't prove their status as a formal Indian tribe in U.S. District Court, then the suit could be thrown out.

"They're grabbing at straws," said Russell Peters, leader of the Mashpee Wampanoag Indian Tribal Council, calling the argument "preposterous."

The tribe's suit has brought many real estate deals in Mashpee to an abrupt halt and several agents claim the court action may spell economic ruin for the town.

Cape Cod banks are not issuing mortgage loans in the community until the suit is resolved and the land title is made clear.

The town has hired attorney James D. St. Clair of Watergate fame to represent it against the Indians.

A similar suit in Maine involving the Passanaquoddy and the Penebscot Indians is expected to be brought by the federal government on behalf of the Indians later this year. It would seek to reclaim over half of Maine — some 12 million acres — from present owners.

Witness identification vague as Saxe trial continues

BOSTON [UPI] — Defense attorneys for Susan Saxe open their cross examination today in trial of the former Brandeis University honors student charged with bank robbery and murder.

Just before the weekend recess, the retired manager of the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Co., described one of the persons involved in the September 1970 holdup as a woman "a little on the hefty side."

But under prosecution questioning, Alden Otis was unable to positively identify Ms. Saxe — who spent five years on the FBI's most wanted list — as one of the band who robbed the bank of $26,585 then gunned down policeman Walter Schroeder outside.

Saxe's lawyers were scheduled to cross examine Otis Monday, the third day of the trial in Suffolk Superior Court.

Ms. Saxe is one of five persons indicted for the robbery and murder of Schroeder. William A. "Lefty" Gilday, described as the backup man, is serving a life sentence for actually shooting Schroeder.

Ms. Saxe and the other three, including her Brandeis classmate Katherine Ann Power who is still at large, are accused of felony murder, lodged against accomplices in a crime in which a murder occurs. It carries a life sentence.

"She was a little on the hefty side," Otis said after describing the woman as between 5-feet-3 and 5-feet-5 weighing between 125 and 135 pounds, which fits Ms. Saxe. He added the woman wore dark glasses and a purple garment.

Otis identified a purple and white dress as resembling in color the one worn by the woman bank robber.

But Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin refused to allow Prosecutor John T. Gaffney to enter the dress as evidence since Otis could not identify it positively.

Photos taken by the bank's cameras and introduced as evidence show two men with guns. There were no photos of a woman engaged in the holdup.

Birthday celebration will officially end

LOWELL, Mass. [UPI] — For more than a year, Americans have been relentlessly celebrating the United States' Bicentennial. This city now wants to say "Thank you, America," to formally mark the end of the celebration.

Between Oct. 3 and Oct. 11 centered on the Columbus Day weekend, Lowell will host a major Bicentennial goodbye — complete with parades, ethnic festivals, a river regatta, military displays, Bob Hope, fireworks and Arthur Fiedler.

It will climax with a repeat of Fiedler's July 4th Boston Pops concert — this time on the banks of the Merrimack River — complete with the howitzers and fireworks for his traditional "1812 Overture" finale.

Presidential candidates Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford have both been invited, and although neither camps has confirmed a visit, "there have been many phone calls to Washington, D.C. and Plains, Ga.," according to festival organizers.

Youth gang converts into leading citizens

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The 310 members of the "Magnificent 20s" gang have travelled a long road in 18 months, from a warring youth gang to a group which cleans up ghetto neighborhoods and works with the mentally retarded.

John Wardlaw, who heads a two-year-old pre-trial diversion program called Community Resourses for Justice Inc., is mostly responsible, according to Steve Holter, 17, who heads the group.

"He's the dude that got our heads together," Holter said. "He's the man. He's 100 per cent. He got us where we are today and he stuck with us through the rainy days."

The members of the group, mostly from the city's black ghettos, recently made WFSB-TV personality Brad Davis their only white member at a program called "Buddy for a Day" which matches youths with the mentally retarded.

"It would blow the minds of a lot of people if they could see these guys working with their buddies," Davis said.

Wardlaw said a variety of things turned the gang around, including city and police officials who provided encouragement and promised to work with the group.

"There are only about 300 of them, but they influence about 3,000 kids in the city. If Hartford's future leaders don't come from this group, I don't know where they will come from," Wardlaw said.

Graduates trapped by student loans

[CPS]

Students who thought Uncle Sam would play sugar daddy have something new to think about. After lending a whopping $8 billion to more than 4.5 million students in ten years, the federal government is pulling the reins in on federally guaranteed student loans.

The overall student loan default rate has climbed to 15.6 per cent. As another way out of financial distress, many students choose to go through the administrative mechanism of bankruptcy. In 1975 nearly 4000 students took this route. Because students are given incomplete information about their loans, they are forced to come to sudden grips with what once seemed like the never-never land of repayment schedules as soon as 120 days after graduation. Financial aid officers often draw up the terms of the loan agreement with little consideration for a student's financial status right after graduation. The student is confronted with a poor job market and forced to meet loan repayments at the same time.

The loan program has also fallen prey to greedy administrators. In one San Francisco case, an HEW official was paid "tens of thousands of dollars in case" to help a private school owner obtain federal funds, according to Senate Permanent Investigation subcommittee information in November, 1975. The official later resigned after receiving nearly $20,000 in the form of consulting fees.

Students have also been the victims of profit-making institutions and sometimes private schools which close before the students graduate. The student is left holding the bill and liable to repay their federal loans anyway.

For students who already have federally insured loans, and are unable to repay them, the government has collection plans to get their money back. In 1974, HEW enlisted the services of 135 collectors to crack down on defaults. If a student has a delinquent loan, he or she can expect a letter in the mail. If this doesn't work, the student will be contacted by telephone. In fact, HEW consulted the telephone company to assist in training the corps of collectors. The phone companies have been studying ways to save money for HEW in their phone campaigns.

If the collector determines that the student is capable of paying but simply won't, the file is sent to the Department of Justice. The collector obtains the information from the student directly or from outside credit services. The credit services delivers an assets report on the student. Despite the increase in student default and bankruptcy rates, a source at HEW maintained that no drastic measures have been taken to collect in Dallas from posing as FBI agents and other law officers to force students to pay off loans. The officials were brought to a Dallas state court on charges of misrepresentation.

to the report.

The University is also planning to develop access roads to parking areas reads the report.

Road changes and the proposed North Pleasant Street — Rte. 116 road would divert 1,246 cars off of North Pleasant Street twice each day, reads the report.

This number was reached by examining the street addresses and likely routes to assigned parking lots of campus commuters through computerized analysis made in July and August, the report stated.

Grady said last week that he and others on his staff had collected the needed 100 signatures to submit the request as an article on the town warrant.

The responsibility for the University proposal is in his office, he said, although it necessarily entails cooperation with the University Planning office and recommendations to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Amherst Chamber of Commerce President James Lumley said Friday there was no problem collecting the needed 100 signatures for their article although he had expressed dismay earlier in the week when finding out he needed them.

He and two other people had little difficulty collecting the signatures he said because there appeared to be a lot of sentiment in the business community in favor of the North-Pleasant Street-East Pleasant Street proposal.

Lumley said the road will "help North Amherst citizens stay in touch with central Amherst" not only for shopping purposes but for using town facilities as well.

Psychiatrist blames tyranny on parents

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A psychiatrist told the 1976 Libertarian Party National Convention yesterday that tyranny in a nation often is rooted in family tyranny.

Dr. Peter Breggin of Bethesda, Md., said children who are treated as "captives rather than equals" usually vote for oppressive laws when they are adults.

"When children are punished for asserting themselves, they stop asserting themselves," he said. "Typically, they then try to stop others from the same thing."

"What it means is that widespread tyranny in a family often leads to tyranny in a country," he said. "Children become psychologically dependent on authority, on being told what to do, and they can't see themselves living as independent adults."

Breggin, a closing speaker at the party's 1976 gathering, is considered a radical in the psychiatric profession because of his opposition to involuntary commitment in mental hospitals.

Roger MacBride, the Libertarian's presidential candidate, urged the 600 party regulars who attended the four-day convention to stick by their principles and get out the vote.

MacBride, a Charlottesville attorney, author and cattle rancher who was nominated at the party's 1975 convention, said Libertarians held the 1976 convention to bring members together, swap ideas and plan the next few weeks before the election.

He said Libertarians advocate a free market society, a non-involvement foreign policy and decriminalization of such "victimless crimes as prostitution and drugs."

Edward Crane, the party's national chairman who works at its headquarters in Washington, said Libertarians have held a convention every year since 1972, when the party was formed.

"There were 85 people at our first convention, which was in Denver," he said. "Then in 1973 we had 200, in 1974 we had 300 and in 1975, 500."

Crane disputed the argument Libertarians will never get into the mainstream of American politics because third parties generally never become dominant.

"That is true of the Socialists and the Communists," he said. "But I don't think it's true for us. I don't think the issue is ideology in itself. I think it is a question of which ideology."

Man retained for theft of frozen steaks

PARKERSBURG, W. Va. [UPI] — Officials in Brockton, Mass., have been asked to retain a West Virginia man wanted for questioning in the July 29 heist of $10,000 worth of frozen steaks in Charleston, W. Va.

State police at Parkersburg, W.Va., said the man, identified as Franklin Wade DeBerry, 21, was arrested Friday in Brockton after police discovered he was driving a stolen car. DeBerry was stopped following a traffic accident.

The zoo in the jungle

By SAM HASSAN

If you're not really interested in politics, why are you reading the editorial page? In fact, why are you reading the Collegian anyway? You probably have at least 600 pages to read and an exam next week, so get back to work.

This column deals with the politics of our deteriorating University in a critical, cynical, and speculative manner. You may not realize it, but on the outskirts of our little zoo is what's known as the jungle. What's more, the big people in the jungle un our little zoo. This is not to mention that the big people have been known to put the lion in with the tiger and rent his cage to the circus. My apologies to Curious George, Tarzan, George Orwell, and, in struggle, Jane.

Getting back to reality and UMass, we find Governor Dukakis delivering an address to the New England Bankers Convention being held in the Campus Center. WMUA was supposed to carry the speech live, but latest Collegian reports indicate that station manager Casey Kusak was, "remaining on hold in protest," stemming from his call last week to the Telephone Company Business Office in Northampton, Here are some exerpts from the Governor's speech.

"First I'd like to congratulate University President Bob Wood for managing to get by when times are tough. As you all know, Bob took a $3600 cut in salary when we were trying to figure out how to butcher the, aahhh, trim the State's education budget. Now a lot of people say that the Governor's salary should be higher than the State University President's. But I say to you, if you think Massachusetts is in trouble financially, you should see the University's financial records. Unbelievable. And I think Bob deserves every penny of the $50,939."

According to an unidentified Collegian reporter and waitress at the TOC, the Governor's voice "cracked somewhat" when he tried to say the word dollars.

Another Collegian source indicated that two women and one man, all University undergraduates, were raped after boarding an elevator on the 10th floor of the Campus Center shortly after the convention adjourned. A Department of Public Safety spokesbeing said of the incident, "Nobody called here. We wish they would, but they never do."

Actually, there are many more important things to criticize than President Wood's exhorbitant salary. Dwight Allen is back from the jungle, but its not known whether he's in the zoo or the circus. For those of you who just joined us, Allen was Dean of the scandaled School of Education until he resigned in 1975 when it became evident that a sizable portion of federal funds allocated to the school over a five year period had disappeared. First estimates put the missing amount at more than $1.3 million but the FBI was called in to cover up the scandal, and an audit this year showed that only $364,000 is missing. True to the politics of UMass, Allen split for Africa, and a black former administrator, Cleo Abraham, made national news this summer for his embezzelment conviction. But Abraham's conviction accounted for less than $30,000 of the $364,000.

It's highly unlikely that Dwight Allen stopped in Switzerland on his way to Africa. But what happened to ta third of a million dollars that was supposed to be spend educating us? After all, students in the Education School are the ones who are getting screwed.

When the scandal broke nearly two years ago, an anonymoua former high ranking University official said that, "Bromery should lose his job for this." Instead, the students got screwed out of $364,000 and the federal government wants the money back. We all know where the money comes from when the University has to deal with its own mismanagement.

So, while we may have been ripped off for what could become $728,000, we go to UMass and we are learning how to live in the jungle. We'll be better consumers when we graduate. And you never know. Sometime, after a hard day in the factory, you might come home, turn on the TV set and watch the FBI, Efram Zimbalist Jr. and special guest star Dwight Allen try to solve, "The Case of the Missing Money."

Coincidence, NO! Unfortunate, YES!!

To the Editor:

SCENE: AMHERST SAVINGS BANK, MAIN BRANCH, AMHERST
DATE: FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1976

Two customers went into the same bank to the same teller, on the same day within the same hour, each to cash their paycheck. Neither person had enough money in their savings account with that bank to cover the amount of their paycheck. The male customer was told that the bank did not cash checks which were not covered by an equal amount of money in the savings account. His check was not cashed. The female customer was given the full amount of her check in cash.

in the first instance, the bank teller seemed unsure of bank policy and conferred with an experienced teller. She told him not to cash the check. The customer questioned this policy as he had often cashed his paycheck without it being covered by the amount of money in his savings account. Both tellers refused to cash the check.

At this point, the customer referred the matter for clarification to the Assistant Vice President of the bank who emphatically stated that it was the bank's policy NOT to cash paychecks for an amount which was not covered by the savings account. The customer's check was not cashed at the Amherst Savings Bank.

Within the same hour, another customer of the bank approached the same teller. She received the full amount of her paycheck, although the check was over $100.00 greater than the amount of money in her savings account. Concerned over the obvious difference in bank policy between two customers, she asked to speak with the Assistant Vice President of the bank, who was not available at that time.

Later that afternoon, this customer called the bank in order to speak with the Assistant Vice President. Her call was referred to the Head Teller. The Head Teller was asked to explain the bank's policy on cashing customer's paychecks. She answered that if the check was a local one [i.e. five college] and the person had an account with the bank, then the check would be cashed. [NOTE: When the first customer was unable to cash his check, at no point in time was this fact mentioned. His check was from a national business located in Springfield. He was told that the specific and only reason his check would not be cashed was because it was not covered by the amount in his savings account.]

The Head Teller was given an explanation of the circumstances which led to the phone call. At this point, the customer mentioned that a difference between the two situations which occurred with the same teller within the same hour, was that the male who was unable to cash his check was black and the female who received the full amount of cash for her check was white. The Head Teller responded to this fact with a vigorous, "We are not prejudiced in this bank, why, I just waited on two black ones." She then transferred the call to the Assistant Vice President who was asked to verify official bank policy on cashing customer's paychecks. He stated that no customer could cash their paycheck without it being covered by their savings account.

When confronted by the FACT that not only had one customer cashed her check that same day, but both customers had consistently and constantly cashed their paychecks every day for almost a year without their checks being covered by their savings accounts, the Assistant Vice President said that was a "coincidence". When confronted by the FACT that both customers of equal circumstance were treated in an unequal way, he said that was "unfortunate". "I don't buy that prejudiced thing", he said.

I don't buy that prejudiced thing, either. I am writing this letter to inform the community of Amherst and specifically the "black ones" who might have entrusted their money to the Amherst Savings Bank of that bank's inconsistent and unequal policy. I am also sending this letter to you, Mr. Vickowski, so that you might be fully aware of why I am withdrawing my account from your bank.

Coincidence, NO! Unfortunate, YES!!

Step in the right direction

To the Editor:

I would like to lend my full support and endorsement to the recent Letter to the Editor entitled "Endangering Acts" written by David Todd and Christopher Durkin which appeared in the September 23rd issue of the Collegian. I, as well as many other staff members of the University Health Services, have been increasingly concerned about unsafe situations resulting from the irresponsible acts on the part of a few individuals.

It is reassuring to hear that responsible administrative and student leaders are taking immediate steps to deal with Individuals who deliberately and maliciously create an unsafe condition by throwing objects out of high rise buildings, or by tampering with elevator doors. Unfortunately, we at the Health Services must deal with the results of such behavior in providing medical and emotional support for individuals who have been injured or harmed by the irresponsible acts of others. Quite frankly, it is hard for our staff to explain to someone who is injured why another person would behave in such a manner.

I also agree that security measures, disciplinary action and reporting are not the total answer. But without assuring order in our University community, the energies and efforts of well-intended people will be misdirected to dealing with the fall-out from a few irresponsible acts rather than concentrating on creative means of providing a community environment in which anyone would be proud to live, work, study or play.

Again I wish to commend Dave Todd and Christopher Durkin for taking the first step to move us in the right direction.

Not all bigots

To the Editor:

Nasser Ega's article "Encountering Racism" in last Monday's Collegian has its good points but its bad points detract heavily from the message that he is trying to convey. When Mr. Ega says that white parents coax their white children to sleep by telling them "The Niggers Eat You" — it is not only irrational, but irrelevant to the theme of his paper.

Mr. Ega also goes on to say that the Ku Klux Klan has a formidable following in New England. If Mr. Ega did some research he'd find that southern New England is predominately Catholic in religious denomination. Therefore when he says the K.K.K. has a "formidable following" in New England, he's completely off the mark [The KKK DOES NOT befriend Catholics].

Also, I would like to know the source of Mr. Ega's statistics [95 per cent of freshmen are from Massachusetts]. And even then, so what? Why should a person from Massachusetts journey to UNH and pay higher bills when he can get the same quality education at a cheaper price.

The following quote from Mr. Ega's article reflects a tremendous amount of misunderstanding concerning racism: "A large percentage of them [freshmen] came from South Boston high schools. The very high school kids who were throwing rocks and beating up Blacks just because they didn't like the idea of studying with a Black, were accepted at UMASS!"

Without any references to back up his statements, Mr. Ega has indicted a large percentage of the freshmen class as Whites that throw rocks at Blacks [obviously it's not a reciprocal process]. If Mr. Ega had done his research, which he apparently hasn't, he'd find in the October 26, 1974 edition of Nation Magazine that a survey uncovered by Maurice Ford showed that only 4 per cent of South Boston High grads went on to College in 1973!!]

I deplore racism with vigor and have actively championed for Civil Rights. I am frightened by the Boston electorate that keeps people like Louise Day Hicks and Pixie Palladino in power but I am also worried over attitudes, such as Mr. Ega's that condemns ALL whites. In short, Mr. Ega's article "throws all whites into one barrel", which is like saying, "all blacks look alike." Both statements are terrible misrepresentations of the facts.

May I suggest that Mr. Ega do more research to back up his statements and that he talk to individual whites rather than classifying them all as bigots from South Boston.

The real villains

To the Editor:

It has become the fashion lately to disparage the sport hunter for his barbarousness and to accuse him, in the words of Glen Munroe's recent letter, or "brutal unnecessary carnage." Well, mankind has been at it now for about 300,000 years, by one conservative estimate, and due to our penchant for fresh meat, it is unlikely that the killing will end.

When you really stop and think about it, all of us who eat meat are proxy killers anyhow, the only difference being that we are one step removed from the trigger; or, in the case of cattle, the sledgehammer.

How many thousands of times does this killing happen each day, and not just during hunting season, either? No, Mr. Munroe, it is not the sport hunters who are the real villains; it is you, I and McDonald's Hamburgers [100 per cent beef]

The Kissinger phenomenon

Editor's note: This is the last column in a series on Henry Kissinger, his policy and influence.

Satirist Art Buchwald believes he has come up with an answer to the question of how Henry Kissinger can cover so much ground, both physically and diplomatically, and not get totally worn down. There are actually five Kissingers, says Buchwald, who inhabit the basement of the White House. Whenever President Ford requires the sort of services only a Kissinger can offer, he summons one of them up from below for a briefing.

To date, no one has been able to confirm or deny Buchwald's theory — perhaps we should all watch for telltale birthmarks. And we might worry about whether there is only one Nancy, or five, or some number inbetween.

Assuming for now that there is only one Kissinger, one has to ponder over what the man is up to. Does his incessant wandering from one corner of the globe to another serve any useful purpose? The answer to that query depends on how one defines 'useful'.

Many people in this country regard Kissinger as the most powerful man in the U.S. That should come as no great surprise, however, if one considers the circumstances of his "reign". Kissinger's role as secretary of state has spanned two administrations, and his busy diplomatic schedule might easily lead one to believe that he transcends the lowly "politics-as-usual" that Ford and Nixon have constantly contended with.

But if Kissiner is any one thing, he is a good P.R. man. Through the marvels of the modern media, the image of the charismatic and omnipotent Super-K has been formed and reinforced for years. The public may well view Kissinger not as the product of an institution, but as an institution in himself.

The most recent manifestation of this phenomenon is Kissinger's work in Rhodesia, which culminated in the announcement by Rhodesian prime minister Ian Smith that the country would begin a two-year conversion to majority rule. One newspaper referred to the action as a "coup for Kissinger", and once again the Secretary was portrayed as a great diplomatic hero.

What should be remembered in this case is that we are nearing an election — certainly another Kissinger triumph cannot hurt Ford's chances in November. And we should question just how realistic Kissinger's "agreement" can be, recalling that only six months ago prime minister Smith stated that he could never support Black rule in Rhodesia, "not in a thousand years."

The 'useful' purpose served by Kissinger's spectacular efforts is thus basically publicity oriented and superficial. A better gauge of where Kissinger is coming from is a look at his background and his "connections" — and they show him to be a bona fide, albeit atypical, member of the industrio-military elite that has dominated American foreign policy for many years.

So where will this country be if, God forbid, Kissinger does not continue as secretary of state or even as an advisor during the next presidential administration? We may well miss joking about the five Kissingers or the German accent, and reading of heroic flights to exotic lands in turmoil, but as for foreign policy? There will be nothing gone to miss.

Politics as usual

By RANDY GINZIG

The first of the three so-called "Great Debates" of 1976 is over and it's back to politics as usual today, with both candidates back on the campaign trail. But in the aftermath, one must question just how "great" the event really was.

The 90 minute session, which turned into a two hour one thanks to miracles of technology, produced no great revelations and revealed no new proposals. Furthermore, there was no actual debating and discussion of the issues, just a panel-like question and answer format that touched on too few topics.

The candidates were overbriefed and loaded down with statistics that just tended to make the average viewer feel removed from the men who are meant to represent them.

Politicians will be politicians, and it was often difficult to perceive a clear cut answer to many of the journalist's questions.

The debate was actually no more than a staged media event. The candidates and their aides spent long hours in calculating the image that they wanted the candidate to portray.

The journalists were carefully selected by the League of Women Voters, and their questions were generally shallow. Rarely did any of the questioning panel try to pierce the rhetorical atmosphere and really put the candidates on the spot.

One could complain about the regulations set by the League of Women Voters, such as disallowing camera shots of crowd reaction, but it would be pointless, since network executives already have aired these views. But considering the technical foul up that was so sadly laughable, one wonders why this event was staged in a live theatre.

A television studio would have done just as well considering the nature of the debate. Perhaps we should have sent the candidates onto "Face The Nation," and then 100 million Americans would have been able to watch Hawaii Five-O.

Naturally aides of both candidates claimed major victories for their candidates, and of course both parties agreed that the ultimate winner was the American people.

A nationwide Newsweek-Gallup survey today showed that 38 per cent of Americans polled thought Ford won the debate, as compared to 33 per cent that thought Carter had the edge. Twenty-nine per cent thought neither man won, and this indicates that the debate changes very few minds, and just acted to reinforce those who have already decided who they will cast their vote for.

It appears that neither candidate has gained much or lost much as a result of the debate, and millions of Americans today would probably agree with the Friday London newspaper headline: "The Big Debate Even Had Ford Yawning."

Come on aboard

To the Editor:

We are looking for fellow vegetarian workers. If you are or would like to be involved in some sort of vegetarian action on your campus would you let us know.

This fall there will be a network of UNTURKEY or vegetarian Thanksgiving public dinners around the country. Vegetarian Thanksgivings save grain for some of the 50 million hungry, save animals from going terrorized to an unjust death, save humans from the food poisoning, intestinal cancer, kidney disease, and other hazards of animal flesh.

The laboratories on your campus, if it is a typical one, are involved in some of the kinds of research which have happened elsewhere.

At the University of Calif at San Diego, pigs are forced to run a treadmill till they drop of exhaustion.

At Harvard several years ago, pigs were dropped alive into 800 degree boiling oil for eventual compilation as research in The Symposium on Burns.

At the University of Rochester, at Wayne State etc., dogs were strapped into Blalock Presses and into crash cars, to see how much pressure could be taken before bones broke and skulls were crushed.

We are animal liberationists, world hunger activists, and disease fighters. All can be accomplished through vegetarian work, either on campus or with us. We work for $5 a week and room and board. Come on aboard. For more information, call us at [703] 524-4646.

Use it or lose it

By MIKE ROBERTS

Assume nineteenth century man pursuing knowledge through science so as to understand himself. Somewhere in developing this rationale of nature vis-a-vis humanity there is an eighteenth century shadow lurking. It is a self-righteous shadow steeped in Goethe and Separatism. Not only that, but the shadow believes this nineteenth century man to be Doctor Faust eating of the forbidden fruit from the Garden of Eden. If man has knowledge he might see himself "naked" and this would be "obscene." Hence, the Victorian era is born.

Geballte Faust! Fist! Stop star gazing! Think of good things so determined by contemporary community standards."

"This is the nineteenth century and man should reach for stars," defended the man.

"If you want to be nineteenth century and modern, consider spiritual elevation through the nature of God transcending," vouchsafed the shadow. "Consider spiritual knowledge manifest in experience."

"I can't. Oh, pooh on Emerson and Thoreau. I prefer Hawthorne, Poe and Melville."

"Oh Fist, these are evil men."

"These are evil men?"

"Yes, man is essentially vulgar and evil. His naked form is dirty and obscene. Look to God."

"How will I know man?"

"Look to God."

"What of freedom and liberty, of the Bill of Rights, of the First Amendment ... "

"Look to God, these are evil."

"How can I look to God when I am evil? Can I not look at my body and cure my ills?"

"Get on your knees and look to God!"

"Why should I get on my knees when I look to God?"

"So you can kiss my ass in gratitude."

Now to plagarize Bertolcht Brecht, "Erst kommt die Fressen, dann kommt die Moral." You have had your Fressen, now for your Moral.

If people do not look at themselves, at their ills and at their ugliness, they will always be sick. We must see ourselves naked. We must not be steeped in a Victorian sense of morals; we must notice ourselves with our odors, not from behind some fragrant cloak. Culture cannot have the viciousness, obscene, heinous, and violent cut out of its reflections, art and literature, just because society might get sick looking in the mirror. To hide "dog stories" in the back pages is censorship for this sake of gastric aesthetics; and that, like the censorship of sex and "dirty words" is for self-righteousness subserving humanity to acquiescence. This is not obedience to God but obeisance to the intangible power of human tyranny and repression.

Morality can be called God or it can be defined in other ways. It does not legitimize restricting free speech or press guaranteed by the First Amendment. Self-righteousness in the name of God or man, in religious or secular, can be no guise for censorship. If it prevents analyzing the human condition, suffering or social disease, it is in itself anathema.

Assume we can view self-righteousness as the quintessence of a quote from Richard Wright's Black Boy, "Wherever I found religion in my life I found strife, the attempt of one individual or group to rule another in the name of God. The naked will to power always seemed to walk in the wake of a hymn." Perhaps if people could see morality and power promoting censorship, then they could understand totalitarianism as that society which prevents opposition to itself and which will not see itself. Society must protect freedom of expression or it will find itself in chains. To grossly paraphrase Goethe, when it comes to freedom, you either use it or lose it.

Students compete for Danforth awards

UMass has been invited to nominate four seniors and one recent graduate in this year's competition for approximately 65 Danforth Fellowships.

These fellowships are designed for persons who have serious interest in careers of teaching and-or administration in colleges and universities, and who plan to study for a Ph.D., or other appropriate terminal degree, in any field of study common to the undergraduate liberal arts curriculum in the United States.

During the past nine years, 16 UMass students have received some form of recognition in this competition, and during the past six years, four students have won fellowships. Last year, two of our students, Margaret McCarthy, Linguistics-Philosophy and Ann Occhiutti, Japanese, received Honorable Mention.

Since the Danforth Foundation itself does not accept direct applications for Fellowships, persons must be nominated by Liaison Officers of their undergraduate institutions. The local deadline for applying is Friday, October 15. Inquiries should be directed to the local campus representative, Associate Dean James Shaw, 210 South College, 545-2627.

The Danforth Fellowships will be awarded to seniors and recent graduates who are considered "Early Entry" applicants in the Program. Another 35-40 awards will be made to postbaccalaureate persons who are called "Late Entry" applicants and who apply directly to the Foundation.

Preference will be given in the "Early Entry" component to persons under 30 years of age and in the "Late Entry" component to persons 30-40 years of age.

Applicants for the Early Entry awards may not have undertaken any graduate or professional study

'Security guards are handgun offenders'

BOSTON [AP] — Sheriff John Buckley of Middlesex County says he believes private security guards in Massachusetts are major offenders in misuse of handguns.

Buckley, in discussion of a statewide referendum in November proposing a ban on private ownership of handguns, said security guards who are special policemen would be exempt from the proposed ban.

He said, "Security guards, which are one of the worst offenders — no training the lowest possible minimum wage starting off — are one of the biggest culprits here.

"It means the police department in a city who wants to name a special policeman, whether it's a guard in a store or someone else they want, will have the freedom to do this."

Warren Cassidy of the Gun Owners Action League said he believes it is wrong for a state to conduct a referendum on a basic constitutional right to bear arms.

Poll shows Ford helped by debate

[UPI] — A poll of Massachusetts voters shows President Ford benefited slightly in his first debate with Democratic hopeful Jimmy Carter last Thursday night.

The survey published Sunday in the Boston Globe which commissioned it, indicated nearly 80 percent of eligible voters in the state watched or listened to part or all of the debate.

Those who watched gave the edge to the President by a 36-22 percent margin. Thirty-nine percent of those polled were undecided and 3 percent gave no opinion.

Although the President did a creditable job in the debate, the poll still shows him far behind Carter in the overall popularity contest.

Drugs administered against will

NAPA, Ca., Sept. 16 [Pacific News Service] — When 30-year-old Bay Area carpenter Donald Stein refused to take his medications at California's state mental hospital at Napa, a team of psychiatric technicians followed him to his bed, cornered him and forcibly injected him with a needle.

Despite evidence that psychoactive drugs cause brain damage in a significant number of users, the nurses at Napa, where Stein was formerly a patient, round up the patients and pass out the drugs four times a day. Those like Stein who refuse to take them are then forced to.

Mental patients' rights groups across the country call that "chemical rape;" mental health authorities call it chemotheraphy. Both agree that psychoactive drugs have become the standard treatment for more than six million Americans now involved in the mental health system. In California, for example, 90 per cent of state mental hospital patients are on drugs, according to state hospitals director Don Z. Miller.

California recently joined a handful of states with laws restricting involuntary treatment by electroshock and lobotomy — but no state allows involuntarily committed patients the right to refuse psychoactive drugs.

Donald Stein is going to court to try to change that. This fall the case of Stein vs. Linn joins another in Massachusetts as the first lawsuits challenging the right of psychiatry and the state to violate the civil rights of persons labeled "insane."

Meanwhile, California mental patients' rights groups are taking their case to state health officials and legislators and running into solid opposition.

After Network Against Psychiatric Assault (NAPA), a San Francisco-based patients' rights group, sat in at California Gov. Jerry Brown's office for one month this summer, state hospitals director Miller conceded, "I think we use drugs too much."

Since then a state Assembly research committee has launched an investigation into the use of drugs in state hospitals, but state health director Dr. Jerome Lackner says he remains opposed to NAPA's demand for an end to forced drugging. "I just don't think all patients are capable of deciding for themselves," Lackner says.

Another patients' rights group, the Committee Against Forced Treatment, has been unsuccessful in enlisting a legislative sponsor for its right-to-refuse-medications proposals. And the psychiatric establishment, organized health workers and the pharmaceuticals lobby have already indicated opposition to any legislation granting patients the right to refuse drugs.

Attacking the use of psychotropic drugs is like attacking the foundation of the modern mental health system. The U.S. now uses $570 million worth of psychoactive drugs annually — and usage is increasing by 11 per cent a year, according to a Squibbs Corp. survey.

"Drugs are the only breakthrough psychiatry has had in the last 20 years," says Napa state hospital Medical Director Abe Linn. "If I had to choose between medications and group therapy," Linn says, "I'd choose the drugs. You can do psychodrama, Gestalt or scream all you want, but you're not going to get the results you get with drugs."

Psychoactive drugs — mainly Prolixin, Thorazine, Naldol and Melleril — usually make patients calmer and more manageable. The drugs — which don't cure mental illness — do suppress hallucinations and mental confusion and tone down the bizarre behavior that disturbs the rest of society.

However, the possible side effects of psychoactive drugs run for two columns in most drug literature: drowsiness, blurred vision and speech, loss of libido, heart disease, fetal deformation and permanent brain damage in the form of tardive dyskinesia — uncontrollable muscle spasms that appear in from 30-50 per cent of users, according to Dr. George C. Crane, the nation's leading authority on the disease.

Many mental health workers claim that tardive dyskinesia occurs only after prolonged drug use. But Dr. Sumner Kalman, director of the Stanford Medical School's Drug Assay Lab, says that "tardive dyskinesia may occur at any dose level within weeks of starting treatment."

Nevertheless, much of the psychiatric establishment, represented by the American Psychiatric Assoc., now supports the biological theory that mental illness is caused by a chemical imbalance that may require life-long drug use. Even when psychotherapy is used, doctors increasingly rely on drugs to prepare patients for therapy.

The most universally acknowledged benefit of the drugs has been their ability to move patients out of state hospitals and into community health programs. As hospital populations diminished through the 1960s, liberals praised the drugs for allowing patients to "lead normal lives" as outpatients.

And state health departments were happy to close expensive state hospitals and dump patients onto welfare rolls and federally funded Medicare programs.

While long-term hospital populations have been cut with the increased use of drugs, recent statistics indicate that such results are due more to quick turnover than successful treatment.

According to the latest National Institute of Mental Health findings, year-end populations in state hospitals have been halved nationwide — but total yearly admissions have continued to rise, except for a 9.5 per cent dip between 1972 and 1974.

Drugs enable the hospitals to comply with county and state pressure to discharge patients quickly. In California, for instance, where county governments now pay 10 per cent of the patients' hospital bills, counties have been pressuring the hospitals to discharge patients in close to three weeks.

One result of such pressure is even more reliance on drugs, according to Carrie Monthei, a psychiatric technician who has worked at Napa since 1964.

Before the push to get patients back into the communities, Monthei says, state hospitals had the time and staff to prepare for patients' release through psychotherapy. But "we don't have any programs any more," Monthei says. "Now all we do is take the patients from the counties, medicate them until they calm down and shove them out again."

In the last few years, says Napa hospital doctor Arthur McAuley patients have been receiving higher doses of drugs; while at the same time, reports Napa nursing coordinator Marilyn Sass, hospital staff has been steadily decreasing.

Most state mental hospital workers, as represented by the California State Employes Assoc., say that with the current inadequate staff they must depend on involuntary drugging to protect themselves against what Sass calls "increasingly aggressive" patients — the majority of whom are poor and from minority groups.

For these mostly low-income patients, life is a shuttle between the hospitals and "psychiatric ghettoes."

In California, for example, the recidivism rate from the community hit 55 per cent this year.

"The communities were unprepared when the state hospitals closed down," says Lewis Eng, pharmacist for San Francisco County's mental health program. "The patients were dumped on us and now we're treating them the same as in hospitals. No one thinks the drugs are the optimum treatment, but that's all they give us."

Rather than being integrated into the community, many ex-and would-be mental patients now fill the transient hotels of the decaying inner cities or live out their lives in psychiatric ghettoes. One such ghetto, a 15-block island of board and care homes in residential San Jose, Ca., was developed out of abandoned fraternity homes when over 4,000 mental patients needed a place to stay after the state hospital there closed several years ago.

"Psychoactive drugs is one of the biggest problems we're dealing with," says San Jose Urban Ministry social worker Penny O'Hara, who has worked with these patients for the past seven years. "Most of these people are over-medicated.

beyond the baccalaureate.

The Foundation is currently making a special effort to bring qualified persons from the racial and ethnic minorities into the profession of teaching. Approximately 25 percent of the awards are expected to be awarded to American Indians, Blacks, Mexican-Americans, and Puerto Ricans.

Fellowship stipends are based on individual need, but may not exceed $2275 for single Fellows and $2450 for married Fellows for the academic year, plus dependency allowances for children and required tuition and fees.

The awards are initially made for one year, but are normally renewable until completion of the degree or for a maximum of four years of graduate study.

All applicants for these Fellowships must take the Graduate Record Examination. November 10 is the last date on which the Educational Testing Service will accept applications for the December 11 examination.

The Danforth Foundation was created in 1927 by the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. Danforth of St. Louis as a philanthropy devoted to giving aid and encouragement to persons, to emphasizing the humane values that come from a religious and democratic heritage, and to strengthening the essential quality of education.

Sun movement means balanced relations

By JACOB LOVE

The Sun, symbolizing our spiritual focus, is moving thru the 4th degree of Libra today. Libra is the sign of balance in relationships and, just as the light and dark of the day are balanced at the Fall Equinox, we must in turn move towards balance in our lives. Effort towards balance is especially significant this Libra season as a complex series of astrological events is emphasizing the need for or rebirth in personal relationships. For most of us, this energy may have already peaked and our partnerships have started anew. But there are still a few steps left before the renewal process is complete.

The most recent step in this series of events occurred early Sunday morning as Venus, the planet of love and harmony, moved out of Libra and into Scorpio, the sign of death-and-rebirth. On Thursday afternoon she will line-up with the planet Uranus, completing a yearly cycle which has centered on that particular Uranian quality — sudden change. Venus "rules" Libra and is thus most concerned with harmony in relationships. So if we have not yet found venusian harmony, the next few days may

A 'lifting' marriage

WINDSOR LOCKS, Conn. [AP] — Their wedding proved to be an uplifting experience for Gail Waterman and Thomas Grubaugh — literally.

The pair, who both work for an airplane firm and say they love flying, were married Saturday somewhere over Bradley International Airport in a plane Grubaugh was piloting.

Grubaugh, 30, took the Beechcraft Duke up then put it on automatice pilot. His bride sat to his right and the justice of the peace, Edward Lanati, performed the ceremony from the back seat.

Two fellor workers served as attendents for the Ellington couple.

The newlyweds aren't planning any immediate airplane trip to some faroff island for a honeymoon.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Monday, September 27 — Born today, you are a natural-born worrier, inclined to be overly concerned abon trifles and considerablmore concerned over important issues than is good for you, either mentally or physically. Worry has been known to keep you awake, cause you digestive disturbances, be responsible for your neglect of friendships. You are not unintelligent, however, and it should not be terribly difficult for you to understand the difference between worry and constructive thought; once this difference is clear, you should begin at once to work at behaving accordingly. Ultimately, you should overcome the habit of worry in the development of the habit of productive consideration.

Although you are not one who takes very seriously his own financial situation, whether it be good or ill, you are inclined to become ditressed over the economic ills of others. You often give more than you can afford to those who are in poor financial straits -- and then, much to your regret, wake up to the fact that you have jeopardized your own security and that of loved ones and others dependent upon you for their material good.

There may be times when your habit of looking a gift horse in the mouth irritates others beyond tolerance. For the most part, however, you should find that the care you take, the thoroughness of your investigation into even those opportunities that appear solidly based in reason and successful past experience, pays off quite handsomely in terms of prevention.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Improve your status in the community through sharing such knowledge as you have concerning community enterprises in the offing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Patience is an absolute necessity if you hope to end the day with more gain than loss. Direct others toward new methods of operation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Your dominant wish makes itself known early in the day. Take care that it coincides with the activity you ultimately schedule.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Conquer obstacles to your forward motion. There is little to be gained today by losing your temper -- even on purpose.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Ownership is not nearly so importance as the ability to perform. Don't be annoyed by another's questions; make an effort to answer.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The drama in the present situation on the home front may cause some tension early in the day. Be prepared to honor an old contract.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — The influence of a member of the opposite sex may cause you to change your mind regarding activities of long standing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A "survival-of-the-fittest" day. Make sure that you are well-prepared for the action you choose to become involved in.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You would do well to seek the security of the well-informed. Don't enter into any activity prior to a study of its principles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A desire for harmony creates harmony. Take care that another does not beat you to the punch where advancement is concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — With a time and place for everything, this is a day for organized endeavor. Don't attempt to play anything by ear.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Your very strong character may make it difficult for others to make the kinds of changes necessary to their success. Try to yield.

★ Harmony projected

bring us some sudden changes in an effort to bring us towards a fuller awareness of potential balance in our relationships. On the other hand, if we are close to harmony, Uranus may assist us with fine-tuning.

The Moon (symbolizing our emotional flow) is moving thru the last part of Scorpio and will enter Sagittarius at 3:23 p.m. As she leaves Scorpio, she will make two minor difficult planetary connections. The first peaks at 8:40 a.m. and may make us wonder who well we've got our act together. (And since it comes in the wake of a large wave of potential miscommunication which peaked last nite, we may tend to blame our own untogetherness on someone else.) The second lunar wave of the morning will peak towards 9:17 a.m. and may tend to make us wonder what our relationship is worth.

A third lunar wave will peak this afternoon towards 5:12 p.m. as the Moon in Sagittarius opposes Jupiter in Gemini (sign of communication). Jupiter "rules" Sag. and is the planet of smiles, wisdom, and expansion. His motion is currently retrograde which suggests that we may be moving backwards or inwardly in our search for smiles. As the Moon forms her opposition, we may feel drawn towards the outer world, yet feel that our inner smile is too deep, too private, or too uncommunicable to bridge the cummunication gap. Bridging is eased by realizing that self-and-other are really One, afterall.

A small lunar wave will peak at at 6:59 p.m. as the Moon connects with Venus, bring us harmony if we have the wisdom to appreciate it. The final lunar wave of the day will come towards 11:57 p.m. as the Moon reflects the light of the Sun two-thirds of the way towards Full. This growing lunar enlightenment will help us appreciate our expanding sense of emotional and spiritual balance.

Lonborg pitches Phils to title...

Champagne dousings fill the locker room of the Phillies as they clinched the National League's Eastern Division Title by downing Montreal, 4-1.

MONTREAL [UPI] — Jim Lonborg's four-hit pitching and Greg Luzinski's three-run homer enabled the Philadelphia Phillies to beat the Montreal Expos 4-1 in the first game of a doubleheader Sunday and give the Phillies their first championship since 1950.

The victory clinched the National League's Eastern Division title for the Phillies who now will try to win their first NL Pennant since 1950 by beating the Cincinnati Reds in the playoffs.

Luzinski hit his three-run homer in the sixth inning after Dave Cash walked and Jerry Martin singled. It was Luzinski's first home run since Aug. 26 and 21st of the season.

The Phillies scored again the seventh when Garry Maddox singled, stole second and scored on a single by pitcher Jim Lonborg. Lonborg, 17-10, went the distance, scattering four hits, walking one and striking out five.

The Expos scored their run in the sixth inning when Wayne Garrett walked and scored on rookie Andre Dawson's double.

The 17th win makes Lonborg the second highest winner on the Philadelphia pitching staff. Their top pitcher Steve Carlton is 19-6.

The three rbi for Luzinski brought his season total to 92.

On August 24th, the Phillies beat the Atlanta Braves 14-3 in Atlanta and increased their National League Eastern Division lead to 15 ½ games over the Pittsburgh Pirates. That lead shrunk to three games on Friday September 17 following a 4-3 loss in 12 innings to the Chicago Cubs. However, since the loss on the 17th, the Phils have now won seven out of nine.

...but controversy begins as Allen defends friend

MONTREAL [UPI] — Philadelphia will be in the playoffs for the first time this season, but one Phillies player will be in for a major disappointment.

And controversial first baseman Dick Allen says it better not be his old friend Tony Taylor.

The Phillies have 26 players eligible for post season play, but the rules limit playoff and World Series Rosters to 25.

"As sure as God made me and guides my hand, I won't play if they take him (Taylor) off for the playoffs," Allen told a reporter during the weekend. "Let them take me off it comes down to a choice."

The Phillies' most likely candidates for being taken off the roster are the 40-year-old Taylor, who has spent most of the season on the disabled list, and pitchers Wayne Twitchell and Ron Schueler, who have pitched effectively in their limited roles.

The Phillies would like to have all the pitching help they can get for the playoffs with the hard-hitting Cincinnati Reds. But, for the World Series, they could use an extra bat because of the designated hitter rule.

"That man (Taylor) deserves the chance to be in the playoffs in a Phillies' uniform after what he's contributed to this club over the years," Allen said.

"Nobody will make any decisions for us," said Paul Owens, the Philadelphia General Manager. "Hell, we just might keep Tony and the pitcher on and take him (Allen) off."

Except for second baseman Dave Cash, the Phillies' players were keeping out of it. "That just goes to show you how strongly he (Allen) feels for Tony. He (Allen) is a beautiful man," Cash said.

Sox sock O's, 8-3 behind Cleveland

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Cecil Cooper, Jim Rice and rookie Ernie Whitt drove in two runs apiece to support Reggie Cleveland's six-hit pitching Sunday and give the Boston Red Sox an 8-3 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Orioles' rookie Dennis Martinez was tagged by Whitt for a two-run double during a three-run fifth inning and was chased from the mound during a five-run eighth inning which featured Cooper's bases-loaded double and a two-run single by Rice which extended his hitting streak to 13 games.

Ali & Norton = $$$

NEW YORK [UPI] — Two days before they throw a punch at each other, Muhammad Ali and Ken Norton are participants in the guaranteed biggest money-making fight of all time.

Bob Arum, president of Top Rank, Inc., closed circuit television co-promoter along with Madison Square Garden of Tuesday night's title fight, predicts the live gate at Yankee Stadium will be more than $4 million, the richest ever.

The previous record gate was $2,658,660 for the second fight between Gene Tunney and Jack Dempsey at Chicago's Soldiers' Field on Sept. 22, 1927.

Yankee Stadium's seating capacity for boxing is 65,000 and it is scaled for $5.5 million. More than 40,000 people are expected to attend.

Of the 9,000 ringside seats on sale for $200 apiece, less than 300 remain. Arum said that the $150 tickets were going slow because "Anyone who has $150 to spend for a ticket can certainly find an additional $50 for a ringside seat."

Arum, who helped promote the first Ali-Joe Frazier fight, said the $100 seats were starting to move and he expected the $25 and $50 seats to sell out Monday and early Tuesday.

As far as closed circuit is concerned, Arum said the Ali-Norton fight was "way ahead of anything before, especially on the west coast, in Houston, Ohio and New York suburbs." He predicts that as many as half-a-billion people may watch the bout on some form of live or delayed telecast.

The prices for closed circuit telecasts is $20 in New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco and varies between $10 and $15 in other places. In the United States alone, the fight will be seen at more than 300 locations. It will also be shown in 52 foreign countries.

Arum believes that although tickets are moving quite well, they could have sold many more had Ali not chosen to train in Show Low, Ariz., and than at the Concord Hotel in Lake Kiamesha, N.Y., 200 miles north of New York City.

"If Ali would have trained in the city, the promotion would have gone more smoothly," Arum said. "I really can't blame Kenny for not training in the city. He said he would only do what Ali did."

For his usual last week showmanship and efforts in the ring Tuesday night, Ali has been guaranteed $6 million and $100,000 for training expenses plus 50 percent of all income above $9 million. Nortin is guaranteed $1,100,000 plus 5 percent of all income.

Pats stun Steelers with 30-27 rally

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Steve Grogan passed for two touchdowns and ran for another and John Smith kicked three field goals Sunday to give the New England Patriots a 30-27 come-from-behind upset victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers in a game marked by numerous turnovers and penalties.

Roy Gerela's 48-yard field goal attempt with three seconds left went wide to the right to give the Patriots their second straight upset after defeating Miami 30-14 last week.

Grogan brought the Pats, 2-1, back from a 20-9 deficit with third quarter touchdown passes of 38 and 58 yards to Russ Francis and Darryl Stingley. Grogan then scored on a six-yard run early in the final quarter to put the Pats ahead.

Steeler fumbles led to all three of Smith's field goals of 42, 40 and 26 yards.

Pittsburgh took a Patriot fumble 30 yards for a TD, then scored on a 10-yard Terry Bradshaw pass to Randy Grossman. The Steeler defense then forced New England to punt on the next series and Pittsburgh took possession on its own 20 with 1:42 left.

The Steelers moved to the 21 but Bradshaw's last three passes were incomplete. Those passed included one caught by Lynn Swann but the referee ruled he had stepped out of the end zone and Gerela missed his field goal which would have sent the game into sudden death overtime.

The Steelers took a 13-9 lead in a first half comedy of errors. Nine turnovers were committed under a steady drizzle. The Steelers, now 1-2, fumbled six times and lost all of them, including the three Smith turned into field goals.

The Patriots fumbled twice and lost one that led to a 32 yard Gerela field goal and Grogan also was intercepted twice by Glen Edwards and Mel Blount. Gerela also kicked a 41-yard field goal.

Franco Harris, who rushed for 78 yards, scored two touchdowns on a three-yard run in the first quarter and on a two-yard sprint in the third.

Bradshaw, who completed 20-of-39 passes for 291 yards, became the first Steeler ever to pass for more than 10,000 yards. He now has 10,200 yards. Grogan completed 13 of 32 passes for 257 yards.

Dallas edges Colts

IRVING, Tex. [UPI] — Efren Herrera kicked a 32-yard field goal with three seconds left Sunday to give the Dallas Cowboys a wild 30-27 win over the Baltimore Colts and produce a happy ending to Roger Staubach's greatest day as a pro.

Staubach, masterful all day despite a second-half downpour that made passing treacherous, rallied the Cowboys three times and put them in front 27-24 with 3:27 to go on a 38-yard scoring pass to Billy Joe Dupree.

But Baltimore, under the gutty guidance of quarterback Bert Jones, rushed downfield and Toni Linhart kicked a 24-yard field goal with only 28 seconds left that tied the contest and seemed certain to send it in to overtime.

But Staubach, working from his own 32, hit Drew Pearson with a 16-yarder and then let loose with another long throw that headed toward Golden Richards. The pass fell incomplete but interference was ruled against Colt linebacker Derrel Luce and the Cowboys had the ball with 12 seconds left at the Colts' 32.

One more pass to Pearson, this one for 18 yards, set up the Cowboys at Baltimore's 14 and Herrera came in.

College Sportsday 'super' as stickers gain two wins

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

"The college sportsday was...just super. Everything went smoothly and we couldn't have asked for better weather."
UMass field hockey coach
Judith Davidson

College sportsday has been a UMass tradition for a number of years. It's a day set aside for a "relaxed time to play hockey." There is no pressure involved, it's easy in invite teams to play, and the "games" are only twenty-five minutes long.

The main purpose of the day is to experiment with lineups, see which players work well together, and to "feel out" a season's line.

Each team, of the eleven invited, played three games. The UMass beating Keene State, 1-0. A team had fine scrimmages keeping Brown scoreless at 0-0, and winning the Central Conn match, 2-0.

According to Coach Davidson, the UMass team really started to get by its last game.

"Our positioning on the field really started to work, along with the players supporting each other with the ball," Davidson said. "That was our biggest problem with Springfield College last Thursday. We just weren't supporting each other and Springfield out-played us," added Davidson.

The general play of the UMass team improved in the overall three games. The Minutewomen had just come off the tough match with Springfield, which had also been played on poly-turf.

Overcoming the defeat, and the thicker grass were two factors that gave UMass a slower start against Keene.

Although the Brown game was scoreless, the UMass women definitely out-played Brown. Most of the play was in Brown's territory, and failing that, midfield play.

UMass B team played two matches to the varisty's three. They lost to a Varsity Westfield squad 2-0, but came back, 2-0, against Plymouth.

Coach Davidson was especially impressed with the play of two freshwomen, Sue Krieder and Julie McHugh.

"I coached Sue for three years in high school," said Davidson. "Having no idea I'd be coaching here at UMass, I advised her to go to Springfield College to get into some good hockey. Well, she opted for UMass, and, well here I am too."

Wednesday the team travels to Keene to challenge Keene State in an afternoon match.

For the women's field hockey team, College Sportsday was both profitable and pleasurable. (Staff photo by Jim Shields)

Women take 3rd

By BETTY LOU CLANCY
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's golf team placed third behind Mt. Holyoke and Penn State in the Mt. Holyoke Invitational, played this weekend, Friday afternoon and Saturday morning.

UMass led the three teams on the first day of the tournament with a total of 349, followed by Mt. Holyoke with 352 and Penn State with 355. Joy Little was the team low medalist with a score of 82, and Anne Marie Locke from Mt. Holyoke took all around low medalist honors with a score of 80.

The Minutewomen's luck did not last through the final day of play, as they fell behind Mt. Holyoke and Penn State with a total score of 361. The team medalist for the second day was Debbie McCulloch with an 82. The All-around medalist was Jan Van Munching from Penn State.

"It couldn't have been the weather that affected out play," admitted Debbie McCulloch, who holds the number one spot on the team." The weather was beautiful. [illegible] coach felt that the women all played well but failed to make the mark.

"All in all the tournament has very enjoyable and the players on the other teams were very friendly," the coach said. Yesterday afternoon the UMass Invitational got underway under light drizzle, and will continue this afternoon at Hickory Ridge country club. The main competition for UMass will be Mt. Holyoke and Cortland State from New York.

Both Coach McGahan and Debbie McCulloch seem to think that the team's confidence is high and will do well.

...while men gain strong showing in Yale Invitational

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team, picked to finish sixth or seventh in a coaches poll, placed a strong third yesterday at the Yale Invitational in New Haven.

The linksters, in second place going into yesterday's final round, finished the tournament with a 927 total, eleven strokes behind the winners, Temple University. North Carolina State finished second. [illegible] Coach Ron Gaudette was very pleased with his team's performance. He cited the fact that the two top schools, Temple and NC State, are comprised entirely of scholarship players. UMass' golf program doesn't have any scholarships.

Scholarships or not, the UMass players did very well, in this their third tournament of the season. They were led this week by senior co-captain Bobby Sanderson. Sanderson barely missed a twelve foot birdie putt on 18, that would have tied him for medalist honors. Sanderson finished at 72-74-77-223, one shot off the pace set by Yale's Peter Tervanien.

Jimmy McDermott, playing in the number one spot for UMass [illegible] Minutemen, was the disappointing performance of Ron Laverdiere. The young freshman shot a sky high total of 262, comprised of an 87-90-85.

Laverdiere's high scores handicapped UMass considerably. Under the best four of five scores format, his scores were not counted. What were counted however were the 82's and the 80, that wouldn't have been tallied if Laverdiere had played like he did a week ago when he shot 76. "We were playing best four of four, against four of five" said coach Gaudette.

"We played very well here, and with a few good breaks we could [illegible] their only home match of the season this Friday, in the Toski Invitational at Hickory Ridge.

For those people who like to think about such things, UConn finished 8th at Yale, winding up with a 967 total, 40 strokes behind UMass.

Ruggers take YanCon crown

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby club proved to be a rude host as it routed three consecutive opponents by an aggregate total of 53-6 in capturing the prestigious second annual Yankee Conference Rugby Tournament.

Playing what dynamic mentor Robert "Doc" Lawrence called "textbook rugby," the ruggers blanked URI, UConn, and UNH for 165 minutes before mountainous Chris Hobson (6' 4" 270-lbs.) rumbled into the end zone to put New Hampshire on the board with but five minutes remaining in the final game.

Saturday the ruggers dropped a very tough Rhode Island side 12-0. For the second successive week Kelley Atterage blocked a kick, picked it off in mid air and cruised the remaining 35 yards untouched to catapault the Minutemen into a quick 6-0 lead after but 20 seconds of play. This brilliant individual effort [illegible] by the UMass back line denied them — preserving an impressive 12-0 victory. URI was considered a pre-tourney favorite and according to field general Lawrence "was probably the second strongest team here."

In other first round contests UNH drubbed Maine 16-3, UConn pounded BU, 28-0, and Vermont struggled past a tenacious UMass "B" fifteen 10-7.

The patriarchal Lawrence surmised, "The Catamounts were simply much bigger and wore us down — especially during the latter stages. I thought we played very well."

In semifinal play, the ruggers whitewashed UConn, 20-0, as Terry Kinneen, Henry Brown, and the irrespressible Jeff Stefani recorded first half tallies to spurt the home side into an insurmountable 12-0 lead. Shortly after intermission, Hugh Chester-Jones broke out of the pack at midfield, linked with several other forwards on some very well executed exchanges, setting up Joe Peloquin for the score. Mike McClay bolted 25 yards to seal the verdict. UNH outlasted Vermont, 10-4, in a very physical match to set up a UNH-UMass final.

UNH was simply outclassed Sunday afternoon as the well-drilled ruggers blasted the Wildcats 21-6. Hugh Chester-Jones booted a 40 yard penalty kick, Mike McClay found paydirt in the left corner of the end zone, and Kelley Atterage also scored to build a quick 11-0 lead in the first 10 minutes of play. Tom Callaghan who did a fine job digging the ball out of the scrum all day broke out of a ruck-punished several would-be tacklers with some strong running allowing ever-alert Bob Hopley to eventually score. The pack [illegible] 21-6.

In consolation acton URI avenged its opening round loss by demoralizing BU, 45-0, in an abbreviated outing. The Terriers, last year's champions, were annihilated 73-0 in their two losses. No spokesman was available for comment. UMass' "B" downed the Black Bears from Orono, 14-6 and UMass "C" blanked UConn's "B" as Paul Whitney scored both tries.

Lawrence will get a good chance to further evaluate his "well oiled machine" when it travels to Cambridge to play MIT and Medford to meet the vaunted Boston Club (last year's New England champions) next weekend.

Bears attack UM, gain 2-1 OT win

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

UMaine forward Brian Peterson fired a low hard shot past UMass goalie Mark Hanks at 4:17 of the second overtime period Saturday to give the Black Bears a 2-1 soccer victory over the Minutemen.

The UMaine overtime win avenged last year's 7-2 defeat in a game also played in Amherst.

As in Wednesday's game against Bridgeport, the Minutemen held their own during regulation play, but they couldn't find the net in the two ten minute overtime periods. The opportunities were there, but UMass was just unable to get off any strong shots against the scrappy Maine defense.

UMass dominated play throughout most of the first half. The Minutemen used their superior quickness to their advantage, controlling the ball with clever passing and dribbling. During the opening minutes of the half UMass applied constant pressure on the Maine goal. The Maine fullbacks and halfbacks, however, broke up any scoring chances. The Minutemen had three corner kicks in the first five minutes, but they couldn't capitalize.

Although Maine managed to clear the ball often enough, the Minutemen had several outstanding scoring opportunities. Early in the half Joel Mascolo took a shot which bounced off goalie Phil Torsney's chest, but neither he nor Bobby McChesney could control the ball in the ensuing scramble.

The Minutemen were clearly controlling the tempo of the game, but they had nothing to show for it. Then, with just over ten minutes remaining, Maine co-captain Ted Woodbrey took a nice lead pass from Bill Dugas, maneuvered around the defense and beat goalie Hanks with a low shot. Woodbrey, a tall, rangy inside forward, was around the ball throughout the game for Maine. Whenever there was a struggle in front of the UMass goal, Woodbrey was in the middle, using his long legs and arms to get into a scoring position.

After Maine scored, the Minutemen suffered a letdown, playing lazily for the remainder of the half. They came on strong at the outset of the second half, however. Joel Mascolo controlled the ball at midfield and passed off to halfback T.J. O'Brien. O'Brien, still not completely recovered from an ankle injury, drove past a defender down the left sideline. He then passed in front of the net to Bob McChesney who fired the ball into the upper left hand corner.

The Minutemen continued to apply pressure on Maine goalie Torshey. One shot rebounded off him and he lost his balance. As UMass forwards moved in, a Maine fullback actually stopped the ball with his hands. Neither of the officials blew his whistle, however. Instead of a penalty kick, the Minutemen lost the ball as well as the momentum they had gained.

Both teams had several scoring chances throughout the second half, but goalies Hanks and Torsney made the big saves. Hanks made what was perhaps the save of the game when Ted Woodbrey shot a direct kick toward the upper left hand corner of the net. Mark then dove and knocked the ball to the side, barely reaching it with his fingertips. He was tested a few other times, but his quick reactions combined with a fast release of the ball kept the score tied at 1-1.

Neither team produced any serious threat in the first overtime period. An impossible angle shot by a Maine forward did however hit the post behind Hanks. The ball bounced right in front of the net, but Mark recovered in time to save it. In the second overtime period the Black Bears penetrated immediately. UMass fullback Pat Veale broke up one Maine scoring attempt, but soon after, Woodbrey hit Peterson for the winning goal. The silence of the Minuteman bench actually stood out more than the triumphant shouting from the Maine bench.

The only difference between Saturday's game and the Bridgeport game was the quality of the opponent. Maine is certainly a slower, less skillful team than Bridgeport, but the Minutemen themselves were a step slower Saturday than they were Wednesday.

A disappointed coach Russ Kidd commented, "We should have made hay against them, but we didn't. We played a flat game, particularly after their first goal. We were controlling the game until them, but then we slowed down."

"I put all the rabbits in and they ran, but we couldn't score," Kidd added.

Kubacki-to-McDermott; a tough combo

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

"I was really surprised — but we needed something to get us going," said Harvard tight end Bob McDermott.

"They go to him (McDermott) whenever they need something — he's a helluva player," said UMass coach Dick MacPherson.

Trailing 13-9 in the third quarter Saturday, Harvard had moved to the UMass 29, due largely to a 47-yard run by quarterback Jim Kubacki. Once the Crimson got there, however, the UMass defense tightened up again, and soon Harvard was in a fourth down and seven situation. Instead of sending in the field goal unit, Harvard coach Joe Restic sent in a play.

"It was a little play-action away from me," said McDermott. "I was set left and I just got behind the halfback."

Kubacki drilled the pass to McDermott at the UMass 11. On the next play, Kubacki rolled left and hit McDermott in the left side of the end zone for the touchdown that put Harvard ahead for the first time, and for good.

"It (the touchdown play) didn't surprise me — it was a tight end hook — they tried that thing four times," said MacPherson.

After Kubacki ran for the two-point conversion, the Crimson led 17-13, and went on to win, 24-13.

Kubacki made the conversion on much the same play he gained most of his 149 yards on the afternoon. He rolled left (he throws lefthanded) with the option of throwing or running, forcing the UMass linebackers and secondary to play the pass until he took off upfield.

"Our defense couldn't contain him," said MacPherson. "He got around the corner on us and that's the only thing our defense didn't do a job on." While he didn't say it, you can bet that the coach was thinking what might have happened if the injured John Toner and Steve Telander were at their respective linebacker and rover spots.

Kubacki averaged 8.8 yards per carry, had runs of 46 and 47 yards, scored two of Harvard's TD's and threw for the other. But the quarterback was unwilling to dwell on his rushing accomplishments. "I ran alright, but the throwing... jeez," said Kubacki, whose passing stats (six for 15, 73 yards) didn't measure up to his running.

As expected, the Harvard offense displayed various formations, men-in-motion, and some unorthodox plays, all designed to confuse the defense.

"I don't think it (the motion, etc.) caused us any great problems," said MacPherson.

In the statistics department, Kubacki led the rushers, followed by MInuteman Bill Coleman with 75 yards in 20 carries. UMass' Rich Jessamy carried seven times for 46 yards.

McDermott led the receivers with four catches for 55 yards. UMass tight end Moses Williams caught three passes for 46 yards, while Coleman turned in the longest reception of the game, 50 yards.

That one catch by Coleman provided the most excitement of the afternoon, next to Diane Luciani's halftime baton-twirling show.

Coleman took a screen pass from quarterback Brian McNally at midfield, cut to the wide open spaces on the right side, and slipped around Harvard defensive back and co-captain Bill Emper at the Harvard 25 and zipped in for the score.

"I made a bad play," said Emper. "I should have turned him in. A kid that quick doesn't give you too many choices. If you don't get him within five yards of the line of scrimmage, he can make you look bad. I looked especially bad."

While Emper may have looked bad, MacPherson didn't think his team looked bad on the whole.

"I was disappointed in only two things said the coach. "Our containment of Kubacki ... and the final score."

Ivy League sweep maintains top image

For the Yankee Conference, in its big chance to gain some respect with four encounters against Ivy League schools, it was a weekend to be forgotten. After all the anticipation, anxiety, emotion, and hurts, the little ole Yankee Conference remained that way in the minds of the Ivy establishment as it dropped all four contests to the Ivies.

Aside from Harvard's comeback win against UMass, Yale followed suit by overtaking UConn, 21-10, Dartmouth surprised New Hampshire 24-13, and Brown nipped a stubborn URI, 3-0 in a game not expected to be as close as the score.

UConn, after falling behind early 7-0, led at halftime 10-7 on a Nick Giaquinto 25-yard run and a 35-yard field goal by Greg Sinay.

In the second half, the Elis went to junior quarterback Bob Rizzo who engineered two scoring drives without even throwing a pass. In the end, it was just another loss for the Huskies, now 0-3, who have beaten Yale just three times in the series dating back to 1948.

New Hampshire, defending Yankee Conference champions, met a very tough Dartmouth team, as UMass will testify from its preseason scrimmage. The Yankee Conference again led in this one, as the Wildcats grabbed a 3-0 halftime lead, thanks to tailback Bill Burnhams 91 yards rushing and a defense which held the Green to four first downs and 70 yards on the ground.

After 60 minutes though, the outlook had drastically changed. Dartmouth fullback Curt Oberg gained 155 yards on the day, including two third quarter touchdowns, and Dartmouth, with its second win in as many outings, handed UNH its initial loss of 1976.

At Providence, R.I., a 37-yard field goal on the second play of the second quarter by Brown's Greg Rorke stood up as the lone score of the afternoon. Rhody's attack was limited to 192 yards in total offense, as the Bruins made it an Ivy League sweep.

Crimson 'Ku(m)-backi,' 24-13

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

The final scoring play of the game epitomized the gloom and frustration of a beaten football team.

Harvard quarterback Jim Kubacki, who exceeded all pregame buildup as an offensive threat with a brilliant second half, had just romped to a 46-yard touchdown with 1:39 left in the game to seal a come-from-behind 24-13 Crimson victory over UMass Saturday at Harvard Stadium. Meanwhile, back near the line of scrimmage, Minuteman defensive standout Ron Harris lay on the grass writhing in pain, soon to be carried from the field on a stretcher.

Fortunately for UMass, the injury was not as serious as had been feared. Harris, who had his right knee chopped from under him on the play, suffered a hyper-extension of that knee, and hopefully will miss only a few days practice.

Less fortunately however, for Harris and the Minutemen, a trip to Cambridge for what could have been "UMass' game" in its quest for New England recognition came to a painful finish, as Kubacki, the Crimson defense, and a second string punter let everyone know that this was indeed "Harvard's game."

All Kubacki did in leading Harvard to its second win in as many games, was rush for 149 yards (104 in the second half), two touchdowns and a conversion, and pass for 73 yards and another score. As for the Crimson defense, often overshadowed by a more publicized offense, all it did was hold UMass to 98 yards in the entire second half, and not allow the Minutemen to penetrate beyond the Harvard 40-yard line.

The Minutemen, now 2-1, had led 13-3 midway through the second quarter, and still clung to a 13-9 margin in the third period before Kubacki, the senior from Ohio, put on his display. After a John Romboli punt gave Harvard the ball on its own 21, Kubacki, utilizing the option play to perfection, cut across the grain and raced 47 yards to the UMass 30 before being caught from behind by defensive back Greg Sprout. After three running plays gained only three yards, rather than attempt a field goal which would still leave them behind, the Crimson went for the first down and connected as Kubacki hit tight end Bob McDermott over the middle to the 10 yard line. On the very next play, the southpaw QB hit his money-man McDermott again on a rollout left for the go-ahead score, and with Kubacki's two-point conversion, Harvard led 17-13.

Related story on page 23

"They didn't surprise us with that," a disappointed UMass coach Dick MacPherson said after the game. "They sure go for him (McDermott) when they need something. He's a helluva man."

From then on, the UMass offensive attack, limited to an opening 35-yard touchdown drive and an explosive 50-yard screen pass over the middle from quarterback Brian McNally to running back Bill Coleman, was all but shut off. The Minutemen did reach the Harvard 40-yard line late in the third quarter, but on a first down play a gamble failed. With Harvard switching to a man-to-man defense, UMass hoped for a mixup on coverage and on a halfback option, Rich Jessamy took a McNally handoff and tried to hit the senior QB racing down the left side. The pass fell short though, and defensive end Bob Baggott came up with a crucial interception.

Poor field position, set up by two clutch punts by Ray Coolidge, hindered UMass the entire fourth quarter. First, on a Harvard fourth and inches from the UMass 40, Crimson coach Joe Restic, amidst the boos of the crowd, decided to punt. Coolidge, filling in for split end Jim Curry who normally handles the punting chores, responded with a kick that rolled dead on the seven yard line.

UMass did little, and after an exchange, Harvard faced another fourth and one, this time from the UMass 36. Restic, hoping for the same, again called for Coolidge who this time angled one out at the three yard line.

After Keith Lang runs gave him some breathing room, McNally completed a 25-yard toss to tight end Morse Williams, as UMass drove to a first down on the Harvard 49. Two runs and an incomplete pass later, UMass faced a crucial fourth and eight with 3:09 remaining in the game. McNally dropped back and fired a pass over the middle to Williams at the 40. The ball went off Williams' hands on what turned out to be UMass' final offensive series of the game, as Kubacki then drove for the clinching TD, and Lang fumbled the ensuing kickoff.

Things had appeared bright for the visitors in the first half, as Harvard, on its initial possession, turned the ball over on its own 35-yard line, as Vic Jeffries picked up a Tom Winn fumble caused by linebacker Joe McGlaughin's hit. UMass quickly capitalized, as Jessamy scampered 15 yards, and after a fine catch by John Gladchuk at the five, Lang went over left tackle for a two-yard score. With Dave Croasdale's conversion, UMass led 7-0.

After a second quarter field goal by Mike Lynch of 31 yards cut the lead to 7-3, the Minutemen exploded their only long-gainer of the afternoon. With a second down from midfield, McNally dropped back and hit Coleman with a quick screen over the middle, and the senior with a big opening, was off for a 50-yard score, deking the final Crimson man at the 15 yard line. Croasdale's kick was no good and UMass led 13-3.

However, Larry Schember returned the ensuing kickoff 65 yards for Harvard, as Croasdale ran him out of bounds himself at the UMass 26. Again utilizing the option effectively as he did all day, Kubacki and Harvard used six running plays to reach paydirt, climaxed by Kubacki's six-yard roll off left end. McGlaughin blew in and blocked the conversion try, and the halftime score read UMass 13-Harvard 9.

As to the shutting off of the UMass offense in the final half, MacPherson said, "Field position had a lot to do with it. Harvard has a good disciplined defense and we had to move the ball a long way against them for a touchdown."

When asked what areas of the game disappointed him, the coach, without a smile, answered, "The final score. That—and the containment of Kubacki, and our not being able to move the ball consistently."

With a bye in the schedule next week, a UMass win would have given the school two weeks to savor the victory, but with the defeat, as MacPherson said, "It'll be a long two weeks waiting to get back at someone. If we had won, it would have been great."

Fenton earns honor

UMass defensive tackle Dennis Fenton was awarded ABC's "Defensive Player of the Game" Saturday, while Harvard's Jim Kubacki gained offensive honors.

With the awards, ABC donates $1,000 to the general scholarship fund of each school.

Fenton, 6-4, 193-lb. senior who made seven tackles and assisted on another, drew praise from coach Dick MacPherson.

"Dennis has played three years for us now, and he's better now than we ever thought he would be," MacPherson said. "He's the hardest working individual we have on the squad."

Quinn sparks harriers to tri-meet triumph

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

"Outstanding" would be about the best way to describe the showing of Mike Quinn and the UMass cross country team on Saturday as it defeated Brown and Boston College, in that order, by the score of 23 to 36 to 40.

Quinn's performance, which included beating favored team captain John McGrail, surprised many people, including Quinn, but some folks were not surprised by it.

"Mike ran so well as a freshman, it was expected he would do well, but I'm a little surprised he did it this early," said assistant coach Arnie Morse. "I expected something by the end of the season, but it's a pleasant surprise to see him running this aggressively this early in the season."

"I hadn't planned on it," Quinn said modestly when asked if he had thought he could beat McGrail. "I didn't think I was going to be able to beat him. It couldn't have been one of his good days. On a good day, you never know," he shrugged. "I had my good day today, let's hope it keeps up."

Thirty-two harriers took the gun on a day which was ideal for running, not too warm and perfectly calm. At the three-mile mark in the orchard, the front running group was already established, as Quinn and McGrail came by in front, followed by Bill Roach of BC. UMass was already moving to take control of the meet as Lou Panaccione, Kevin McCusker and Neal McGrail followed this group closely, with only Sean McCracken of Brown separating them from Cliff Staples of Massachusetts. John Scheer and Andy Levy were also in striking distance.

After a loop through the orchard, Panaccione had moved past Roach, who was in turn being followed closely by McCracken. Holding down the sixth through eighth positions were Neal McGrail, McCusker and Staples. With one and a quarter miles to go, coach Ken O'Brien was all smiles.

"It looks great right now — as good as we could've hoped for. A real surprise is the performance of McCusker and McGrail, and I'd look for Staples to close and finish strong," O'Brien said.

At the finish it was Quinn all alone, smiling and gesturing triumphantly. BC's Roach finished strong and came in second. McCracken also got by McGrail and Panaccione to take third. The latter two runners, plagued with stomach cramps, eased up when they saw the meet was well in hand, and finished fourth and fifth, respectively. Quinn's time of 25:09 was the fourth fastest time ever run on the orchard course.

McCusker capped a fine run by coming in sixth, while Staples fulfilled O'Brien's expectations by coming on well to finish seventh. Harvey Barlow of Brown and Dick Hayden of BC broke up the UMass string by coming in eighth and ninth, while McGrail faltered slightly but was still impressive in finishing 10th. John Scheer and Andy Levy held on and were the seventh runners for UMass as they tied for 11th.

Quinn was relaxed after the race as he munched an apple and protested that the race had been "too easy."

"Coach said to take the first mile easy and then to go how you felt," Quinn said. "Everybody stuck together and nobody felt really pressured about the race. We just went out there to get the experience of good hard running."

"The times were surprising in light of the fact that this is the first week of the season," O'Brien said. "I was especially pleased with the way they took control over the first two miles despite running the first mile fairly easily. We had six of the first eight runners, which was a good strong move, and they didn't let the pace bother them," he said.

The harriers will be idle until Tuesday when they will have a tough meet against Providence and Harvard at Franklin Park in Boston.

Education for Liberation

Black Students-1976-

By WADADA TZAKE

It is imperative for the liberation of oppressed peoples throughout the world that we as black students be aware of the contradictions of receiving a "White", so called "higher education" and to consciously make an effort to shape our mentality to transform the oppressed communities from which most of us originate.

At the time that you are ready to graduate you will be qualified for any position on the job market but will very likely be forced to join the ranks of the millions of unemployed in this country. If black college youth can't get the "pie in the sky" that immediately implies that no other segment of the black population can either.

Thus as black students we have a critical role to play in the future of our race and in the future of the world. History shows that it is our destiny to unite and organize with our disinherited brothers and sisters "in the street" to confront and overthrow the racist oppressor class of American society.

To surmount the situation of oppression, we as black students must first critically recognize its causes, so that through transforming action we can create a new situation, one which makes possible the pursuit of a fuller humanity.

Reality does not transform itself. To achieve our goal (liberation) we must confront our reality critically, simultaneously objectifying and acting to transform that reality.

It is essential that all black students be aware of the manifold contradictions of attending a college or university in America in 1976. Because as a black student you are the one who is facing, and will continue to face, the ultimate contradictions of the american economic system (capitalism).

If the black student of 1976 is to live up to his historical responsibility it is mandatory that he understand that UMass, along with all the other major educational institutions across the country, was not built for his advancement (or his cultural orientation) as a black person. Such institutions were bult for the perpetuation of the American capitalist economic system which thrives on the exploitation of the lives and countries of billions of black and yellow people in America and abroad.

On Thursday, September 23, 1976 B.M.C.P. held a meeting in the Campus Center in room 165. At that meeting President of B.M.C.P. Rick Grant discussed the activities of jobs that are offered to students.

He stated that it is important to expand these activities and improve them. Activities of the licensee D.J.'s who have programs on W.M.U.A. 91.1 FM here in Amherst. He stated this is one area that could be expanded if students are interested in getting a program of their own.

He stated B.M.C.P. will train anyone wanting to obtain a Third Class Operators Permit and also give booklets to anyone wanting to take the test. B.M.C.P.'s office is located in the Student Union room SU 415 A.

Starting on Saturday, September 25, 1976 from 10:00 a.m. until 8:00 p.m. in B.M.C.P.'s office training sessions will begin. Mr. Grant stated training in setting up remotes will be taught to anyone along with how to operate a radio station.

He cited that remotes is essentially recording what was said by a important speaker anywhere in the five college area. Further, he said, these remotes are then broadcasted over W.M.U.A. to give the entire community a chance to listen to what the speaker said.

B.M.C.P. will be holding elections at the next meeting. Anyone interested in becoming New Director, Program Director, President, Vice President, Secretary, Music Director are encouraged to stop in the office and find out when and where the next meeting will take place.

Third World Budget Cutback

Deceit, Rascism and Hypocrisy Practiced in Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG)

By KATHE SANDLER

Written in response to slanted coverage by the Collegian and the necessity of communicating present circumstances of OHAG which have not yet been disclosed.

In Dickinson Lounge on Tuesday, September 22, 1976 Jim Whidmer, a member of OHAG Finance Committee placed the following Ultimatum before the representatives of the Third World Center: "IF YOU JASPERS CAN'T DEAL WITH OUR PROCEDURES YOU CAN GET THE F--- OUTA HERE!"

Not only did this archaic manner of name calling result in a near fight and dismissal of area government but it also gave voice to the views of OHAG concerning its Third World members and the community they represent.

Equally expressive in conveying OHAG's sentiments toward its non-white residents was Vice President, Gary Shuster, who spoke of how the order of the meeting would go, "LET'S RUN THROUGH THE NEW THINGS FIRST AND GET TO THE BULL---- LAST."

In wondering what Shuster may have meant in referring to "the bull---" one might remember the three hour meeting the preceding week where the Third World Center having been the first group to submit its proposal, was the last budget to be discussed. Among the discussed budgets prior to the Center's was the recommendation of allocations by the Finance Committee of $1000 for a snack bar in Fields, whose itinerary has not yet been given and an increase of funding to the Women's Center.

Interestingly enough, the President of OHAG, Debbie Love, called the Woman's Center "highly productive", although much of their funds last year were not even spent. One of the contradictions Debbie Love displayed was that while informing the Third World Center that their refreshment expense was out of the question, she had overlooked her approval of the Women's Center, whose budget contained this very same expense and sum.

When Third World members were told that it was "illegal" for OHAG to appropriate money for any administrative staff they brought up the point that the editor of SAGE, OH's monthly newsletter had been paid last year and had been recommended for payroll by the Finance Committee again this semester.

A letter from the Assistant Business Manager of R.S.O. was also produced by Timmy Hart of the Third World, stating that these salaries could indeed by paid by OHAG. We begin to ask ourselves if OHAG can even seriously consider us when its President reads this same letter to the entire body between snickers and giggles and "Ah-ha, what have we here?" sarcasm. The $2700 annual budget of the Third World seems to strike Area Government as being preposterously high although we are asked to overlook the fact that they allocated $500 toward the refreshment expense (beer and cider) of a Halloween bash this past year. Over $500 consumed in one night? Not to mention the $1000 split between the dorms last year because the money simply was not spent. If the $11,035 budget of OHAG cannot show us the money we ask that they must be able to explain the $800 being allocated last year to a radio station which never materialized.

At this point in time Orchard Hill has proven to the Third World community how oblivious they are toward being confronted with their own out and out deceit and hypocrisy. While the problems of dealing with a committee who wheels and deals its way through each year's budget, its major expenses going toward beer parties, concerts and snack bars we may never see, like the unseen radio station of last year, we wonder if constructive elements of cultural, academic and social activities are perhaps something a little foreign to Orchard Hill.

Or is it simply because OHAG has declared the Third World Center and its community obsolete and wishes to sweep them under their shuffle.

The problem of OHAG goes beyond the hysteria of Debbie Love, the President who is known to burst into tears several times through the course of the meeting. They go beyond its hints of corruption, hidden behind vile insults and laughing degradation. It encompasses a phrase descriptive of the structuralized rascist framework which sets each member working as an integral, against Third World students.

THE THIRD WORLD CENTER URGES EVERY THIRD WORLD STUDENT TO BE PRESENT AT THE NEXT AREA GOVERNMENT MEETING ON ORCHARD HILL: TUESDAY, SEPT. 28, 1976 AT 9 P.M. IN DICKINSON LOUNGE. WE MUST BE SEEN! WE MUST BE HEARD!

Encountering Racism

NIGGER! Who Me? I asked myself staring out, from the window of my uncle's VW Bettle, at the source of that remark. It was a group of white teenagers standing by a telephone booth on the street.

They must be wrong. How could they call an African a "NIGGER"? Especially an African who had just arrived from Africa 15 minutes ago. In fact it was just a couple of hundred feet from that tunnel, what's its name, leading from the airport. It must be a case of mistaken identity! If they had known it was a guy from Africa they wouldn't have called me that. In fact quite a few of my friends back home were white!

"NIGGER! NIGGER"! It was them all right and it was directed at me. Am I really in America? Is this the place where I thought racism was wiped out? Is this Boston, the cradle of equality? Is this really New England? Is this really the East Coast, where one isn't exposed to the colour of his skin?

I've found out in the short time I've been here (a month to be exact) that all that I was told about America was a myth. That myth has now been shattered.

I know where I am. I am in America where the minority are alienated from society, where there is little hope of upward social mobility for a Black person. I know where I am. I am just a few hours away from Boston, where the colour of my skin earns me something short of a lynching. I know where I am. I am in Massachusetts where a small white child who refuses to go to sleep is told "go TO SLEEP OR I'LL LET THE NIGGERS EAT YOU!" I know where I stand. I stand on the soil of New England, where the Ku Klux Klan have a formidable following. This is the East Coast where the average white man says "Give them an inch and they take a mile."

Then I come to UMass thinking that college kids must be different than their parents. After all they do seem to have a higher education than their parents and are willing to change this "sick and crazy" society. But I didn't know what was in store for me. Ninety-five per cent of the freshmen were from the state of Ma. A large percentage of them came from South Boston high schools. The very high school kids who were throwing rocks and beating up Blacks just because they didn't like the idea of studying with a Black, were accepted at UMass! The very same high school kids who didn't want the black students to have opportunities in life in the future by denying or trying to deny them access to better facilities. Or did they throw rocks at the busses because they feared being in the same class photograph at the end of the year with a black person or two in their midst? And mother would be ashamed to show the photograph to Aunt Mabel when she came visiting in the summer!

I don't believe that those students in South Boston could change society for the better. It would be like asking Vorster to do away with aparthied. By next year and the year after, the students who are in their junior and senior years in high schools in South Boston will enroll in UMass. I am petrified to look into the future of UMass three years from South Africa and end up being the chancellor of UMass!

My experiences gathered momentum. There is this white boy I know who has been having problems lately. His problems are real big. He has to share a room with a black boy. He has always been exposed to the myth of stereotypes of black people in the same way he has been exposed to the myth of the Jews having all the money. He is from a middle class family and never had anything to do with Blacks in the aspect of having to live in the same room with a Black Boy. He has led the sheltered type of life most middle class white boys lead and knew the motto by heart "IF THEY SMILE AT YOU, SMILE BACK, BUT DON'T LET THE NEIGHBORS SEE YOU." And it really bugs and bothers me, he says. I wasn't psyched up for this, he told me. He told me that he had to go through some sort of orientation before he could sleep under one roof with a black person. So that white boy who felt bothered having a black roommate is the result of one of those middle class families. He doesn't even feel prejudiced!

These sort of things just don't happen in Kenya. The white people aren't as 'stuck up' as the one over here. I mixed with them at all levels. Be it at the educational level or at a social level. They didn't seem to be aware that my colour was a challenge to their self-rightousness. Or was it all a great piece of acting. Maybe because it wasn't their homeground and they had to be "nice."

As far as a racist is concerned a nigger is a nigger be he from Harlem or from Africa. That was the one mistake I made. Thinking that just because I am from Africa racism would not touch me. Brothers and Sisters, I am in the same boat with you. I know that you have been oppressed for a longer period of time than I have. But I joined the ranks of the oppressed after Boston. And I'm feeling the oppression of the present.

Professor Playtell Benjamin-

A Revolutionary Scholar-

"A Man Of Principal And A Man Of Consistency"

By PADMORE O'MARD

On Wednesday, Sept. 15, in the Lumumba Room, New Africa House, Prof. Playthell Benjamin, one of the founding members of the W.E.E.B. DuBois Dept. of Afro-American Studies presented a lecture entitled "On Being Black in American Civilization: Reflections on the Bicentennial." This lecture was the first of a series of events scheduled for the duration of the semester sponsored by the New Africa House Cultural and Political Workshop.

Prof. Benjamin, hailed by fellow Black activists as "a man of principle and a man of consistency", is an astute historical analyst who was active in transforming the Black civil rights movement in the northern part of the country during the 1960's. He has a profound knowledge of history and has demonstrated the ability to struggle and to improve himself. However, as a scholar, he remains unrecognized due to the fact that he refuses to compromise his African peoples interpretation of history which conflicts with the stereotyped images of history as perpetuated by the major educational institutions in this country.

Benjamin taught that racism is the major contradiction in American society and for this, like other revolutionary scholars who do not easily fit into the institutional structure, he was hounded from the University.

In relation to "on Being Black in American Civilization; A Bicentennial Reflection", Prof. Benjamin said that he noted, here in America, the genesis of a situation where a society whose professed ideals of freedom and democracy stood in direct contradiction to its blatant social and moral chaos. He noted the intense oppression of Blacks in America as a recurrent phenomena and as evidence of this, he explained that the priorities of the masses of Black people (vis a vis in terms of food, clothing, and shelter) are as pressing today in 1976 as they were in 1876.

Excellence Through Involvement

By MICHAEL JACKSON

"Excellence Through Involvement," this is the theme being voiced by the faculty, staff and students who are associated with the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS). During the 1976-77 academic year members of the CCEBS program and its supporters will be engaged in a process rededicating themselves to the process of insuring that those Black, Asian-American, and other low-income students who matriculate through the University with the support of CCEBS are afforded every opportunity possible to become integrally involved in campus life. This theme was echoed at the programs' first convocation which was held in the Campus Center on September 7, 1976. During the convocation, which was attended by nearly 200 faculty, staff, and students, academic awards were presented to those students who have already proved that "Excellence Through Involvement" is uppermost in their minds. Convocation participants were also given an opportunity to once again become enthralled in the eloquent inspiration of CCEBS' "reverend-in-residence" and doctoral candidate Stanley King. Mr. King stressed the fact that all associated with the CCEBS program must become involved in the education of each other and never shirk the responsibility of helping their fellow brothers and sisters.

During this academic year, "Excellence Through Involvement" will be exhibited by CCEBS students in a variety of ways. They will participate in the further development and utilization of recognized student organizations, varsity and intramural sports, (checkout the leaders of the football and basketball teams), and academic programs like engineering, pre-med, BCIC, Office of Internships, and Afro-American Studies. CCEBS students and staff will be seen making significant efforts in making certain that New Africa House also remains as an excellent vehicle for the expression of "Excellence Through Involvement". You will find that between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 11:00 p.m., New Africa House will be alive with students attending classes, study halls, academic tutorials, working with fellow members of their organizations, and sharing each others company in Yvonne's Place, which is located in the Che Lumumba Room.

This year you will find that CCEBS' staff and students will be increasing their contacts with each other. They will be developing stronger helping relationships and proving that "Excellence Through Involvement" also means working together over sustained periods of time. The initial few weeks of counselling, contracts, and the participation in the CCEBS Freshman Survival Series , which consisted of several seminars, films, and social events, has assured that this school year will be eventful and productive. So, if you're really interested in learning, growing, and demonstrating that your presence on this campus can be useful, become involved with the CCEBS program. Take advantage of the services it provides and help it to make certain that all of its students receive the most complete education the Commonwealth can provide. In the next issue of Nummo further information will be provided on the CCEBS staff, its students, and its programs.

The History of Nummo News

For the past four years Black students, working as a part of the Black News Service (B.N.S.) have been active in offering a positive and invaluable service to the entire university community.

We the members of the Black News Service recognize a responsibility to expand news coverage and information by about about Third World people, for all the community's people.

The systematic exclusion of oppressed people, particularly Black people, from the media is well documented. It is also a fact that the news media is one of the founding pillars of modern civilization; and if a people are to assert themselves in this civilization, then it is imperative that all Black people fully participate in every aspect of the media.

The realization is that we can't allow others to distort the imagery of Black people. We can't continue to look up to others for our vital source of information. If we do, we will certainly be misinformed and highly miseducated. We must maintain a network for communicating our ideas and recording daily news and information, which is crucial to our survival as a people. A person who doesn't know lives in darkness and a person who has been told lies lives a life of make believe.

Being aware of this fact, BNS emerged to service the Black community with relevant news and information. Pat Grundy will be remembered as spear heading the initial plans and objectives for the News Service in 1971.

As with every Black media organization, BNS suffered the plague of lacking community financial support. Being concerned with this serious situation, A Black organization calling itself CORE, launched an investigation of the existing white media organizations on campus and discovered that they were operating with no Black student input into their respective staffs. CORE then protested and led a 1960's-styled sit-in at the white student newspaper (The Daily Collegian) in order to force this organization to utilize adequate Black representation on its staff. The result of this action created two positions on the Editorial Board of the Collegian. Brother Rudy Jones became the first Black Affairs Editor in the history of the Collegian and Vangie Brookfield worked as Assistant Black Affairs Editor.

This move contributed to the growth of BNS and provided the group with publication privileges to which they had formerly no access.

The following year Brother Sherwood Thompson with the help of Assistant Black Affairs Editors Cal Witworth and Sandra Jackson worked consistantly, bringing to the campus important news from local, national and international scenes.

Last year brothers Rick Scott Gordon, Abdul Malik and Padmore O'Mard led the Black News Service in providing a year of positive and productive news service here at the University of Massachusetts.

Last smester the news service climaxed with the formation of Grassroots, the first funded, Black Student publication at the University of Massachusetts.

As popularity and demand for more nres space developed, as well the Black community desire to be represented by a news service which adequately represented its interest. The editors and staff of BNS were faced with the challenge of providing more complete news coverage to Black people on campus and surrounding areas. With this demand the creation of Nummo Newspaper came into being.

Nummo News operates a news and information media, providing local, national, international and cultural information. This newspaper is the basic core which records and communicate to Black people daily news and information crucial to their survival.

Nummo News is a student media training and placement organization. Its function includes the training and placement of news reporters, photographers, graphics, arts and lay-out personnell.

Up to this date, Nummo News has been operating with a limited staff. As a result, the news service has not been able to service the needs of the total third world community. It is therefore imperitive that aal third world students (studying and-or interested in communication) join the staff and participate in informing the people.

The staff and editors of Nummo News welcomes all energetic and serious minded students to come in and join our action team. Nummo News is located in room 103 New Africa House. All phones are 545-0061 and 545-0062. Staff meetings are held weekly, Thurs. at 7:30 p.m.

We need graphic artist, photographer, reporters, layout personnell, fine arts critics and writers.

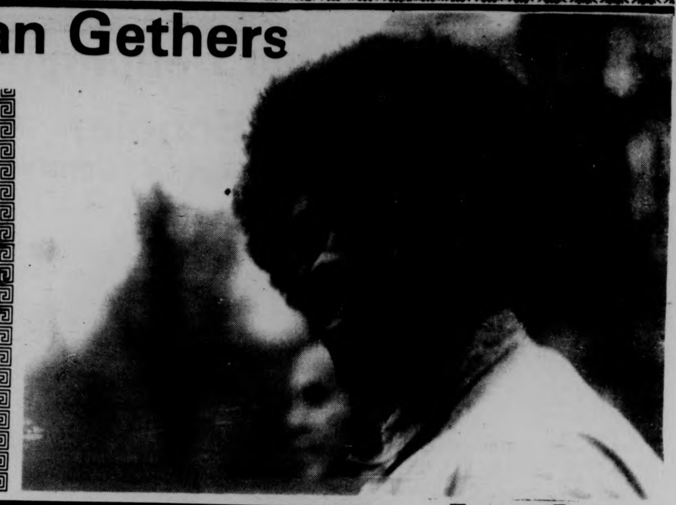
The Case of Craeman Gethers and Earl Brown



The case of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers has set a strong precedent that can not be overlooked. The case has increase racism in Western, Massachusetts. The case has developed the old cliche that "All Blacks Look Alike."

In this respect, the emphasis of this letter will clarify the facts on this case. On August 7, 1974, MacDonald of Hadley (located on route 9, and approximately one mile from the Amherst line) was robbed of $1200 by three Black males. The store was immediately closed, and the state police were summons to the scene. On arrival the police interviewed thirteen witnesses (witnesses were the manager, dishwasher, grill man, counter women, and nine customers), of which three came forward with the clearest description. On August 8, a ground keeper (employed by the University of Mass.) discovered the stolen car on Rocky Hill Road (which is located one and a half miles west of the University). The police found a sawed-off shotgun, shells, a dark green coat, brown turtleneck sweater, red belt, and money bags. The police did not find any fingerprints at MacDonald or inside the stolen car. On August 9th, Debra Cooke was brought to the University of Massachusett police station (the basic reason being, that the University has the highest number of Blacks in the area and would be the first place for the police to find a suspects). During the identification process a picture of Roy Eddington was deleted and replaced by Robert Brown from Cambridge, Mass (note: the picture was not the convicted man Robert Earl Brown). Debra Cooke picked an early picture of Robert Brown (from Cambridge, Mass.), as one of the suspect who participated in the crime (at this time Robert Brown from Cambridge was the only individual chosen). State trooper Thomas Ford asked Cooke if she was positive about the identification, and stated that she would be asked to come back when a later picture of the defendant was received. August 12th, resulted in a search on another individual room (Robert Earl Brown from Elmira, New York). The search was conducted without probable cause, a warrant, or authorization by the Head of Resident who controlled the area. The reason for the search, was in reference to Robert Brown from Cambridge. On August 14, a picture from Hartford (from a larceny in February, 1974) produced an up-to-date picture of Robert Earl Brown (and not the suspect Robert Brown from Cambridge). The witnesses were called in to make another identification. The new picture was inserted next to the first picture. Ultimately, the witnesses made the mistake of thinking the first and second pictures were the same. This mistake led to the search warrant being issued on August 16. Trooper Thomas Ford and Phillip Cavanaugh (of the University of Massachusett Security police) conducted the second search of Robert Earl Brown dorm room (the first being conducted on August 12, without a warrant). The object of the search was to find a gold bucket belt, brown pants, green coat, brown turtleneck sweater and a gun (please note: that a green coat and brown turtleneck sweater were found in the stolen car). The results of this second search produced another green coat, a pair of brown pants, and an eggnog color turtleneck sweater. Ultimately this led to the arrest of Robert Earl Brown on August 23, 1974 at 3:00 a.m.

Craemen Gethers became a suspect when he was identifed on August 26, 1974 at Kentucky Fried Chicken (located a mile east of MacDonald where the two witnesses were employed). The two white women identified Craemen as the suspect wearing a red belt on his head, sun glasses, and holding the shotgun during the crime. They stated they could remember his features, face goatee and sunglasses. Craemen Gethers was on crutches when he walked into Kentucky, he was wearing a hat that was on backward and could not expose the top part of his face, and was wearing sunglasses.

Based on Debra Cooke testimony at the Probable Cause hearing on September 26, 1974, both Robert Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers were bounded over to the Superior Court. In February Robert Earl Brown took a court appointed polygraph test that produced deceptive results. On March 17th, the first Superior Court trial started. The trial lasted four days and was deliberated by a jury of one black male and eleven whites. Prior to the trial Kathy Clark made a racial slur, which implicated Craemen Gethers as ugly. "He's ugly just like the guy with the shotgun." The main witnesses proved that they could not identify the three Black males. First, two of the three main witnesses claimed to have seen Robert Earl Brown in Kentucky Fried Chicken the last week in August (of 1974) after the arrest of Robert Earl Brown, when it was proven in Court that the defendant was staying with his mother in Springfield. Secondly, Craemen Gether's alibi confirmed their present on campus at the time of the allege crime. Finally, the third black male has never been identified by the witnesses of found by the police. The jury deliberated fifteen hours before Judge Cross decided it was hung.

Craemen Gethers was tried again in mid-July 9 of 1975 by an all white jury. With a new lawyer (Serota) who took the case lightly, Craemen was convicted of participating in the Armed robbery of MacDonald on July 24, 1975. In light of the racial remarks, contradictions presented by the witnesses, the state did not have a picture of Craemen Gethers until he was booked for the allege crime. This was the only picture showned to the witnesses (instead of the normal spread system). Craemen has served fourteen months of his eight to twelve year sentence. Recently, Craemen was denited a furlough by the Classification Board of Norfolk State Prison. Craemen last appearance in courts was July 2, 1976 before trial Judge Hayer for a new trial based on two polygraph test that turned out positive. Since July 2nd, the Judge (Hayer) has not made a decision.

Robert Earl Brown was tried again on October 16, 1975 by an all white jury. Prior to the trial an individual by the name of Robert Brown (who was white) was sentenced for rape. The same lawyer (Jerome Farrell) was unable to delay the trial because of the conflict, or the fact that the jury was all white. Mr. Farrell, whose performance is being questioned, stated that the judge did not want the case to be in the papers like the previous trial. Jerome Farrell was not prepared when the original picture chosen by Debra Cooke of the suspect Robert Brown (from Cambridge) was not the defendant Robert Earl Brown from Elmira, New York. The fact that the picture was a mistake, the false probable cause that led to a search of Robert Earl Brown dorm room, the two sets of clothings (the items found in the stolen car, compared to the items found in Robert Earl Brown's room), the contradiction of where Robert Earl Brown allegely was standing at MacDonald on August 7, 1974 by the three witnesses, led to the conviction of Robert Earl Brown at 4:45 p.m. on October 22, 1975 for the Armed Robbery of MacDonald. On October 29, 1975, before two hundred supporters, trial Judge Paul Tamburello sentenced Robert Earl Brown to a three to five year sentence in Walpole. On February 5, 1976, Brown returned for sentence reduction, and a new trial motion (without the trial transcript). The motions were overlooked by trial Judge Paul Tamburello and he remanded Robert Earl Brown to the Northampton House of Correction to allow him to resume schooling. But the decision produced a conflicts with the paper transfer from Walpole to Northampton, eligibility for work release, and placed Robert Earl Brown in a limbo situation. Robert Earl Brown did not qualify for the work release program until June 1 when a letter from the Commissioner's Office in Boston confirmed the program. Secondly, Robert Earl Brown transcript's were delayed from mid-April to the beginning of July. Since complications on February 5, 1975, Brown has gone for post bail in April, which was denied by Judge Tisdale who replaced Judge Tamburello because of retirement (but was reinstated by the Chief Justice on April 29, 1976). Currently, Robert Earl Brown is still on the work-school release program. A trial date is being set for some time in early October 16, 1976, Robert Earl Brown will be eligible for a one third parole consideration.

In summation, the case of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers reminds us of the Scottsboro case of the 1930's. Apparently, the racism being perpetuated in Boston and the rest of Mississippi has not changed since this time. The case of Robert Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers must be seen in the same light as the Charloote 3, Wilmington 10, Gary Tyler of Louisiana, and countless of innocent people who are political prisoners. These are the reasons we ask for your support in the Robert Earl Brown-Craemen Gethers case.

Thank you for these few minutes.

Our in the Struggle,
Robert Earl Brown

Judge Hayer on September 3, 1976 denied Craemen Gethers bid for a third trial. The judge based his decision of two crucial matters. First, several witnesses came forward in the July trial to verify that Craemen was on crutches "shortly before and after the incident." Judge Hayer wrote in his response that "I find that the decision to use or not witnesses is a matter of defense tactics and strategy, that if witnesses were available to the defendant and were not used, he cannot be heard later to ask for a new trial on the basis that they were not called to him." Secondly, in dealing with the Polygraph, "the Court was not impressed with the experience or expertise of the examiner." Judge Hayer sided with the prosecution on every issue that was brought before him. One has to wonder when the system of justice will come forth. Obviously it takes a governor pardon, or the consciousness of the Higher courts to produce this effect. In reviewing some points, it is o bvious that contradictory statements can be made by white witnesses. Secondly, it is a fact that the Court has produced it own contradiction. The Scientific Security Company of Boston, Mass., who administered the Polygraph test to Craemen Gethers, also gave a polygraph test to Robert Earl Brown in February of 1975. In this respect if the test qualified in the first trial (March, where both defendant were tried together), why doesn't the test qualify now? Finally, October 29, 1976 will complete Earl's first year in jail. We have to seriously question if a Work-study release program is really justificed over freedom. If it is, then the Third World Community can only expect the same remendies for Brother Leon J. Thomas, Mark B. Wimbish, and Keith B. Dixson who are being accused of robbin Cumberland Farms, and the five cases that have recently involved the Puerto Rican community.

Attica-1976

Attica Brother Big Black, a participant and leader of the September 1971 rebellion at Attica Prison in New York, and Dr. John Bracey, of the Earl Brown-Craemen Gethers Defense Committee will speak on Wednesday, October 6, at 7:30 p.m., at Mahar Auditorium, at the Universitty of Massachusetts, Amherst. Black will talk about the meaning of the Attica Rebellion in 1976, and the prisoner organizing now going on in New York state. John Bracey will speak about the efforts to free Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers, two Black men from the Amherst area framed on armed robbery charges over a year ago.

The Attica Prison Rebellion of September 9-13, 1971, represented a historical advance in priosners bringing public attention to brutality and inhumanity of prison. As outside observers noted, the men who lived in D yard of Attica prison for four days created a society of order, discipline, and racial unity that allowed the demands for changes in the prison system to be heard and understood throughout the country. The response by New York state governor Nelson Rockefeller, the asaault on the prison on September 13, left 43 prisoners and guards dead, and hundreds wounded.

Big Black will speak about the rebellion, efforts to free Attica Brother Dacajeweiah, the only person returned to prison for participating in the rebellion, a federal civil rights damage suit being brought against state officials by those who suffered from assault on the 13th, and bringing the issue of international amnesty for all prisoners who rebel against intolerable conditions before the United Nations. He will also speak on the strikes that have occurred in New York state prisons in the last two months, which are raising the same issues that were raised in September 1971.

Dr. Bracey will talk about the efforts being made to free Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers, former UMass students, framed in Northampton Superior Court for the Hadley McDonald's robbery of the summer of 1974. Their convictions came because of racism in the Valley, shown in the way the men were picked out for trial, how the prosecution prepared the testimony of the witnesses, the white jury, and the complicity of the UMass police set-up. Political pressure has forced the state to allow Earl Brown out on an educational release during the week. Efforts continue to secure him a new trial. Despite passing two lie detector tests administered by an ex-New York police sergeant, the judge who convicted Craemen in 1975, recently denied him a new trial. His efforts for appeal continue.

The speakers will share the same platform because one thing the spirit of Attica Rebellion means in 1976 is work for the freedom of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers.

-A Case of Expediency- Little Johnny Ross

By PAMELA BENN
and JUANA DAVENPORT

Teenager Johnny Ross (left front) awaits the appeal of his sentence in this punishment cell with three adult convicts. The cell has one bed and no light.

Johnny Ross a 16 year old Louisiana youth was sentenced to die in the electric chair last year. Johnny is black, he met with his lawyer once briefly before the trial. The trial lasted one day, the jury took 90 minutes to find him guilty of raping a white woman. The crime occurred in 1974. Two black men were identified as abducting a 25 year old white woman and taking her to a deserted warehouse in the district of New Orleans. The witness to the abduction notified police who were waiting at the scene. A gun fight took place and the two men escaped, one of the men were described by news paper accounts as 19 or 20 years old about 5'7" tall and weighing 145 pounds.

The other man was described as being 20 or 21 years old about 5'9" tall and 160 pounds. Johnny who is 5'4" tall and weighs about 130 pounds was only 15 years old at the time.

A little over a week after the crime the police arrived at Johnny's home in the New Orleans ghetto, where he was living with his mother. He went quickly with the police who first started to drag off Johnny's younger brother. At a lengthy police line-up the woman stated the men in the line-up did not look like either of the men who attacked her.

Later the police handed Johnny a confession they had typed up and demanded that he sign. Johnny who neither read or understood the confession refused to sign, but gave in only after the police had beat him severely.

The trial was filled with conflicts in testimony. A police officer's description of the culprits and his version of the shoot out were widely different from the woman's. In spite of this and other conflicts the jury took little time to find him guilty and condemned him to death.

Johnny should get a fair trial to prove him innocent. The Southern Poverty Law Center which commits itself to defending trials such as Johnny Ross asks for your support so that they may help Johnny Ross get a fair trial.

Send your tax deductible donations: The Southern Poverty Law Center; 1001 South Hull Street; Montgomery, Alabama 36101.

Johnny Ross stands outside "the hole." The grates you see are the cell's only source of light.

Dear Poverty Law Center

Please try and understand what I'm about to explain to you. Please take out the time.

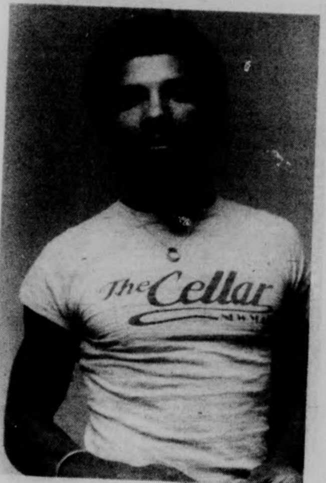
See, I have no one else to help me. Please believe that I didn't do this neither did I have anything to do with it. Please I need your help. I came from a very poor family, I don't know who my father is. And my mother is getting welfare. I hurting and suffering.

Only if I had someone to hold my hand and walk with me I know I will make it. Please I beg you to help me, and talk with me. I'm truly afraid to die, and Louisiana Penitentiary is a very dangerous place for a 16 year old to spend the rest of his life. Please help me.

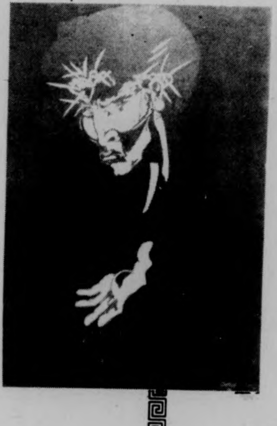
I'll wait to hear from you soon.

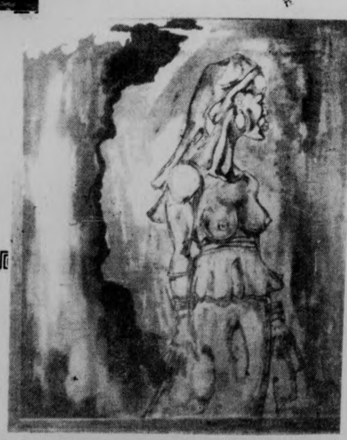
Sincerely,
Johnny M. Ross

Art Exhibit At New Africa House Gallery



Artist and poet Carlos W. Anderson, a resident of Amherst, has a showing of his works at the New Africa House of UMass. The artist started his showing Thursday, September 22nd. In addition, Mr. Anderson is engaged in dramatic acting, singing, poetic scripting and interpretation, playwriting, directing and choreography. A rare ray of light with endless gifts and skills. Mr. Anderson has also published his first book of poetry entitled "The Children of My Soul." The cultural center of UMass at Amherst staged this artist's first showing at the artist's age of nineteen, and are now joined for a second revealing of the young master.





'Is America Really Free?'

"America, America, God shed His grace on thee, and crown thy good with BROTHERHOOD, from sea to shining sea."

"America, the land of the FREE and the home of the brave"?

In this bicentennial year it is difficult to believe that our country is still bound with the fetters of prejudice. I have heard and read of injustice to the American Black, but not until this year has it really hit home. It happened to someone I love. I have just learned that the son of a black family know and respect, Keith Dixson of Springfield, has just spent some miserable hours in jail at the State Polce Barracks in Northampton. I am very angry as I write and hope as you read this you will have some of the same feelings as I do.

An armed robbery was committed in a nearby town yesterday afternoon involving four blacks and a convenience store. Five hundred dollars was stolen. It didn't take police long to find their suspects. The first car coming into campus with three young blacks in it was stopped and the young men handcuffed and put into jail. No one listened to what they were saying, they were black, that was all that mattered. "The blacks all look alike," said the man who was robbed, and he identified them as his thieves, although Keith didn't even get a look at his accusor. It didn't matter that they had no money but did have proof they had just been to a town in the opposite direction from the robbery, they were black. Neither did it matter that there were only three boys in the car, "One must have flew the coop," said their arrestors.

Keith Dixson is a third year student at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. At Springfield Technical High School he won the "Outstanding Student of the Year Award," from the Black American Nascent Groups for the Year 1973-1974. Just this year on April 25, he was awarded the "Reserve Officers Association Bronze Medal", presented by the Western Massachusetts Chapter 001 to a Military Science II cadet who has demonstrated outstanding qualities of leadership, moral character and high aptitude for Military Science.

We can only pray that the injustice done to Keith and his two black friends will not leave an indelible scar; it can. When you have won these honors and have worked all summer at menial jobs to get some of the things you want, and then someone accuses you of doing something you couldn't possibly have done, it hurts, hurts so badly you don't know how to take it.

Now I understand why the American Black feels so angry, we whites have made them that way. Just who do we think we are anyway? Are we really a FREE country? I think not. Not until ALL Americans are free of prejudice against their fellow men is America truly going to be free. How long before we rid ourselves of these fetters of racism and give equal justice to all? May God help it to be soon.

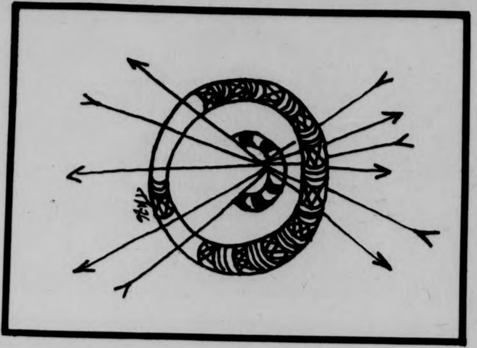
Resources Lost From Third World



Today millions of resources is being lost from Third World Nations. The most important resource any national can possess is human resource. When we consider that in the twentieth century, one child out of three is born without any chance of living a normal life, we are forced to conclude that our civilization is mutilating its human resources. Yet as leaders turn their attention to the offers of capitalist nations to develop their economy, they invariably neglect the health of their people who continue to starve to death, and those who are not relieved by death remain malnourished and useless to the nation as they will never function in the labour market.

The green revolution which has been a cornucopia for the United States and Rockefeller has been a lasting Pandoras box for the ever poor developing nations.

No nation can successfully develop unless it can provide its own human resource to control its economy, and as long as the leaders of developing nations engage in endeavors to build up their nation's gross national product without training and developing the brain power to control it, the green revolution is destined for failure. As a result we find in developing nations, many examples of Rockefeller institutes, with seed producing industries controlled and managed by Americans, or Russians, Frechmen depending on the sponsor of the industry.

Recognizing that the policies of those representing the United States, Russia etc., will reflect their nationality, they will invariably come up with ideas and suggestions on how to make these nations self-sufficient in say rice production, but the idea is to quadruple the investment of their employer, and the "change" is given to the country being helped.

The green revolution can be the cornucopia it is supposed to be for Third World nations, but as long as the politicians continue in their trend of trying to balance economy against humanity the result will be the greatest nightmare the poor man can experience.

As the revolution booms in profit for the United States and other countries giving, and the small farmer continues to suffer even worse. He has to leave his farm and begin the long track to the city where he is listed among the hungry, malnourished, unemployed mass — An illustration of the scope of the problem is the fact that the number of landless laborers in the rural areas of India now exceeds the total population of Great Britain.

Throughout most of history, migration from the countryside to the city was largely a response to opportunities in the city. Rapid urbanization was then an indicator of industrialization and progress. Today, however, migration to the cities is increasingly becoming an indicator, not of economic development but of rural frustration and the failure of the green revolution.

This paper is an account of the implications of this technological revolution in agriculture, man's efforts to eliminate hunger and poverty, to create jobs in the countryside, to slow the rush to the cities, and to improve the quality of life.

Unified Contradiction

By ANNIE D. CARPENTER

Life I dare not attempt to explain it only give in brief some of my experience and feelings. My goal is unsure. My hope is to find that which is sure. It has been my need to live with the interest of all being to find its natural course within creation, which is that being complete. What I feel when I say creation is complete, is merely that in the beginning of creation, all was and is energy a projection of the creators form or image.

These projections are contradicting and opposing forces. The purpose of these opposing forces seems to be to aid Man in realizing that in the basic forms of life, All must have a complete balance to find unity. Nothing but war can be achieved without a balance of opposites. Which is to say that in the worlds of contradicting energy all dreams are real. What one wants one can have, it is only a matter of how one has been programmed to approach one's dreams.

It feels true to say that life moves in lines and circles. Which is parasitical in nature. And is sat up to depend upon positives and negatives complimenting each other. The greatness of one creativity comes when one hitches into the flow of what all ready is. Creation is complete and need only to be realized. It is the knowledge that the weak and humble will rise and rule the strong and forceful. A baby of helpless flexibility will survive a fall that one of ridgetness could not. The root of a tree will grow around a rock by becoming flexible and by giving into a form of a greater solidness.

It seems true to say that in order for one to realize creation one must have some awareness of the still activity of creation. There are parts of creation that undergo extreme conflict but does find a way to get around conflict inspite of the characteristic of its form. No force no conflict. After all what is logic but the extreme opposite of illogic. What is white but the extreme opposite of black.

Therefore opposites are the same only differs in definition.

What is the center but space that unifies the beginning and the end.

Therefore good is not good and evil is not evil unless they are seen as two instead of one. Feel the projection of love where there is hate.

Feel the letting go within the sacrifice of self. Hear the conflict and contradiction. Know that they are friends and lovers. Feel the emptyness of completeness. Go deep within your heart and soul and know that it is you.

Malcolm X Center Needs Third World Community Support

By GREGORY MAYNARD

The Malcom X Center, a unique Cultural center, located in the lower level of Berkshire Dining Commons, offers diverse academic and recreational facilities to members of the Third World community. This student-run center has been active for years in its fight to improve the conditions of life for the Third World student.

Each semester, a series of courses relevant to the Third World Community, are taught within its walls. Courses such as "Black Psychology," "Revolution in the Third World," "Comprehensive Life Science", and "Sculpture Therapy," are at the disposal of everyone in the community.

The Black Caucus, which decides the policy of the Malcolm X center, holds its meetings every Monday night, in the center. The entire community is urged to attend. There are also positions available on the caucus for interested persons. The people, who fill these positions, will also represent the caucus at the Southwest Assembly meetings.

Each week, other groups such as the Black Scientist Society may hold their meetings there. Everyone is also invited to these.

For recreation, a television, a ping pong and pool table are located there. Each semester, group activities such as: dinners, picnics, ski trips, and parties are organized by the Malcolm X staff.

Recently, it has been noticed that members of the Third World community have not been taking advantage of these facilities. The staff would like to know why. A suggestion box has been placed in the room. Please tell us what you would like to see done with the rooms facilities.

Mao Tse Tung 1893-1976

Mao Tse-tung, who led China through a war of liberation against foreign domination and plunder and onto the road to socialism, and whose ideas and actions continue to inspire and guide revolutionaries around the world today, has died.

His contributions to the science of making a revolution and building socialism are countless. He grasped the understanding that Marx, Lenin, and other revolutionary leaders developed, and applied it to the situation in China. And in the process, he further developed the science of revolution, finding the solution to situations that past leaders had never faced. The united front strategy and the struggle against modern revisionism are two important contributions.

While his contributions are great, his method of leadership was simple in essence:

"We should go to the masses and learn from them, synthesize their experience into better, articulated principles and methods, then do propaganda among the masses, and call upon them to put these principles and methods into practice so as to solve their problems and help them achieve liberation and happiness," Mao explained in "Get Organized" in November, 1943.

The following is a short exerpt from a long statement issued by Hsinhua, the Chinese press agency on September 9, following the death of Mao Tse-tung:

"He dedicated all his energies throughout his life to the liberation of the Chinese people, to the emancipation of oppressed nations and oppressed people the world over, and to the cause of communism. With the great resolve of a proletarian revolutionary, he waged a tenacious struggle against his illness, continued to lead the work of the whole party and the whole army and the whole nation during his illness and fought till his last breath."

Mao Tse-tung has made an immense contribution to the science of revolution, adding new developments to the body of theory left by Marx and Lenin. In concretely applying their work to the situation in China, he found correct solutions to political problems of enormous gravity, vastly broadening the world's revolutionary heritage. In particular, his understanding of the strategy of the united front as a means for winning a revolution, and his critique of modern revisionism as a means of preserving that revolution, will guide those striving to build a world without imperialism or deprivation.

Ultimately Mao's success rests on correct assessment of the capabilities of people, in their capacity to grasp the essence of a political problem and implement its solution in their own lives. As he put it himself, "The people, and only the people, are the motive force of history."

Mao leaves behind an exceptional revolutionary life, one filled with struggle and with the courage to draw scientific conclusions from the evidence, even if he had to "swim against the tide." He personally suffered the loss of his first wife, murdered by a KMT war-lord, and his son, killed by Americans in Korea. Yet he remained firm in the principles of Marxism-Leninism, grappling with the "thousand great deeds that cry out to be done." Mourning in the face of such a contribution seems inappropriate. Rather, progressive people everywhere will examine his thought anew to draw lessons for the present period.

Southern Africa Support Committee

On Monday night, September 20, 1976, 50 members of the Five College Community fused ideas in conjunction with the situation in Southern Africa. It is common knowledge that Southern Africa, is indeed an example of pure racist oppression. Africa, in general, has been the focus of every eye in the world. Kissinger is running across the continent like a chicken with its head cut off. His attempts to negotiate individually with African rulers have been futile. Perhaps, because they know the tune of the words played by the Reverend Ndabaningi from Rhodesia when he says, "We would like it" (negotiations with Kissinger) to fail." We will win this war and insure our economic and political independence. If a settlement is imposed by the Americans and South Africans, we will not have true independence." (NYT 9-23-76)

It is necessary then, that we also give our opinions, as well as display them for all to see. This group in support of the oppressed peoples of Africa will make an attempt to educate the community to the situation. Our program will consist of lectures, teach-ins, films, etc. This group will henceforth be called, the Southern Africa Support Committee. The organization is a five college effort by all persons who are concerned about the situation. This is a serious plight, which affects all peoples; Blacks, Jews, Third World members, as well as whites. Please give us your support. Meeting times and dates will be posted throughout the valley. Your support is needed.

If we sit and wait, watch and stare
The crisis will soon be here
To all of you, speak out now
Support the native African
His life, culture, and freedom are in danger of permanent extinction

Role of Third World Students

Black students have a big challenge to meet, they are leaders of tomorrows world. They have to bite-the-bullet, because the world is forever changing. In the past the Black masses were sustaining themselves on hope, but since the Nixon era Black people must realize that they have to bring things into existance for themselves.

Assistant to the Vice Chancellor of UMass Jim Di Shields leads a discussion in New Africa House Lounge on Monday, September 13, 1976 as part of CCEBS' Freshman Survival Program.

He and Dr. Michael L. Jackson the director of CCEBS and his staff hit all the high points to be aware of, what to know and what not to forget.

They said the mood of America has changed drastically over the past three years. And that the traditional standards of excellence are being pushed higher everyday. One example is the Reinstitution of the F.

They said that as a minority you are in jeopardy (women, religious groups) thealmeanings have been diluted. Mr. Di Shields urged students to take advantage of the opportunities here. He stated Excellence is the only thing Black students should be about. HE STATED BLACK STUDENTS AHE AT UMass because they represent something essential to the survival of the race.

He stated one of the principal Historic contradictions confronting the black student is that this institution was not built for the advancement of blacks.

Jim Dishields: Assistant to the Vice Chancellor

He stated after four years of institutionalization the black students tend to lose their identification and are unable to return to their homes and relate meaningfully with their people.

He stated things aren't getting easier; and in order for black students to break out of this mold, they have to transcend the bourgeouis orientation which this institution perpetuates. He stated the Black Professions must reunite with the masses to uplift the Black Race.

Said one to the other, Now listen you, There's a certain rumor that can't be true,

That man descended from our noble race; The very idea is a rank disgrace.

No monkey ever deserted his wife, Starved her babies and ruined her life.

And you've never seen a mother monk To leave her babies with others to bunk;

With baby sitters of one sort of another, Till they scarcely know who is their mother.

And another thing you'll never see, A monk build a fence round a coconut tree;

And let the coconuts go to waste, Rather than let someone else have a taste;

Why, if I'd put a fence around my tree, I'd only invite you to steal from me.

Here's another thing a monk won't do, Go out at night and come home in a stew.

Or use a gun, a club or a knife, To take some other monkey's life.

Yes, man descended, the ornery cuss But he surely never descended from us.

Culture in the Valley

On Friday the 17th of September 1976 The Neil Clarke African American Percussion Ensemble performed in the basement of New Africa House in the Lumumba Room. The group performed traditional African Dance and Music. The performance was part of a series of scheduled events at New Africa House. The music was honest and direct, in the music as a whole was a sincere message of freedom directed at the spirit.

All Day Music-Carlos Garnet

By WILLIE J. WHEELER

Everyone grooves to music with a message. People pat their feet, clap their hands, close their eyes and let the richness of all day music make them feel good.

Jazzman Carlos Garnet and the Cosmos Nucleus thoroughly delighted an audience assembled in New Africa Houses Lumumba Room. The music was a presentation of the Afro Am Society at UMass Amherst.

The session was scheduled for Saturday September 25, 1976 at 9 p.m. but the music did not get underway until 10:00, an hour later because the group arrived late. As it turned out no one was disappointed because of the delay. Everyone cheered and tried to get Carlos and the Cosmos to play some more when the session was over.

Carlos Garnet plays the tenor and soprano saxaphones. The Cosmos Nucleus are Neil Clark Bongos and Percussion, Byrom Bembum Drums, Cliff Carter Piano, Otis McClair Guitar, and Cecil McBee Jr. Bass Guitar. Carlos has played with Miles Davis and Norman Cahners before putting together the group. The group played tunes from their album Journey into Inlightenment and their soon to be released album Cosmos Nucleus. The groups next engagement will be at the Town Hall in New York City on the eighth of October 1976.

Grads urge faculty input

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

A motion recommending the Faculty Senate to reconsider elimination of student participation on the proposed Faculty Senate Extension Council, was approved last night by the Graduate Student Senate.

The creation of the Extension Council is presently scheduled for a Faculty Senate vote in October. The proposed Extension Council would serve as an umbrella group presiding over all public service functions of the University, and would include control over the Division of Continuing Education (DCE).

The Extension Council, as proposed by the Faculty Senate Rules Committee, would largely consist of faculty members with additional members from the present directors of the DCE and one alumnus.

Graduate senate President Michael Federow said that the creation of a governing body with control over academic matters, as the Extension Council would have, requires student representation.

The senate voted unanimously to urge the Faculty Senate to make provisions "ensuring the seating of at least two graduate and three undergraduate students" to the council.

Undergraduate Student Senate co-Presidents Jay Martus and Paul Cronin, addressed the senate on the Extension Council issue, and said they have learned the administration of the Fine Arts Center (FAC) is expected to be included under future Extension Council control if the measure is passed.

Martus told the senate if the Extension Council operated without student participation, the present "trend" of the FAC away from student input would be furthered.

Martus attributed the lessening student input into the FAC as a result of two different groups that schedule events.

The Fine Arts Council Series operates with student tax funds and requires student representation, and the Fine Arts Center Series operates on alumni donations in addition to other revenue sources. The two groups compete for scheduling time, said Martus.

As the FAC's reputation increases there could exist a worsening of schedule conflicts between the two groups, he said. Students would have to watch for the "subsequent impact on student groups which use the FAC", he added.

Graduate senate Vice-President Tim Austin told the senate, the undergraduate and graduate senate 'presidents have offered a joint motion to the Faculty Senate to set up a committee under the Extension Council which would include student representation.

The motion was tabled by the Faculty Senate, said Austin, who later added he considered the tabling motion an attempt to kill the senate president's motion.

The senate heard a report from Treasurer Don Fisher, who said the Finance Committee is exploring avenues to tax non-degree graduate students, to gain revenues for graduate programs.

"They use services that we fund, and for that reason I think some sort of tax on non-degree students is necessary," said Fisher.

Fisher's Finance Committee report included a decision by the committee to require groups which receive graduate senate funds to report back to the senate on how those funds were spent. The Finance Committee will take into consideration the return report and any additional requests from those groups, he added.

The Senate also passed a motion to require Senate meetings which fall on a public holiday to meet the following Wednesday.

New dean stresses interaction

Dean Whaley, of the College of Food and Natural Resources. (Staff photo by Mark Rubin)

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

"Deans tend to become some kind of thing without body or ideas, not people, but paper-shuffling beaurocrats," Ross S. Whaley said yesterday.

Whaley, the new dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, announced recently a series of monthly rap sessions designed to allow interaction between the dean and the students within the college.

The college includes the departments of forestry, home economics, landscape architecture, hotel and restaurant management, and the environmental sciences.

The college is specifically concerned with land use, home and nutrition, according to Whaley.

"With a university divided into departments as it is, people tend to miss points on social issues which fall into the cracks between the various departments. Within the college, we have students studying nutrition and others studying land use. We should be able to combine the two disciplines and come up with solutions for the environmental, aesthetic and social issues facing the world today," Whaley said.

"The issues facing us are constantly changing, for instance the problem of world food supply. Using the various disciplines within this college alone, we should be able to examine the problems of growing food, food preparation and delivery for consumption and the issues involved in land use to come up with possible solutions to these problems," said Whaley.

Whaley added "Students in four years can pick up skill and discipline and at the same time become involved with social issues. The students actually have a lot of possible lateral movement in regards to picking up courses in related disciplines."

Whaley would like to see more students try to "encompass several areas of study".

"I have, and I hate to say it, no great plans for revitalization, but that's the reason for the upcoming rap sessions with the students; to allow student interaction with the faculty and the administration of the college," he said.

Whaley is bothered that the faculty, administration, and the students each appear to be going in different directions.

"If the three groups could get together and work in concert, then everything else would fall into place, and instead of scrapping with each other over administrative problems, we could work together on solving important national and international issues," he added.

Whaley said he would like to see students, faculty, and administration concerned about the same issues outside in the world and not differing on problems within the college itself.

Manual keeps students aware

By GINI MANGAN
Collegian Staff

Everything from academics, communications and leisure, to politics is covered in the new publication, "If Only I Had Known" put out by the Non-Traditional Student Assembly (NTSA) and the Resource Network.

"If Only I Had Known" is a comprehensive manual of every resource on campus and is geared toward informing the growing population of older students of resources available to them.

Older students, according to the NTSA constitution, are those undergraduate students who have not entered the University directly from high school, and graduate students who are over the age of 25.

The publication is available to campus Recognized Student Organizations (RSO), the library, and other offices on campus that deal with large groups of students.

"Unfortunately," David Baillie of Counseling Assistance for Older Students (CAOS) said, "only 500 copies could be printed."

Baillie said that printing 30,000 copies would be difficult because of the updating the manual would need.

"Not updating the manual could be a hindrance to students on this campus," Baillie said.

Recently, CAOS hired two researchers to update and ensure the continuity of the manual.

NTSA sponsors CAOS and is associated with the Resource Network, whose function is to maintain communications between students and administration.

NTSA brings older students together to share their experiences, to plan social events, and to broaden the awareness of the non-traditionals of campus to what is happening on campus.

NTSA works to make faculty and administrative staff more receptive to the presence of older students in class and on campus.

"If Only I Had Known" was distributed last Friday to organizations on campus.

Hopefully, after reading the manual, more students will not be saying after graduating from UMass, "If only I had known."

Centers, concert funds appropriated

By ROSEMARY CONWAY

Funds were appropriated for four Central Area centers and a concert at the Central Area Government meeting last night.

After having been tabled since last Monday night's meeting, the budgets allotted to the Women's Center, Third World Center, Craft Shop, and Racism-Sexism Center were decided upon.

Three of the centers were given less money than they requested due to the area's policy of allotting only 50 per cent of its available monies to centers.

The Third World Center received $2500, the Women's Center $1850, the Racism-Sexism Center $1000, and the Craft Shop $3150.

A motion was carried to sponsor a reunion of Mama Milton's Jug Band Show. Wayne Burns represented the band in the motion. Burns requested $300 for the four-hour show which will tentatively be held in the Campus Center Auditorium on Wednesday, October 27th, with free admission.

Burns said the show, which was funded by Central last year, "Generally gets a very good turnout — and everyone has a really good time."

There was a proposal from Carolyn Ray of Butterfield to help fund her 1-credit colloquium, a workshop in Fabric Printing. Ray requested $300, half of which would pay 50 per cent of her salary and half for supplies to ease the burden on students, who must buy their own materials. This was tabled until next week.

The need for new sound equipment for Central was also brought up by Burns. He explained that no working equipment from former years was left due to abuse, negligence and theft.

Burns estimated the cost for the equipment at $500, but said he would try to locate within the coming week the best used materials he could for the lowest price to Central.

Burns also stressed the need for a system by which borrowers would agree to responsibility during their use of the equipment.

President Janice Perry asked council members to inform their dorms of the need for people to serve on an academic affairs committee which would evaluate colloquiums to be offered next semester.

There was also discussion of an Activities Coordinator for the area. "This would help show people what exactly is being done with their money," Perry said.

Before adjournment, Andrew Topalian and Mark Zinan were elected co-vice-presidents for the government. They ran unopposed.

A male student was forced to the ground and robbed of his wallet on the west side roadway of Munson Annex on Saturday evening. The wallet contained about $2 in cash and total value involved was about $15. The student could not give a good description of the assailant because it was dark.

Auto Recovery

A 1976 stolen Cadillac valued at $12,500, was recovered by University police on Saturday. The vehicle, a rental car from New York City, was found in lot 31 behind the Baptist Church on N. Pleasant St. The car was stolen in Mamaroneck, New York and the owner was notified of its recovery.

A 1970 Pontiac received $10 in damages Saturday when the FM radio antennae was broken off in lot 22.

A 1976 Chevrolet parked on level 2 of the Campus Center garage received approximately $100 in damages when its left rear quarter panel was struck on Friday.

A battery, valued at $35 was stolen from a 1967 Pontiac in lot 49 on Friday.

Protective Custody

Two persons were placed into protective custody in Coolidge Tower early Sunday morning after police received a complaint by a student security guard. The guard requested the individuals to leave and they became argumentative.

A 10-speed bicycle, valued at $80 was stolen from Brett House between 9:30 Friday night and 9 Saturday morning.

An attempt to enter Room 3 in Prince House by breaking the window screen was reported to police on Saturday. Nothing was missing from the room and it is not known if entry was gained.

Fire

A fire in room 126 of Van Meter North incurred approximately $75 in damages on Saturday. The fire was reportedly caused by two children playing with matches. The head of residence's husband extinguished the fire before the arrival of the fire department.

His grasp of finances...

Brian McNamara of Kennedy Tower displays the technique that has him knocking on Guinness' door. (Staff photo by Bob Salvucci)

...earns him world record

By NOREEN PRINCIPE
Collegian Staff

By balancing $22 worth of half-dollars on the back of his bent arm, flipping the pile in the air and catching all of the coins, a UMass freshman from Kennedy Tower has established a new world record.

Brian M. McNamara, 17, from North Attleboro, Mass. has broken the Guinness Book world record of "coin snatching", and wishes to have his record of balancing and catching 44 coins printed in the 1977 edition of the Guinness Book of World Records.

"People don't do this kind of thing just for entertainment," he said. McNamara's greatest fear is that someone will break his record in the meantime.

The previous record of coin snatching listed under "stunts" in the Guinness Book is 39 by Chris Redford at the Cardwell Arms, Adlington, England on September 26, 1973, according to the 1976 publication.

"It's been three years. I can't understand why anyone else hasn't broken his record," McNamara said.

McNamara caught the 44 coins for the first time last weekend and performed his feat at the Collegian office by catching all 44 on his first try. Coin count was verified by Collegian photographer Bob Salvucci.

McNamara, who "snatched" the coins in a kneeling position "because they don't go as far if you miss," said he has tried 46 "but hasn't come close."

"I have room to improve. I don't want to think of myself as being at the peak of my profession at 17."

McNamara has been snatching coins "on and off for about six months."

"I saw a friend do it with a few coins and thought it was absolutely incredible that someone could do this. I started with pennies," he said.

McNamara was unaware that a record had been established when he first started. When he discovered there was a record, he began practicing with half-dollars to try and beat the existing record.

The Guinness Book of Records officially describes coin snatching as "coins caught by the same hand after being flipped from a pile balanced on the back of the forearm."

In order to have one's record cited in the book, a person must submit proof in the form of a newspaper article or television coverage and a signed document of authenticity by an adult of good standing in the record-holder's community.

McNamara, along with the Collegian article, will submit a verification by Raymond G. Lallier, a notary public in North Attleboro, to the Guinness book.

When asked why he actually snatched coins, McNamara, an English major said "Basically to get into the Guinness Book of Records. Besides it's the only thing I can do. Out of four billion people in the world, nobody has caught more coins than I have."

There are plenty of weird records in the Guinness book (some of them being the greatest achievement in hair splitting, longest bellydance and largest number of graves dug) and plenty that could be broken, McNamara said.

"I got the easy one," he added.

ISC key in Washington Senate race

Undergraduate Student Senate candidates from George Washington Lower are winding up their campaign for today's election, according to the candidates Joseph Keene and Donald Bishop.

An important factor in the senate elections is the Independent Student Coalition (ISC). Lack of student involvement in the senate is what spurred the formation of the ISC, Stephen Goldberg, Student Senator said. Thirty to forty candidates are expected to run under the banner of the ISC, and a major focus of the ISC is to have full knowledge of where the $1.1 million Student Activity Tax Fund is spent.

Case continued for three charged in Hadley robbery

By KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

The probable cause hearing of Leon Thomas, Keith Dixson and Mark Wimbish, three UMass students charged with robbing the Rt. 9 Cumberland Farms Store in Hadley, Sept. 11 was continued from last Friday in Northampton District Court to 9 a.m. October 6.

The continuance was granted because of the absence of Arthur Serota, attorney for Mark Wimbish.

"It was on a Federal Jury case," Serota said, when contacted by the Collegian last night.

All three students were charged with unarmed robbery, assault and battery, and larceny over $100.

UMass police were involved in the apprehension of Wimbish, Dixson and Thomas.

"It's a state police case, we only assisted in the stop," said Robert Joyce, Captain of the Department of Public Safety at UMass.

Serota said if "probable cause" is found in this case that it will move on to the Grand Jury.

"The District Court has no jurisdiction to decide the case," he added.

If probable cause is not found, Serota said, the district attorney can still bring the case before a Grand Jury.

"We're the ones who benefit from the hearing though," Serota said.

"We get a chance to cross examine witnesses and look at the evidence," he added.

Serota represented Craeman Gethers in June of 1975 for the robbery of the Rt. 9 McDonald's restaurant.

"The University should support those people who are truly innocent," Serota said.

Mass PIRG report warns of higher phone rates

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

Telephone bills in Massachusetts will continue to escalate if effective government regulations are not enforced in the near future, according to a report released today by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG).

The twelve-month study claims consumers are paying for the expansion and competitive pricing policies of the New England Telephone Company (NET) which has increased its rates over $360 million since 1970.

"People must realize that going to Boston or Springfield twice a year to complain about rising phone bills will do absolutely nothing," said Jonathan Z. Souweine, Mass PIRG staff attorney.

"We need an ongoing, watchdog organization, funded and directed by the consumer, to end excessive rate hikes."

The 41-page report, titled "Please Deposit Another Million," states the Department of Public Utilities (DPU) as the government agency controlling NET. It lists as "ludicrously inadequate" the seven staff members who regulate all the telephone, electric, gas and transportation utilities in the state.

"The DPU is supposed to be our protector, but it's just not equipped to provide the regulations the consumer needs and deserves," said Souveine.

The report recommends the DPU hire a larger staff and suggests the establishment of a Telephone Consumer Action Group. This group would be funded by voluntary contributions by using the telephone billing system as a collection mechanism. The group is intended to be "an active voice for consumers."

These findings cite NET as a subsidiary of the American Telegraph and Telephone Company (AT&T), the largest private corporation in the United States. It supplies consumers with "a virtually indispensable service" and has no competitors.

The Mass PIRG report said NET alone operates in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine and it has over 5,886,000 telephones in service.

The cost of residential phone installation has risen since 1969 from $5 to $32.50 the report said, sharply contrasting a minimal increase in NET's "fastest growing" competitive areas, such as data transmission.

AT&T has been expanding at "an astronomical rate" according to the report.

In order for AT&T to continue expanding and fending off competition, it attempts to keep the prices of competitive products extremely low the source said. It must raise payments from NET and other subsidiaries to keep revenues steady, and accordingly consumer prices increase.

Outside competition is challenging AT&T with extremely advanced communication equipment for several major businesses and corporations, the study reported. Consumer prices are raised even higher so AT&T can keep up with innovative research and new developments on a large scale level.

Citing the phone company as a "natural monopoly," the Mass PIRG report said competitive efforts to duplicate these facilities on the consumer level would be costly and wasteful.

"We need the efficiencies of a single utility," said Souweine. "But it must be controlled and directed by a consumer advocacy organization."

Mass PIRG is a non-profit student group, inspired by consumer-advocate Ralph Nader, and devoted to issues of public concern.

Ford and Carter

Campaigns buzz with speeches

MIAMI [AP] — President Ford said yesterday that a crusade against crime, including a drive to jail career criminals and "violent and street-wise" youthful offenders, would keynote the first 100 days of a new term if he wins the election.

Ford said the voters should and will check their ballots on Nov. 2 "and identify those candidates who have demonstrated indifference or permissiveness toward crime."

Ford's appearance here closed out his three-day campaign swing through Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter's home territory, the Deep South, and he was to return to Washington later on Monday.

In a stern law-and-order speech to more than 2,000 policemen, Ford accused Congress of inaction on his own crime-fighting proposals and said:

"I serve notice today that a top priority of the first 100 days, beginning with Inauguration Day for the Ford administration next January, will be the rallying of America behind federal anticrime legislation."

Ford's speech to the International Association of Chiefs of Police was in tune with the conservative line he has espoused during the three days of campaigning in Southern states.

The President skipped one issue he had pressed in four Sunday appearances along the Mississippi Gulf Coast, where he repeatedly declared his opposition to federal gun registration. He said all law-abiding citizens should have the right to keep firearms for their own protection and should not be required to register guns if they want to go hunting.

Meanwhile Jimmy Carter said yesterday that President Ford's economic policies placed a record 2.5 million Americans below the official poverty line last year and have created a new class of poor to whom the American dream has been denied.

Campaigning by boat in Portland's deepwater harbor and with speeches, rallies and impromptu news conferences, the Democratic candidate pledged that if elected president, he would never increase taxes on Americans who work for a living, or whose major source of income comes from wages and salaries rather than interest, dividends and capital gains.

It was an assertion that Carter has made repeatedly in efforts to clarify statements he made concerning taxes in an Associated Press interview more than a week ago.

In that interview he indicated he would seek to raise taxes for everyone above the mean or median income. But when reminded that the median was somewhere around $12,000, he said he could not fix a level at which an increase would be sought.

Carter's campaign in this Pacific Northwest city was busy and varied.

NAACP works to raise bond money by Friday

NEW YORK [AP] — Failure by the NAACP to raise $1.6 million by the end of the week for bond in a Mississippi court case would have "the effect of bankruptcy" for the civil rights organization, an official said yesterday.

A hurry-up effort by the NAACP to raise the bond money is still far short of the goal, and Nathaniel Jones, chief counsel for the organization, said officials are "hoping for some development" in the courts that would give them more time.

White merchants in Port Gibson, Miss., won a $1.2 million judgment against the NAACP last week, and state law requires 125 per cent bond — $1.6 million in this case — for appeal. The NAACP must post it by Friday.

NAACP spokesmen said the organization has raised $750,000, some of it in pledges. William Penn, the organization's director of branches, said the pledges had to be turned into hard cash to pay the bond.

"We're making progress, but we haven't reached our goal so far," Penn said. "We're pushing hard."

Atlanta's Mayor Maynard Jackson stood hat-in-hand on the sidewalk last Friday to dramatize the "last hours" struggle by black officials in his city to save the NAACP. There was a marathon radio campaign in Oakland, Calif., and an all-night telethon in Detroit.

As an alternative to raising the money, Jones said, the NAACP asked Chancery Court Judge George Haynes in Mississippi to reduce or waive the bond, order a new trial or reduce the damage award. "Once he rules, we're prepared to go into state court or the U.S. Supreme Court to take whatever action we can," he said.

Keene states in his platform there are no specific hot issues in the campaign. A senior political science major, Keene is basing his campaign on the goals of the ISC. These goals are student-senator participation and interaction.

By representing his dorm through various communications, Keene hopes to unite the senate pro-union and anti-union factions in order to get the senate moving again.
